Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, it is hardly worth while, perhaps, to have this commotion as a prelude to the very few remarks which I desire to submit upon the amendment which provides for preserving the treaty with the Sandwich Islands. What I wish to say, however, is that I am in favor of the clause as it stands in the amendment. I do not believe that there should be a duty imposed upon sugar, but if a duty is imposed upon it I believe, notwithstanding the speech of the Senator from South Dakota, that we should adhere to the treaty made on the 30th of January, 1875. When we had a duty upon sugar we made a treaty with Hawaii by which we exempted her from the operation of that duty.

We agreed in fact that sugar from Hawaii should come into the United States free of duty. We did that in order to secure the good will of those islands, and it was a wise treaty. Notwithstanding the speech of the Senator who has just taken his seat, I believe that there is nothing which the United States can not afford to do in order to maintain its influence and its ascendency in those islands. We made that agreement. It is true that in the making of it, as I have had occasion to say during the debate on this bill, we virtually made a donation to the Sandwich Islands of between three and four million dollars annually.

Although we made that treaty and were bound to fulfill it, yet we found ourselves in 1890 in a condition to honorably stop this contribution to the Sandwich Islands. We had not bound ourselves to continue a duty upon sugar for the purpose of giving to Hawaii an exemption from that duty, and when in the course of wise legislation we abolished the duty upon sugar, there came to an end this tribute which the United States was paying to the Hawaiian Islands. Having terminated that tribute, having avoided the donation by abolishing the duty upon sugar and giving free sugar to our own citizens, it is, in my judgment, a most unwise action to restore a duty upon sugar.

I think that one of the most foolish things that are contained in this bill, which is full of folly, is the restoration of the duty upon sugar, and one of the most prominent acts of folly in the bill is the fact that when we restore the duty on sugar we are obliged in honor and in good faith to observe the treaty with Hawaii and to exempt all sugar coming from those islands to this country from a duty which we decide here and now to impose upon sugar coming from all other nations.

I think it would be a great deal better to annex the Sandwich Islands, and I wish the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] and all Senators upon the other side of the Chamber could agree with me in these two propositions: First, that we shall have free sugar for this country, and next that we shall take the Sandwich Islands to be a part of our continental system. But if are not prepared now to annex the Sandwich Islands, it is certainly the height of folly to put a duty upon sugar when as a result of that duty we are obliged to adhere to the treaty of January 30, 1875, and to admit from the Sandwich Islands these millions of dollars' worth of sugar free of duty.

While I believe that good faith requires that we shall observe the treaty, while I shall vote in favor of the amendment of the committee, I think it is the height of folly to get ourselves into this position where, by imposing a duty upon sugar which we ought not to impose, we are compelled to again contribute to Hawaii the benefits which she derived from this discrimination, and which, by the wise act of 1890, we had stopped and destroyed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire only to utter one sentence. I am embarrassed in this matter by the declaration of Mr. Secretary Bayard. I supposed that this treaty granted to us this right in perpetuam, that it was ratified with that understanding; but the Secretary of State assured the representative of that small Government that it did not; that the United States understood its right to Pearl Harbor expired with the treaty itself.

Whatever may be the constitutional effect, under our Constitution, of such a declaration by our Secretary of State, it was made; it was made to a weak, humble nation, and being made, it puts us in a very awkward position to have to fall back on constitutional limitations of authority of our different public officers. Therefore in a question of continuing this arrangement with Hawaii, even if it were debatable on one side or the other, I am decided in my vote by the recollection of what Mr. Bayard said.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I regret to occupy the time of the Senate at this late hour, but before voting on the pending amendment I desire to state my position in regard to it.

The question of our commercial relations with the Sandwich Islands is not affected at all by the character of the people who occupy those islands. It is immaterial whether they are mainly Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese and foreigners, as they are, and that but a very small number of them are of American origin, or whether the Government is a monarchy, an aristocracy, or a republic.

We do not deal with nations commercially on account of the character of their people or their governments. Reciprocity is a trade between two nations, and usually both of them expect to get the best of the bargain, or they would not enter into the agreement. My own opinion is that the benefits supposed to be derived by the United States from our reciprocity treaty with the Sandwich Islands are mainly sentimental and are largely imaginary.

I have not examined the figures recently, but it has been stated on this floor, I believe to-day, that we have remitted in duties to the Sandwish Islands under this treaty over $55,000,000. The amount of duties remitted on sugar and rice, which are the principal products from the islands imported to this country, is greater than the value of all the exports from the United States to those islands, if I recollect correctly the value of our exports so far as Pearl Harbor is concerned, there was contained in the treaty of 1884 an absolute, unconditional cession of that harbor to the United States. It is preposterous to suppose that the grant of that harbor to the United States was to terminate with the termination of the treaty and that we were to pay $5,000,000 annually, more or less, for the privilege of occupying a harbor which everyone supposed would take hundreds of thousands of dollars to improve, and must surrender our rights there when the treaty terminated.

Nothing could have been plainer than that the United States received under the treaty an absolute cession of the harbor, and the actual consideration which could be claimed by the Hawaiian Government was the continuance of the treaty for seven years, if we then choose to abrogate it by a notice of twelve months. The McKinley act was no abrogation of the treaty. We did not stipulate with the Hawaiian Government that we would not put sugar on the free list. We stipulated with Hawaii that sugar should be imported into the United States from Hawaii free of duty.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does not the Senator from Oregon agree that if later we again put a duty upon sugar we are bound to observe the treaty?

Mr. DOLPH. I am coming to that in a moment. The amendment of the Senator from South Dakota proposes that the treaty shall continue for twelve months. He proposes substantially now that Congress shall give the Hawaiian Government notice of the termination of the treaty. The treaty continued for nearly six years before the McKinley law was passed. It was proclaimed in 1884, and the McKinley law went into effect in October, 1890. So the treaty had continued until within about fifteen months of the time that it was to expire by its terms if notice had been given of its termination.

The amendment now proposed is to continue the treaty or to give Hawaii the benefit of a remission of duties upon sugar for another twelve months. I do not think there would be any great cause of complaint on the part of the Hawaiian Government if we were to adopt the amendment and virtually terminate the treaty and give Hawaii notice that it was to terminate at the end of twelve months.

Now, I entirely disagree with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] in regard to the importance of the Sandwich Islands.

I consider them of great importance to us commercially, as they are in the line of the commerce from our coast to Australia, to China and Japan. Their commercial importance will be increased if the Nicaraguan Canal is constructed. They are also important to us for naval purposes, for purposes of defense; so important to us that we announced years ago, and we have reannounced by a resolution of the Senate recently, that we will permit no foreign country to interfere with or take possession of the islands.

The islands have been offered to us. The people of Hawaii seek annexation to the United States, and I think it is but a question of time when they will become a part of the United States. I am in favor of annexation at the earliest possible moment. We are talking about the value of Pearl Harbor. The whole islands, with every harbor and all their resources, are freely offered to us by the Hawaiian Government and the Hawaiian people.

But, as I have said, all these things do not affect the question of our commercial relations. We have paid in the remission of duties on sugar for Pear Harbor fifty times; and I do not think it wise for this Government to go on year after year remitting $5,000,000 in duties more or less to the people of Hawaii. It has not benefited the masses of the people in Hawaii. It has benefited but a few people. The sugar plantations in Hawaii are to-day owned by a very few people and a very few corporations.

I think I presented a list of them here in a speech I made in the Senate immediatety after we received the news of the revolution in Hawaii. The whole benefit of the remission of over $55,000,000 by this Government has accrued to a few sugar planters and a few sugar importers. Claus Spreckles and his associates in San Francisco are the only ones who have been benefited. The constituents of my friend from California [Mr. PERKINS], who made such an able speech on this question a few minutes ago, with the exception of these few wealthy men, have not been benefited a particle.

There is not a citizen in my State who has ever received a pound of sugar one-hundredth of one cent cheaper on account of the remission of duties to these people. The whole profits have gone to the sugar planters and the sugar importers, who have monopolized the business and controlled prices.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. If the Senator will review the report of our consul at the islands he will find a page giving a list of some one hundred and more prominent plantations, all owned by American citizens.

Mr. DOLPH. That is what I was saying. We do not want to remit $5,000,000 annually for the benefit of a hundred American citizens, even if there are a hundred engaged in the plantation business. I am talking about the masses of the people. I am talking about the consumers of the country, who have to pay taxes to make up the revenue we lose by this remission of duties on Hawaiian products, and I undertake to say that sugar has never been any cheaper on the Pacific coast by reason of the remission of duties.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. My colleague refers to the benefit resulting from the treaty. Does he not agree with me that one effect of the adoption of the treaty has been to prevent, as I certainly believe it did prevent, the islands from going under the control of Great Britain? If that is the case, we have received ample benefit.

Mr. DOLPH. If that were so, while it would be a great consideration to pay for the benefit, I should not undertake to say that it was too great, because I think the loss, the calamity to this country by suffering the islands to pass under the control of Great Britain or any other foreign country would be almost irreparable. But I do not believe it has had that effect. Fifty years ago our Secretary of State and our Government announced to the world that we should not permit foreign countries to interfere with the Sandwich Islands.

Forty years ago, when those islands had been seized by a British admiral, this country remonstrated with Great Britain, and Great Britain made haste to disavow the action of its naval officer and restore the native government. I do not believe that the treaty was necessary for that purpose. I do not suppose that when the orginal treaty was negotiated anyone knew how great a development of the sugar industry would take place there. I do not suppose anyone anticipated that within a few years we should be remitting $5,000,000 in duties annually.

I do not suppose anyone made any careful calculation as to the amount of the products that we would export to that country. I think the amount of the sugar production of the Sandwich Islands imported into the United States has exceeded and that our exports to that country have been greatly less than was anticipated by those who entered into the treaty.

This treaty was renewed in 1884, shortly after I came into the Senate. I was in great doubt about it, and I finally consented to the treaty, although I do not recollect now how I voted upon it, mainly on account of the amendment made in the Senate by which Pearl Harbor was conceded to us. I think that Secretary Bayard was out of place when he gave any opinion whatever to the minister of Hawaii in regard to the effect of the treaty.

It was not his duty to give an opinion upon the treaty. The treaty had been negotiated by the President of the United States and sent to the Senate and here amended, and the only thing to be done was to have ratifications exchanged and the treaty proclaimed. I think it was unseemly for a Secretary of State to undertake to give an opinion to the minister of the government with which the treaty was made, as to the effect of an amendment the Senate had put upon the treaty. I do not think we are under any legal or moral obligations to construe the treaty in the manner in which it was construed by Secretary Bayard.

Everybody who deals with a government must deal with it with reference to its constitution and laws, and the minister of the Hawaiian Government knew perfectly well how treaties were negotiated and what was necessary to make a treaty in the United States. He knew perfectly well that Secretary Bayard's opinion was worthless in regard to it, and if it was procured by him for any purpose it was for the purpose of deceiving the people in Hawaii. It was because he desired that the treaty should be ratified by both governments, and his overanxiety led him to secure an opinion from Secretary Bayard for the purpose of deceiving his own country.

I repeat what I said a few minutes ago, that the question as to what a treaty means is to be determined as any other question of law is to be determined. Otherwise the power to make treaties would be divested from the President and the Senate, and the Secretary of State, by giving his opinion as to what the treaty meant, could bind the United States and make a new treaty, and without referring it again to the Senate, could fritter away all that was attempted to be gained by the Senate by amendments.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to ask the Senator whether the establishment of a sister republic in the Pacific Ocean is a small thing in his eyes?

Mr. DOLPH. No, it is not a small thing. I wish to say that I was pleased when the revolution in Hawaii took place, and I looked for it long before. I had followed the course of events in the Hawaiian Islands, and I had reason to believe that this Government and the people of this country looked forward to the time when Hawaii would knock at our doors for admission into the Union and that they were ready to admit her. Therefore I hailed the revolution in Hawaii with joy, and I took occasion, long before the commissioners appointed by that government to come here and treat with the United States did come, and as soon after the news of the revolution reached us as I could get the floor in the Senate to address the Senate and reach the country so far as I could concerning the propriety and desirability of annexing Hawaii.

Mr. KYLE. Then, one thing further. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks it right for us as the stronger nation, they being the colony, having gone off from the mother country, to throw one stone in their way, commercially or otherwise?

Mr. DOLPH. No. I should treat them with the utmost consideration. I was in favor of the resolution that was at last adopted here in the Senate in regard to affairs in Hawaii. I was in favor of annexation. I was in favor of the ratification of the treaty they sent us for the annexation of the islands.

Mr. KYLE. I know the Senator was, and I believe he is fair in regard to this question. I wish to draw this one parallel. At the time we were in the throes of revolution in 1776, if France had occupied a different position and had thrown stones in our way perhaps we to-day should not have had a Republic. I believe it was through her goodness of heart to us in many ways that we have a Republic to-day, and it is our duty with Hawaii in their struggle to encourage them in every way we can.

Mr. DOLPH. That is true; but the Senator evades the question that is before the Senate. I stated some time since that the supposed benefits of this treaty were largely of a sentimental character, and that the supposed reason for such treaty was largely imaginary. This Government has not, at least not through any action of Congress, thrown any stone in the way of the Hawaiian Government and in the way of the establishment of a republic there.

There is no hostility on the part of this Government to the Hawaiian Government; but that is not the question. The question here is whether we shall continue a commercial bargain with that country by which we are $5,000,000, loser annually, and the question should be determined not by any question as to who these people are, where they went from, what kind of a government they have, or what kind of a government they will have in the future. It is a business transaction. We are continuing an agreement with these people by which we are annually the loser by many million dollars.

When the amendment was first offered my impression was that I should vote for it, that I should regard it simply as a declaration to the people of Hawaii that at the end of twelve months the treaty should be discontinued. If adopted, it would give them the benefit of the remission of the duties on sugar for another year, which would substantially make up the seven years, the period of the last treaty. I deny that the McKinley law was any infringement whatever of the treaty.

But the argument of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has convinced me that probably it would be better to let the proposed amendment stand, let the treaty stand, and let the question as to whether notice shall be given of termination of the treaty be considered as a separate measure by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

While I do not believe that the treaty should be continued, while I believe it is a one-sided affair, while I believe we lose by it annually several million dollars, and that we gain by it nothing in a commercial way to compensate us for what we surrender; while I should be glad to immediately annex the Sandwich Islands and make them part of the United States and give them all the benefits and advantages of our Government, I shall, when there is a proper opportunity, by a measure proposed for that purpose, which has received the consideration of the proper committee, certainly vote to discontinue the treaty. But, as I said, I have quite reluctantly come to the conclusion that I will follow the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, and not vote for the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRICE. I am paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. PASCO (after having voted in the negative). I have been requested to pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who has been called from the Chamber, and therefore I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 57; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Allen,	George,	Irby,	Pettigrew,
Blanchard,	Hansbrough,	Manderson,	Power.
Caffery,	Hill,	Mills,

NAYS—57.

Aldrich,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Ransom,
Allison,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Roach,
Bate,	Gordon,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Martin,	Squire,
Chandler,	Gray,	Mitchell, Oregon	Stewart,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Mitchell, Wis.	Teller,
Coke,	Hawley,	Morgan,	Turpie,

NOT VOTING—17.

Berry,	Cameron,	Pasco,	Wilson,
Brice,	Carey,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Butler,	Hale,	Sherman,
Call,	McPherson,	Smith,
Camden,	Morrill,	Vest,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I now move to amend on page 41, by striking out from the word "Provided," in line 15, down to and including the word "same," in line 22; so that it will leave the treaty, if it is in force, still in force, without being reënacted. This provision is unnecessary if the treaty is still in force; and I do not believe we are ready by positive enactment to continue it in force.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "rates," in line 15, on page 41, it is proposed to strike out:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to abrogate or in any manner impair or affect the provisions of the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States and the King of the Hawaiian Islands on the 30th day of January, 1875, or the provisions of any act of Congress heretofore passed for the execution of the same.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Before I moved to strike those words out and to insert a provision abrogating the treaty. Now, I move to strike out this proviso: and if the treaty is still in force, it is in force, and the Administration has the power to give the year's notice and save the people of this country the $4,000,000 which will be lost if this treaty is continued.

I did not expect the treaty would be abrogated. I did not suppose the Senate would abrogate it. If they had abrogated it they would have made an invidious exception: they would have struck a blow at one trust, which would have been unfair, for all the others are thoroughly taken care of in this bill. Without any fear or hesitation whatever, the Senate seem determined to protect every trust which has been organized in the past, and seem determined to vote the money of the people into the hands of corporations, home or foreign.

This treaty is in the direct interest of the sugar trust in this country, which has already received enough of the result of the hard toil of our people. It is simply adding $4,000,000 more to their wealth; it is simply increasing their power to take from the unwilling people of this country their earnings. Therefore I hope the Senate will strike out this provision and leave the responsibility upon the Administration as to whether it will give the notice or not that the treaty shall cease.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 12, nays 54; as follows:

YEAS—12.

Aldrich,	Caffery,	Hansbrough,	Mills,
Allen,	Cullom,	Irby,	Pettigrew,
Blanchard,	George,	Manderson,	Power.

NAYS—54.

Camden,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer what I send to the desk as a substitute for paragraph 182½.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator give way to me to allow me to offer an amendment to paragraph 182?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to come in at the end of paragraph 182.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the amendment be printed and lie over until to-morrow morning, so that we may see what it is.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to that.

Mr. PLATT. Let the amendment be now read.

Mr. HILL. We have passed paragraph 182, and we are now engaged in perfecting paragraph 182½, and I think we ought to go through with paragraph 182½ before we return to paragraph 182, which we can go to afterwards.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to the amendment being printed and lying over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of paragraph 182 it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That the bounty provided in said act shall stand unrepealed until January 1, 1905, to the extent that there shall be paid to the producer of sugar from beets, sorghum, or sugar cane grown in the United States in the year 1894, or from maple sap produced in the United States during the year 1894, under license for 1894, and subject to the limitations now imposed by law on all sugars testing not less than 90° by the polariscope, nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound, and upon such sugar testing less than 90° by the polariscope and not less than 80°, eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. HILL. That will lead to debate, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let the amendmdnt be printed and lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie over.

Mr. ALLEN. I now ask that the amendment which I sent to the desk may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 182½, and in lieu thereof to insert:

All sugars, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above 80°, shall pay a duty of 1 cent per pound, and for every additional degree or fraction of a degree above 80° and not above 90° shown by the polariscope test, shall pay one one-hundredth of a cent per pound additional, and molasses testing not above 56° by the polariscope shall pay a duty of 2 cents per gallon, and molasses testing above 56° shall pay a duty of 4 cents per gallon: Provided, That the provisions of the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States of America and the King of the Hawaiian Islands on the 30th day of January, 1875, as well as the provisions of any act of Congress heretofore passed for the execution of the same be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided, also, That for the year 1894 manufacturers of sugar from beets, cane, or sorghum grown in the United States shall be paid a bounty of one and sixty-one hundredths of a cent per pound and no more.

Mr. ALLEN. This amendment eliminates, as I drew it, every interest that the sugar trust can have in this bill. The bounty clause which I offer gives to the producers of domestic sugar one and sixty-one hundredths of a cent per pound for their sugar of the crop of 1894.

Mr. HILL. Not a bounty, but a duty.

Mr. ALLEN. This amendment eliminated every objectionable feature there is in this schedule. It looks to the levying of a tax upon sugar for purely revenue purposes, and not for any other purpose.

I am most heartily in accord with the remarks made a few moments ago by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], to the effect that every trust in the United States of any consequence seems practically to be cared for in this bill; and no trust has fastened itself deeper and more securely upon the Senate in this bill than the sugar trust, whose interest I seek to eliminate by the substitute.

Mr. KYLE. I call for a division so far as the provision is concerned relating to the abrogation of the treaty.

Mr. MANDERSON. This amendment proposes to give a specific duty upon sugar, and in that respect it is certainly a very commendable and desirable amendment. If a bounty can not be obtained, this method of duty is certainly better than any other. I regret that my colleague does not go as far as I think he should in the protection of this industry. I understand him to say that his amendment is designed for revenue, not having in it any element of protection. In that respect, it does not commend itself to me, yet I feel inclined to vote for it as being rid of some of the objectionable features of the present schedule.

I suggest to him, however, in view of the very emphatic vote by which the Senate refused to abrogate the Hawaiian treaty, that he had better divide the question, so that there may be a vote on the subject of the specific duty and the equivalent bounty to be paid on the sugar contracts for this year, and that a separate vote be taken on that part of his amendment which abrogates the treaty. I think by that method that portion of his amendment which refers to duty and to the eqvivalent bounty for this year will probably receive far more votes than it would if connected with the Hawaiian treaty abrogation.

I make that suggestion to my colleague, and I hope he will make that division.

Mr. ALLEN. I am perfectly willing that the substitute may be divided, so that the first proposition in it may be first voted upon.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that the motion to strike out and insert under our rules is not divisible. I think we can dispose of the proposition if we can get a vote on it.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not think this is a motion to strike out and insert within the meaning of the provision of the rules, because, as I understand my colleague, he does not propose to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. ALDRICH. He does move to strike out the entire paragraph.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer the amendment to paragraph 182½, to strike out the entire paragraph and insert the substitute in lieu of it.

Mr. MANDERSON. If that be the case I think the amendment is divisible.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska and of the Senate to the fact that, while I have understood the Senator from Nebraska to object to the present bounty to the producers of sugar, he proposes here to substantially give them a protection to 2.6 cents per pound.

The present bounty, as I understand, is 2 cents a pound, and he proposes to give the producers of sugar for 1894 1.6 cents per pound; so they will have the protection of the duty on sugar, which amounts to another cent, and 40 per cent of the value of the sugar produced; so that virtually 2.6 cents per pound is to be given to the producers of sugar in 1894.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not understand the substitute I offered means anything of the kind. I am not, however, averse to having the question divided, so that the vote shall be first taken upon the first branch of the amendment, or upon the three different propositions embraced in it.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senate has already by a vote determined that the duty upon sugar shall take effect when this bill is passed. That duty is 40 per cent ad valorem. That amounts, at the least calculation I suppose, to 1 cent a pound. So the producers of sugar the present year will be protected to the amount of 1 cent a pound by the duty, and, in addition to that, the Senator from Nebraska proposes to give them 1.6 cents per pound, making their total protection 2.6 cents, as against the bounty of 2 cents paid under the existing law.

Mr. ALLEN. Under the present law they have 2.60—2 cents bounty, and sixty-hundredths of a cent on refined sugars.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The vote will be taken upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, except that portion which relates to the abrogation of the Hawaiian treaty.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and withhold my vote, as I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. WHITE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], but I have transferred that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. PASCO. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 2, nays 59; as follows:

YEAS—2.

Allen.		Kyle.

NAYS—59.

Aldrich,	Faulkner,	Jarvis,	Pettigrew,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Jones, Ark.	Platt,
Bate,	George,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Lodge,	Quay,

Brice,	Hansbrough,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Butler,	Jones, Nev.	Power,	White,
Call,	McPherson,	Proctor,	Wilson,
Cameron,	Manderson,	Sherman,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The second clause of the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That the provisions of the treaty of commercial reciprocity concluded between the United States of America and the King of the Hawaiian Island, on the 30th day of January, 1875, as well as the provisions of any act of Congress heretofore passed for the execution of the same, be, and the same are hereby, repealed: Provided also, That for the year 1894 manufacturers of sugar from beets, cane, or sorghum grown in the United States, shall be paid a bounty of $1\frac{3}{16}$ of a cent per pound and no more.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the branch of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, which has just been read.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEFFER. I now move to strike out all the parts of the section providing for a duty on sugar. Without specifying all of the different lines, the object of the amendment is to present the subject of free sugar.

In paragraph 182½ I move to strike out the first line. Then, beginning on line 4, page 41, after the word "molasses," I move to strike out all the rest of line 4, and going on down to and including the word "rates," in line 15, then, beginning in line 22, at the word "That," and continuing to the end of the paragraph, leaving stand lines 2, 3, and 4, to the word "molasses," and insert the words "shall be admitted free of duty;" so that my amendment will read, after striking out all I have designated:

All sugars and all tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice or of beet juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, shall be admitted free of duty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HILL. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], but a few moments ago the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] left the Chamber, saying he had arranged a pair with the Senator from Texas. Therefore I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MILLS. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. BRICE. I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. McPHERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PASCO. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Power,
Allen,	Gallinger,	Kyle,	Proctor,
Allison,	Hale,	Lodge,	Shoup,
Carey,	Hansbrough,	McMillan,	Squire,

NOT VOTING—13.

Berry,	Frye,	Pasco,	Wolcott.
Brice,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Butler,	Mills.	Stewart,
Cameron,	Morrill,	Wilson,

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PASCO. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—38.

Allen.	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Bate,	George,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Martin,	Turpie,

NOT VOTING—13.

Berry,	Frye,	Pasco,	Wolcott.
Brice,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Butler,	Mills,	Stewart,
Cameron,	Morrill,	Wilson.

So the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 183, line 5, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, before the words "per centum," struck out "thirty" and inserted "thirty-five," and after the words "ad valorem," in line 7, inserted "sacharine, 25 per cent ad valorem."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, in paragraph 191, line 6, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "twenty-five" before the words "per cent," and inserted "thirty;" and in line 8, before the words "per cent," struck out "thirty-five" and inserted "forty;" so as to read:

191. Barley, and barley, pearled, patent, or hulled, 30 per cent ad valorem; barley malt, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. POWER. I move an amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montata to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 191, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "30 per cent ad valorem" and insert "20 cents per bushel;" and in line 8, to strike out "40 per cent ad valorem" and insert "30 cents per bushel."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. POWER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRICE. I have transferred my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Power,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Proctor,
Carey,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Quay,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Patton,	Shoup,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Squire,
Davis,	Higgins,	Perkins,	Teller,
Dixon,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Washburn.
Dolph,	Lodge,	Platt,

NAYS—37.

Bate,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Smith,
Blackburn,	George,	McLaurin,	Turpie,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	Martin,	Vest,
Brice,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas,
Caffery,	Gray,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Call,	Harris,	Murphy,	Walsh,
Camden,	Hunton,	Palmer,	White.
Cockrell,	Jarvis,	Pugh,
Coke,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,
Daniel,	Kyle,	Roach,

NOT VOTING—17.

Allen,	Gorman,	Mills,	Wilson,
Berry,	Hill,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Butler,	Irby,	Pasco,
Cameron,	Jones, Nev.	Sherman,
Frye,	McPherson,	Stewart,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POWER. I wish to offer another amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, paragraph 191, it is proposed to strike out "30 per cent ad valorem" and insert "18 cents per bushel;" and in line 8, to strike out "40 per cent ad valorem" and insert "28 cents per bushel."

Mr. POWER. The next paragraph but one relates to rice. It takes about the same amount of labor to raise one acre of rice as it does one acre of barley, and the product per bushel is about the same per acre. Rice is a product of the South; barley is a product of the North. I ask for a specific duty of 18 cents a bushel. The committee have allowed about 92½ cents a bushel specific on rice.

I ask for consideration of the amendment I have offered because I believe it is just as fair. The whole Northwest can produce as good barley as is raised in Canada. The malters and brewers throughout the country are satisfied to give us a small specific duty on barley. The present duty is 30 cents a bushel.

If this amendment is voted down, I shall offer another amendment and then I shall offer amendments to the paragraph relating to rice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. POWER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRICE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair for the day to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who will stand paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and I vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHITE. I inquire whether the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho has not voted.

Mr. WHITE. Then I withhold my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. The Senator from Arkansas if present would vote "nay" on this amendment, and the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Missouri that the Senator from Arkansas has voted.

Mr. VEST. Then my announcement was a mistake. I will stand paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and withdraw my vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has taken the trouble to call attention to the matter in order that Senators may have no misunderstanding in regard to pairs.

Mr. VEST. I am obliged to the Chair. I withdraw my vote, and announce my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. PASCO. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Allison,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Power,
Carey,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oregon	Proctor,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Patton,	Quay,
Cullom,	Higgins,	Peffer,	Squire,
Davis,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Teller,
Dixon,	Lodge,	Pettigrew,	Washburn.
Dubois,	McMillan,	Platt,

NAYS—33.

Bate,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Brice,	Gray,	Martin,	Turpie,
Caffery,	Harris,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas,
Call,	Hunton,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Camden,	Irby,	Murphy,	Walsh.
Cockrell,	Jarvis,	Palmer,
Coke,	Jones, Ark.	Pasco,
Daniel,	Kyle,	Pugh,

NOT VOTING—25.

Aldrich,	Frye,	McPherson,	Vest,
Allen,	George,	Mills,	White,
Berry,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Blanchard,	Gorman,	Ransom,	Wolcott.
Butler,	Hale,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Hill,	Shoup,
Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Stewart,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 45, paragraph 193——

Mr. POWER. I should like to have that passed over, as I want to offer some amendments to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. VEST. What is it the Senator from Montana wants to have passed over?

Mr. CULLOM. Rice.

Mr. POWER. Paragraph 193.

Mr. PLATT. There is no amendment there.

Mr. FAULKNER. We are now considering reserved amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator can offer his amendment to-morrow without obtaining approval.

Mr. PLATT. That is right.

Mr. CHANDLER. I had this paragraph reserved, but there is no amendment, so it is not necessary for the Senate to take any action on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Page 46, paragraph 199——

Mr. GALLINGER. That will go over. There is no amendment. I shall offer an amendment to the paragraph to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Page 53——

Mr. CHANDLER. There are no amendments there, I understand.

Mr. FAULKNER. There are no amendments there.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out paragraph 239, in the following words:

239. On all compounds or preparations of which distilled spitits are a component part of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, there shall be levied a duty not less than that imposed upon distilled spirits—

And inserted—

239. On all compounds or preparations (except as specified in the preceding paragraph of the chemical schedule, relating to medicinal preparations, of which alcohol is a component part), of which distilled spirits are a component part of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, there shall be levied a duty not less than that imposed upon distilled spirits.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 244, page 55, after the word "jugs," in line 21, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted:

If containing 14 per cent or less of absolute alcohol, 30 cents per gallon; if containing more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol.

After the word "gallon," in line 24, it struck out the proviso, and in line 12, page 56, it struck out "twenty-five" and inserted "twenty-four;" so as to make the paragraph read:

244. Still wines, including ginger wine or ginger cordial and vermuth, in casks or packages other than bottles or jugs, if containing 14 per cent or less of absolute alcohol, 30 cents per gallon; if containing more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol 50 cents per gallon. In bottles or jugs, per case of 1 dozen bottles or jugs, containing each not more than 1 quart and more than 1 pint, or 24 bottles or jugs containing each not more than 1 pint, $1.60 per case; and any excess beyond these quantities found in such bottles or jugs shall be subject to a duty of 5 cents per pint or fractional part thereof, but no separate or additional duty shall be assessed on the bottles or jugs: Provided, That any wines, ginger cordial, or vermuth imported containing more than 24 per cent of alcohol shall be classed as spirits and pay duty accordingly: And provided further, That there shall be no constructive or other allowance for breakage, leakage, or damage on wines, liquors, cordials, or distilled spirits. Wines, cordials, brandy, and other spirituous liquors imported in bottles or jugs shall be packed in packages containing not less than 1 dozen bottles or jugs in each package, or duty shall be paid as if such package contained at least 1 dozen bottles or jugs.

Mr. WHITE. This amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole, "if containing 14 per cent or less of absolute alcohol, 30 cents per gallon; if containing more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol, 50 cents per gallon," has led to a criticism. There seems at the present date to be some doubt as to whether the alcohol will be estimated by weight or by volume. For that reason I desire to offer an amendment to be placed at the end of the paragraph. I received a little while ago a communication from the Treasury Department which I submitted to the Senator from Arkansas, who is not now here; but I do not believe any criticism will be made as far as the amendment I propose is concerned. The amendment is designed to be inserted at the end of paragraph 244.

Mr. VEST. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be concurred in if there be no objection.

Mr. WHITE. It does not interfere in any way with the committee amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from California will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of paragraph 244:

The percentage of alcohol in wines and fruit juice shall be determined in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall by regulation prescribe.

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment, I submit to the Senator from California, is not necessary. Of course the collector of the port is to follow the method of measuring alcohol prescribed.

Mr. WHITE. I will state to the Senator from Iowa that several gentlemen very largely interested in the production of native wines have informed me that there is now considerable question as to whether the alcohol is to be measured by weight or by volume.

The Secretary of the Treasury informed me in a communication I have here that the custom has been to measure it by volume, but as I prefer to insert directly a provision that the Secretary of the Treasury may determine the method of measurement, there can be no objection to this amendment. The only criticism that it is possible to make upon it is that it is superfluous, but I am willing to commit it to the judgment of the Secretary.

Mr. ALLISON. That is precisely my criticism. Formerly alcohol was measured by volume under our internal-revenue laws, but for the last two or three years I understand it has been measured by weight. I do not object to the amendment, but it is absolutely unnecessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary having omitted to state the reserved amendment in paragraph 225, he will now read it.

The SECRETARY. At the top of page 51, paragraph 225, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "twenty" after the word "beef," and inserted "fifteen;" so as to read "15 per cent ad valorem;" so as to read:

225. Extract of meat, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on concurring in the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. FRYE'S name was called). I was requested to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 34, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Bate,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Blackburn,	Gordon,	Martin,	Turpie,
Blanchard,	Gray,	Mills,	Vest.
Caffery,	Harris,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas,
Call.	Hawley,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hunton,	Murphy,	Walsh.
Coke,	Irby,	Palmer,	White.
Daniel,	Jarvis,	Pugh,
Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Roach,

NAYS—24.

Allison,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Proctor,
Carey,	Higgins,	Patton,	Quay,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Peffer,	Shoup,
Cullom,	Lodge,	Perkins,	Squire,
Davis,	McMillan,	Platt,	Teller,
Dubois,	Manderson,	Power,	Washbur

NOT VOTING—27.

Aldrich,	Dixon,	Hill,	Pettigrew,
Allen,	Dolph,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,
Berry,	Frye,	Jones, Nev.	Sherman,
Brice,	George,	Kyle,	Stewart,
Butler,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Wilson,
Camden,	Hale,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Cameron,	Hansbrough.	Pasco,

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to strike out "fifteen," which was the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, and insert "twenty-five."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1, page 51, strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five," so as to read:

225. Extract of meat, 25 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that the amendment has just been adopted by a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. MANDERSON. I thought the Senate struck out "twenty" and inserted "fifteen" by a yea-and-nay vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the amendment inserting "fifteen" has been adopted as the sense of the Senate.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to amend by making the rate 25 per cent. I think the amendment is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole having been concurred in, the Chair holds that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska can not be entertained in the Senate.

Mr. MANDERSON. A change from "twenty" to "fifteen" has been made, and now I propose to make a change from "fifteen" to "twenty-five," which is certainly in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule that the amendment having been concurred in in the Senate, fixing the rate at 15 per cent as the rate of duty, the question can not be considered further.

Mr. MANDERSON. What would the Chair hold as to the amendment being in order later in the consideration of the bill when it is in the Senate; that the paragraph is not open to amendment after we pass from the schedule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter is subject to a motion to reconsider, and can only be reached in that way.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. MILLS. Did the Senator from Nebraska vote on the prevailing side?

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Nebraska voted "nay." I will move to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut having voted in the affirmative, moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

Mr. MANDERSON. On the motion to reconsider I wish to be heard. I was absent from the Chamber for a moment when this item of the meat schedule was reached. It was one of the items reserved by myself, and I really did not know that it was under consideration until I came into the Chamber for the purpose of voting at the roll call. I am obliged to the Senator from Connecticut for his kindness in putting the matter in a position where it can be better understood.

In Committee of the Whole, when there was a little debate on this item, the Senator from Missouri referred to a conversation held by him with a prominent meat and cattle dealer in the United States, and stated that he understood from him that meat extract was now being made here and exported in bulk to London and reimported, perhaps in packed form, in bottles or jars, or in whatever way it is packed, to this country and sold as Liebig's beef extract. I will not take the time to refer to quite a number of letters which I have received from some packing houses in the West, among them letters from the Cudahy Packing Company, which has gone into this new industry.

Every member of the Senate has probably seen in public places and in the public prints the advertisements of beef extracts now being made by the Cudahys, the Armours, and others of the great packing houses established at Chicago, Kansas City, and Omaha, and at Sioux City also, I understand.

The letters that I have received within the past few days since the attention of these parties has been attracted to the action of the Senate in Committee of the Whole, did I see fit to take the time to read, I think would convince anyone here is an industry which ought to be sustained, and it can not be sustained with a duty ad valorem of 15 per cent.

I doubt very much whether it can be sustained at 20 per cent. They ask that 25 per cent ad valorem be placed upon the fluid and the solid beef extracts imported into this country. If that is done we cango on with this enterprise, and it is one that is of great advantage to more than those who are the beef-packers. The more you can extract in the way of that which is merchantable and marketable out of the carcass of the beef the greater the value of the beef to the farmer. At the same time every consideration that should move the protectionist to the support of a domestic industry should move those at least on this side of the Chamber to vote to sustain this new and promising industry in the West.

I hope that the vote may be reconsidered and that the committee, on full examination may, even if it takes until to-morrow morning, conclude to restore the amount of the duty that was in the Wilson bill as it came from the other House, if they do not see fit to increase the rate from 20 to 25 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next reserved amendment.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 249, page 57, line 16, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "thirty" and inserted "twenty;" so as to read:

249. All imitations of natural mineral waters, and all artificial mineral waters, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 68, paragraph 264, line 25, after the word "cotton," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted "including cotton duck and cotton damask, in the piece or otherwise," and in line 2, page 69, after the word "act," it inserted "and;" so as to make the paragraph read:

264. All manufactures of cotton, including cotton duck and cotton damask, in the piece or otherwise, not specially provided for in this act, and including cotton cloth having India rubber as a component material, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to move to amend the pending paragraph so as to make cotton damask in the piece or otherwise 40 per cent ad valorem, and all manufactures of cotton including cotton duck in the piece or otherwise 40 per cent; that is, to insert before the word "All" at the beginning of the paragraph the words "cotton damask, in the piece or otherwise, 40 per cent ad valorem," and then fix the rate on "all manufactures of cotton, including cotton duck, in piece or otherwise," at 40 per cent. The purpose of the amendment is to place a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem on cotton damask instead of the present duty of 35 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the beginning of paragraph 264 insert:

Cotton damask, in the piece or otherwise, 40 per cent ad valorem, and all manufactures of cotton, including cotton duck, in the piece or otherwise.

Mr. LODGE. That amendment, I will say, I desire to have adopted, because cotton damask is a small manufacture but it is a very fine goods. It is one of the higher grades of cotton textiles, and to give it this cut is a very serious blow to the industry.

The textile schedule is so well made up that it seems to me it ought to give suitable protection to these finer kinds of cotton goods. I am aware that the rate I propose is the same as the McKinley rate, and that it is desired by the framers of the paragraph to cut the duties below the McKinley rate; but in the preceding paragraphs on certain articles they have given a somewhat higher duty than the McKinley rate, and this cut on cotton damask, being as it is a very fine product, is a very serious one for the industry. I hope the committee will permit the amendment of mine raising the duty 5 per cent to pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. VEST. I simply wish to inform the Senator from Massachusetts that we intend to offer an amendment to the preceding paragraph to reduce the rate which has crept in by mistake, and is higher than that of the McKinley act. Our attention was called to it yesterday. We have reduced in this instance 5 per cent, and the Senator is not satisfied and wants to go back to the McKinley rate, which would be 40 per cent.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 69, paragraph 271, after the word "butts" in line 24, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "15 per cent ad valorem" and inserted "shall be exempt from duty;" so as to read:

271. Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar material suitable for covering cotton, composed in whole or in part of hemp, flax, jute, or jute butts, shall be exempt from duty.

Mr. WHITE. It seems to me that paragraph ought to be transferred to the free list. It is rather complicated there.

Mr. VEST. That is right. It ought to be taken to the free list, and we might as well do it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has to be done by a motion in the Senate.

Mr. VEST. I move that that article, bagging, as described there, "Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar material suitable for covering cotton, composed in whole or in part of hemp, flax, jute, or jute butts," be placed on page 95.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. It would be paragraph 392½.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That is it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Transfer paragraph 271 to page 95 and make it paragraph 392½.

Mr. ALLISON. That is, to strike out paragraph 271, and make it a new paragraph.

Mr. VEST. Strike out paragraph 271.

Mr. ALLISON. Paragraph 270 was also reserved.

Mr. COCKRELL. That has been acted on.

Mr. WHITE. I was about to suggest that paragraph 270 should be treated in the same way, that is, as far as the last words "bags for grain made of such burlaps, 20 per cent ad valorem," are concerned. That clause was stricken out by some inadvertance and it was not put on the free list. I make the suggestion to the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. That has been struck out in the Senate. That was reserved by me with paragraph 271. Therefore I know that it was reserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri to strike out paragraph 271 and transfer it and make it paragraph 392½.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for a division on the motion. The first part of the motion would strike it out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to strike out the words "15 per cent ad valorem"?

Mr. CHANDLER. The motion to strike out the whole paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks for a division of the question. The question first is on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he should be content now with striking this out, if the majority of the Senate favors it, and when we reach the free list let him insert a new paragraph.

Mr. CHANDLER. That was my object in calling for a division.

Mr. VEST. It has already been put there. It might be overlooked.

Mr. PEFFER. I suggest that paragraph 271 has been amended so as to admit bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, etc., free of duty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was done in Committee of the Whole, and now the question before the Senate is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. The motion now is to strike out paragra ph 271 from the dutiable list.

Mr. PEFFER. That is another matter. There was an amendment placing cotton bagging for grain on the free list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a different paragraph. That is paragraph 270, in which the clause was stricken out:

Bags for grain made of such burlaps, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, which the Senator from New Hampshire asks to be divided. The question first is to strike out paragraph 271.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire to take the vote by yeas and nays on both questions together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question would come up properly upon concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole striking out "15 per cent ad valorem" and inserting "shall be exempt from duty."

Mr. ALDRICH. We might consider that as concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, that amendment will be considered as concurred in. Now the question recurs on transposing the paragraph so as to make it paragraph 392½.

Mr. CHANDLER. I asked for a division in order to avoid the yeas and nays at this time. I have no objection to having the yeas and nays taken on the motion to strike out and transfer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the question will be taken on the motion to strike out and transfer. On this motion the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If he were present I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. I do not see him in the Chamber. I shall only vote if necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I suggest to the Senator to transfer his pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN], so that we may both vote.

Mr. PASCO. I will consent to that transfer. I vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAREY (after having voted in the negative). I inadvertently voted, but I will transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] so that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] and myself can vote.

Mr. PUGH. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 21; as follows.

YEAS—31.

Bate,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Smith,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Martin,	Turpie
Brice,	Gordon,	Murphy,	Vest,
Caffery,	Harris,	Palmer,	Vilas,
Call,	Hunton,	Pasco,	Voorhees

Cameron,	Hill,	Mitchell, Wis.	Wolcott
Dixon,	Hoar,	Morgan,
Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Morrill,
Frye,	Kyle,	Power.

So the motion to strike out paragraph 271 and transfer it to page 95 was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Paragraph 270 was reserved by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "ad valorem," line 20, paragraph 270, page 69, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out the words:

Bags for grain made of such burlaps, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PLATT. Did I not understand that this morning there was an amendment proposed to increase the rate on burlaps to 20 per cent?

Mr. ALLISON. There was an amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Fifteen per cent was stricken out and 20 per cent inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 20 strike out "15" and insert "20;" so as to read "20 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment has been agreed to. Now, I desire to call attention to this paragraph as it stands. As the paragraph came from the House of Representatives it read as follows:

Burlaps, not exceeding 60 inches in width, containing not over 40 threads to the square inch, counting warp and filling, 15 per cent ad valorem; bags for grain made of such burlaps, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The Senate in Committee of the Whole struck out "not exceeding 60 inches in width," and also struck out "bags for grain made of such burlaps, 20 per cent ad valorem." The Senate today, on motion of the Senator from Arkansas, has raised the duty on burlaps from 15 to 20 per cent. As the paragraph came to us from the House, burlaps exceeding 60 inches in width would have paid a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem, that being in accord with the remaining paragraphs of the schedule; but the Senate as in Committee of the Whole having struck out "not exceeding 60 inches in width," it seems to become necessary for the Senate, on motion of the Senator from Arkansas, to raise the duty upon burlaps to 20 per cent ad valorem. So the effect of this general amendment is to provide for a duty of 20 per cent upon the raw material for bags, and then to put bags upon the free list.

Mr. VEST. Let us make it 15 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. I am told that there are a great number of manufacturers in the United States who manufacture bags from burlaps. If that be so, the industry certainly ought not to be absolutely destroyed, first by increasing the duty upon the raw material and then putting the manufacture upon the free list. The Senator from Missouri will remember that we had a little sparring upon that subject when the matter was in Committee of the Whole. I do not understand that the Committee on Finance have any recommendation on this subject except the recommendation this morning that burlaps should be 20 per cent ad valorem.

Now I appeal to the justice of Senators on both sides of the Chamber upon this subject that we may not by our own legislation absolutely destroy an industry in our own country by adverse legislation. This is all I desire to say on the subject.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to inquire of the Senator what industry he refers to?

Mr. ALLISON. I refer to the industry of making bags from burlaps.

Mr. MILLS. How would it meet the views of the Senator from Iowa to have the paragraph stricken out and insert in the free list burlaps and bags for grain made of such burlaps, putting it all in the free list? That is where it ought to go, and I make that motion. I move to strike out paragraph 270 and insert after paragraph 407½ in the free list these words:

Burlaps, and bags for grain made of such burlaps.

Mr. ALLISON. That would only increase the difficulty, I suggest to the Senator from Texas, because that would destroy the industry of making burlaps in the United States, of which there are quite a number of factories at this time, I understand. I do not see why we should select out this particular industry for destruction.

Mr. WHITE. I believe this matter was pretty well explained when the question was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. A motion was made to strike out "bags for grain made of such burlaps, 20 per cent ad valorem;" and when that motion prevailed it was followed by a motion that bagging for cotton, etc., should also be placed upon the free list, upon the ground that if the farmers of my part of the United States had free grain bags, cotton bagging should be free also, and that amendment prevailed.

In my State we paid out last year half a million dollars as duty upon grain bags. As I stated in my argument before, the Legislature of my State unanimously, regardless of party, instructed their Senators and requested their Representatives to insist upon this amendment. We have secured it. I have no objection in the world to putting burlaps upon the free list, but I do insist upon grain bags. I would rather board at the best hotel in my State all the constituents of the Senator from Iowa who make bags—and the farmers of my State are ready to do it—than to continue the payment of this duty.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from California that the luxury of which he speaks would not be very expensive. I do not know that a single grain bag is made in my State; and I have no interest in this matter, in any sense for any constituent except that justice may be done to existing industries and that we may not select one or two for destruction.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I desire to say one thing only in connection with this matter. The Senate ought to know that the revenue from burlaps is over a million dollars a year, and from grain bags over half a million dollars with the duty on those articles now.

Mr. WHITE. And all that grain-bag duty we pay on the Pacific coast.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to say just one word in response to the Senator from Arkansas. These burlaps which yield a million dollars include, of course, all burlaps for grain and every other purpose, flour, and everything of that sort. As respects the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, it seems to me to be utterly inconsistent to put a duty of 20 per cent upon burlaps, and then to put the more finished article on the free list. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me that we are rather going back——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas will suspend until the amendment of the Senator from Texas is read.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraph 270 and insert as paragraph 407½:

Burlaps, and bags for grain, made of such burlaps.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to me we are rather going backward to put a finished product on the free list and still tax the raw material, and inasmuch as we have put cotton bagging and bags for grain on the free list it appears to me to be the proper thing to do to put burlaps on the free list also. However, if the Committee on Finance do not approve it I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. VEST. I want to say that I agree with the Senator from Texas. Where we put the finished product on the free list, it is absolutely outrageous to put the raw material used by the manufacturer under a duty. I am in favor of putting both on the free list.

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

Mr. ALDRICH. In order to be consistent, the Senator will have to put on the free list jute yarns, now 30 per cent ad valorem higher than any of these products.

Mr. VEST. I would be very glad to do that, if I could. I should like to put all these raw materials on the free list if I had the power to do it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think, if the Senator desires to destroy the jute industry he might as well make the destruction complete.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like one moment to say that I agree fully with the Senator from Iowa that it is utterly unreasonable to make the raw material of which bags are made dutiable and have the bags free. There is no denying the fact that both ought to be taxed or both of them ought to be free. I think this is a fine instance to illustrate the great mistake of departing hastily in the midst of debate from the line pointed out by the committee. The duty on these grain bags was put down at a reasonable rate. It was a great reduction from what it had been before. It was satisfactory as I understood it. It was reported to Senators by gentlemen who were interested in this industry that the rate was a satisfactory one. It was a reasonable reduction from what had been in existence before, and it was fair.

But in the midst of the debate here somebody proposed to put bags on the free list, and without stopping to consider what complications it would bring about it was done. I think that was a mistake. I do not believe that it ought to have been done. However, I shall not interpose any objection to the action taken by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Texas.

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to say, in answer to the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas, that the placing of bags both for grain and cotton upon the free list was not done without due consideration, for there were a number of what I thought very good speeches made on the subject. I made the motion myself in both cases.

Mr. CHANDLER. And spoke several times.

Mr. PEFFER. And I spoke several times, as is suggested by my amiable friend from New Hampshire; and I know my friend the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], made one or perhaps two able and excellent speeches. Senators honored us both with strict attention; there was a good deal of talk backward and forward on one side and the other; and finally we succeeded. This being about the only benefit I feel I have achieved during these three months of discussion, I hope Senators will let it stand at that.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Arkansas says very truly there would be inconsistency in putting a duty upon the manufacture of burlaps after grain bags had been put upon the free list, which are manufactured out of burlaps; but the inconsistency is in putting the grain bags on the free list. I do not want to let this matter pass without saying something about it. If there is any reason why one manufacture of this country should be put on the free list the same reason exists in regard to every other manufacture in the country.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator from Arkansas practically to withdraw from the action of the committee in that matter, and express a desire that grain bags shall be retained upon the dutiable list. If that is so, we might by unanimous consent, perhaps, with the exception of the Senator from California——

Mr. WHITE. There can not be any unanimous consent had on it, I will tell the Senator. I will stay here all night first.

Mr. PLATT. The truth about the matter is that this is a scheme by which some parties hope to catch some farmers' votes. It is a bid for farmers' votes. I submit that in order to bid for farmers' votes it is not right to destroy manufacturing industries. There is no more reason why burlaps should be put upon the free list than everything else that a farmer uses which is manufactured, and there is no reason why things which a farmer uses which are manufactured should be placed on the free list any more than the things which other people use which are manufactured should be put on the free list.

I wish to stand here to protest, whether it be claimed to be in the interest of the farmer or anybody else, that no manufacture which has been established in this country shall be deliberately destroyed in order that the goods may be purchased from abroad. I wish to protest here that nobody will derive any benefit from it; that the suggestion that the farmer is to be benefited is a delusion which he will find out in good time. There has been no such glaring inconsistency developed in the treatment of the bill as this destruction of a legitimate, honest, well-conducted manufacture in this country which it is not claimed has charged unreasonable profits upon its goods.

Mr. President, I do not wish to say harsh things, but the sentiment which is behind this proposed amendment is a deception of the farmer. It is an inducement held out to him that if you can destroy this manufacture in this country, if you can shut up these factories and let them moulder to decay, he is going to get his bags for a trifle less. All experience teaches us that they will cost him just as much, and that the inducement which has been held out to him will be shown in the end to have been entirely without reason.

I do not know that I desire to say anything more. We have no manufactures of bagging or burlaps in my section of the country. I do not know anybody who is interested in it. So far as I know I have not received a letter or a circular upon the subject. But I know that Senators here for the purpose of making the farmers feel that they are their friends are attempting to strike down a legitimate, honest industry in this country, when all other manufacturing industries receive protection by way of duties in this bill of one rate or another. I do not like to see it and I do not believe the committee likes to see it, I do not believe anybody likes to see it except so far as it may be necessary to wheedle some farmers in the country.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. President, I feel that I ought to say one word on this question. As the matter now stands it seems to me utterly inconsistant and utterly unjust. The idea of placing a duty on the raw material, while allowing free of duty the manufactured article, is going a step further than I ever heard of in a free trader. In my own city there are two bag factories. Bags are manufactured largely for the shipment of flour. The millers of Minneapolis are the largest consumers of bags in this country.

I have a petition signed by every miller in Minneapolis and the large consumers outside in the State asking that a duty shall be imposed in order that this industry may be maintained, because the price has gone down steadily from the moment these factories have been in operation. Now, to put a duty on the raw material and place the manufactured article on the free list means absolute destruction. It seems to me both should be either on the free list or both should be on the dutiable list, and that the duty on bagging should be larger than the rate on burlaps.

Mr. MILLS. That is my pending motion, to put all on the free list.

Mr. HARRIS rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Texas to the question whether his amendment ought not to come in after paragraph 424 instead of paragraph 407—after Burgundy pitch.

Mr. MILLS. All right. I have no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator from Texas to say that he would withdraw the motion to amend if it did not meet with the approval of the caucus committee.

Mr. VEST. It does meet with our approval.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from New Hampshire meant to say the Finance Committee.

Mr. HARRIS. I rose for the purpose of moving that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. VEST. Let us vote on this question first.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be stated.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be stated, and then the Chair will recognize the Senator from New Hampshire.

The SECRETARY. Insert paragraph 270, page 69, after paragraph 424, page 98, as paragraph 424½, and make it read:

Burlaps, and bags for grain made of such burlaps.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me that the Senator from Tennessee had better renew his motion for a recess, to which I hope there will be no objection. This is rather an astonishing rally on the part of the Senator from Texas. He has not taken much part in constructing this bill recently.

Mr. MILLS. That is why I should like to have this amendment adopted before we adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. He has taken his dutiable coal and his dutiable iron and his dutiable almost everything else, and the Democratic platform as he understands it has gone all to pieces. It can not be that the Senator is coming in here to make a rally in behalf of his great principles just at the close of this bill. It pains me to see that the Senator has already developed a radical difference of opinion between the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Missouri.

The Senator from Texas rushes in. He sees a chance to put something on the free list, and the Populist leader—not the Populist leader, but one of the Populist leaders—on my right rushes forward, too, and he sees a chance in the closing hours of this bill to assert that burlaps ought to go on the free list as well as bagging, although only this morning the duty on burlaps, upon the amendment of the committee, was increased from 15 per cent to 20 per cent.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator yield to me in order that I may make the motion he suggested?

Mr. CHANDLER. In one moment. I only want to strengthen the Senator's motion. Now, if we are to have the Senator from Texas rush in at the last gasp to try and vindicate his reputation all over this country by putting burlaps on the free list, the Senator from Missouri is to break loose, and the Senator from Arkansas is to undertake to argue with them both, there is certainly a painful discrepancy and disunion on the other side of the Chamber that we can not settle in five minutes. I beg leave to say that burlaps will not go on the free list this evening.

Therefore, I hope the Senate to-night will let this go over, and in the mean time let the committee get together. The Senator from Texas said, although he made his motion with great boldness, that he would not insist upon it if the committee objected; and he would have withdrawn it if he had not got the encouragement he did from the Senator from Missouri.

Now, here we have these clauses, and on the next page we have collars and cuffs. Of course the Senator from Texas will assault that. It is very evident that we shall not make much more progress this evening. So I hope the Senator from Tennessee (if he does not insist upon my talking any longer) will make the motion for a recess.

Mr. HARRIS. I will make my motion on those terms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate take a recess untill 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 3, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 2, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 171) granting to the State of North Dakota certain lands heretofore set apart as a wood reservation for Fort Totten military reservation for the use of the militia of North Dakota, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 1963) for the relief of the sureties of Dennis Murphy;

A bill (H. R. 7449) authorizing the Minneapolis Gaslight Company, of Minneapolis, Minn., to lay submerged gas pipes across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 193) to appoint three members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SIBLEY, because of ill health.

To Mr. HEINER of Pennsylvania, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. ALDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 119) which I send to the desk.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to the governor of the State of West Virginia, under the provisions, conditions, and limitations of the act of Congress entitled "An act to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct-tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861," which act was approved March 2, 1891, the sum of $181,306.93, less the sum of $27,328.18, which was paid to the governor of the State of West Virginia on the 25th day of August, 1891, to be held in trust for the citizens and inhabitants of said State, notwithstanding any claim by the Government of the United States against the State of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia for the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. PAYNE. I object.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill No. 1759, to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road."

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post road," approved March 24, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, reënacted and declared to be and to have been in full force and effect from and after March 24, 1894. Section 12 of said act, which provides that said act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge therein authorized be not commenced within two years and completed within four years from the date of the approval thereof, shall be and the same is hereby, so amended that the time within which said bridge is required to be commenced shall be within two years from March 24, 1894, and the time within which it is required that said bridge be completed shall be within four years from the 24th day of March, 1894.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to hear the report read.

Mr. HERMANN. The report is very brief, but let it be read.

The report (by Mr. GEARY) was read, as follows:

Mr. GEARY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 1759):

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1759) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post road," report the same back without amendment, and with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The purpose of the bill is simply to extend the period during which the construction of this bridge, already authorized, may be commenced and completed. Your committee is not advised of any objection to such an extension.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HERMANN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STEAM BOILERS.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which I send to the desk (H. R. 4475), to amend section 4434 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4434 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4434. No externally fired boiler having its shell constructed of iron or steel plates exceeding an average thickness of thirty one-hundredths of an inch shall be employed on any steam vessel navigating the Red River of the North or rivers flowing into the Gulf of Mexico or their tributaries; and no externally fired boiler employed on any such steam vessel shall have less than 3 inches space between its shell and any of its internal flues, and not less than 3 inches space between such flues when any such flues are more than 5 inches in diameter; and every such externally fired boiler employed on any such steam vessel shall be provided with a manhole in the lower part of the front head thereof, of such dimensions as may be prescribed by the Board of Supervising Inspectors, in all cases where the distance between its internal flues is less than 3 inches. Externally fired boilers having shells constructed of iron or steel plates not exceeding an average thickness of fifty one-hundredths of an inch may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be authorized and employed on steam vessels navigating the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, or salt-water bays or sounds, or the Great Lakes, or any of them, and waters flowing to and from the same, or any of them."

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws conflicting with this act are hereby repealed.

An amendment recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 26, after "them," insert: "Provided, That on inspection no plate that is by this act limited to a thickness of thirty one-hundredths of an inch and no plate that is by this act limited to a thickness of fifty one-hundredths of an inch shall be rejected for use if found to exceed those dimensions, respectively, if the average thickness thereof does not exceed the limits therein specified, and the amount of steam pressure that will be permitted to be carried in boilers constructed in accordance with the requirements of this act shall be determined from measurements showing the least thickness of the plates."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to hear an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read the report of the Supervising Inspector-General of the Steamboat Inspection Service, which accompanies the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the report will be read.

It was read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING INSPECTOR-GENERAL
STEAMBOAT INSPECTION SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., December 9, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference to this office for report, of a communication from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives, inclosing House bill 4475, Fifty-third Congress, second session, entitled "A bill to amend section 4434 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States," and requesting the Secretary of the Treasury "to furnish the committee with such suggestions as you (he) may deem proper touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage."

I have the honor to report that inasmuch as the terms of the bill are substantially in accordance with the recommendations of this office in its annual report for 1893, page 9, it fully meets its approval.

Following is the extract from the report referred to:

"I would further recommend a change in the law, section 4434, Revised Statutes, which limits the thickness of material of the shells of externally fired boilers to twenty-six one-hundredths of an inch, now only applicable to such boilers when built to be used on rivers whose waters flow into the Gulf of Mexico, so as to allow such externally fired boilers to be built of material of thirty-one hundredths of an inch thick, as was allowed under section 4 of the act of Congress approved July 25, 1866. If any satisfactory reason existed for reducing this thickness in the present steamboat laws, act of Congress approved February 28, 1871, it does not appear of record.

That no harm is likely to result from the proposed change is satisfactorily shown from the fact that, by an amendment to section 4434, Revised Statutes, approved February 11, 1885, material not exceeding fifty one-hundredths of an inch thick was allowed on externally fired boilers "used on steam vessels navigating the Atlantic or Pacific Oceans, or salt water bays or sounds, or the Great Lakes, or any of them;" under which conditions large numbers of boilers upon our largest steamers have been built and used for a period of seven years without more deterioration than the ordinary internally fired boiler with unlimited thickness of shell.

"In view of the fact of the impossibility of rolling sheets of boiler plate to an exact thickness, there should be a proviso in the law that no plate should be rejected for use if found in excess of thirty one-hundredths of an inch thick if the average thickness of plate does not exceed such dimensions, it being further provided that the steam pressure shall be determined from measurements indicating the least thickness of the plate."

The bill is returned herewith.

Very respectfully,

JAS. A. DUMONT,
Supervising Inspector-General.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. LOUD. What is the object of the bill?

Mr. BERRY. The object is to change the method of constructing boilers as to the thickness of the material to be used in boilers for vessels on the inland waters.

Mr. LOUD. But this bill refers to all the waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific, too.

Mr. BERRY. To the waters running into the Gulf of Mexico.

The bill has the approval of Gen. Dumont, the Inspector-General of the Steamboat Service, and of the Board, which represent all sections of the country. The question is purely a scientific one, and the gentleman's district and every district is represented once a year in a meeting of this Board, of which Gen. Dumont is president, and which approved this bill unanimously.

Mr. KIEFER. Does this bill necessitate the changing of boilers already in use?

Mr. BERRY. No, sir.

There being no objection, the amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BERRY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WORK AND WAGES OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

Mr. PENCE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 94) providing for an investigation relative to the work and wages of women and children.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Commissioner of Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed "to investigate and make report upon the conditions attending the employment of women and children; their wages, earnings, sanitary surroundings, and cost of living; the effect of various employments upon their health and longevity; what measures are taken to protect their physical condition and to protect them from accidents: the rates of wages paid them in comparison with the rates paid men; and the effect, if any, their employment has had upon the wages and employment of men: Provided, That the investigation hereby authorized can be carried out under the regular appropriations made for the Department of Labor."

The amendment reported by the Committee on Labor was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "can," in the thirteenth line, and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall;" so as to read:

Provided, That the investigation hereby authorized shall be carried out under the regular appropriations made for the Department of Labor.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us hear the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. COOMBS. I should like to hear the report.

The SPEAKER. Reserving the right to object, the report may be read.

The report (by Mr. MCGANN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Labor, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 94) providing for an investigation relative to the work and wages of women and children, beg leave to report herewith that they have carefully considered the same and respectfully recommend that the resolution be amended by striking out the word "can," in the thirteenth line thereof, and inserting in its stead the word "shall," so that the said thirteenth line of the resolution shall read, "hereby authorized shall be carried out under the regular appropriation."

The employment of women and children, their wages, sanitary surroundings, the precaution taken to protect them from accidents, and the effect, if any, of their employment upon the wages and employment of men, and especially the relative wage-earning capacities of the former as compared with the employment and wages of the latter, are subjects which we believe of sufficient importance to warrant the desired investigation which the resolution, as amended, specifies shall be conducted by the Bureau of Labor under the regular appropriations made for the Department of Labor.

With the resolution amended as hereinbefore stated, your committee do most earnestly recommend its early passage, that the Department of Labor may commence without delay the investigation, that the evils, if any, attending employment of the wage earners may be discovered and measures taken to correct them.

Mr. COOMBS. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman presenting this resolution whether this inquiry is intended to include simply the mechanical employment of females, or does it include also clerical employment?

Mr. PENCE. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCGANN], the author of the resolution, is present and will doubtless answer the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. MCGANN. The resolution refers to mechanical employment.

Mr. COOMBS. The terms of the resolution do not limit the inquiry in that way. I suggest that it be amended so as to make the meaning specific.

Mr. MCGANN. This resolution has been presented on the suggestion of the Commissioner of Labor——

Mr. COOMBS. The resolution in its present terms would embrace the whole scope of female labor. The language is too broad. I suppose it was intended that the inquiry should include only mechanical employments; and I suggest that the resolution be amended in that respect. If such an amendment is agreed to, I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

Several MEMBERS. Let the resolution be again read.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. COOMBS. I make no objection to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the amendment of the committee be read.

The amendment was again read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE] for the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. CANNON of California. Does not the present law require the Commissioner of Labor to make this investigation and report the result?

Mr. PENCE. It has been thought that the present law, while not requiring it, would authorize the Commissioner to make the inquiry. But he himself has doubted his authority in the matter, and has requested that some such specific authority as this be given him. That is the sole purpose of the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCGANN]. The resolution specifically provides that the investigation shall be carried on within the regular appropriations for the Department of Labor; so that the inquiry can not involve one farthing of increased expense. The measure is in accord with the wish of the Commissioner, and has been presented at his suggestion.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I have not objected to the consideration of this resolution; but I wish to ask whether Mr. Wright, the Commissioner of Labor, has been consulted touching this proposed work.

Mr. MCGANN. Yes, sir; and at his suggestion the resolution was introduced.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois, Has he been consulted as to the sufficiency of the regular appropriations to cover this investigation and also to provide for the other work that his department ought to do? because the resolution as amended will make this inquiry mandatory.

Mr. MCGANN. Yes, sir. The Commissioner was before the committee and said that the regular appropriations would be sufficient to cover this inquiry; that is, to commence it——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Without embarrassing him in his other work?

Mr. MCGANN. Yes, without embarrassing him in his other work.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And without any increase of the appropriation?

Mr. MCGANN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That is all I wished to know, my object being to give him more money if necessary.

Mr. COOMBS. I move to amend the resolution by inserting in the seventh line, after the word "various," the words "mechanical and industrial;" and by striking out, in line 11, the word "their" and insert "such." The effect of this amendment will be to limit this investigation to the field to which it was originally intended to be limited.

Mr. PENCE. I can say to the gentleman from New York that, in view of the statements made by the Commissioner of Labor, I am sure there will be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. The amendment conforms to what was evidently intended to be the scope of the resolution.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would like to ask a question as to that. Would it prohibit an investigation by the Commissioner of Labor, as to the employment of women and children in other than skilled industries?

Mr. PENCE. I think not.

Mr. SPRINGER. Industries of any kind.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, you take certain sections of the country, and I understand that women work in the field; we all know that children do. Does this apply to what is known as "skilled industries" alone, or does it also include agriculture?

Mr. SPRINGER. It would include everything, if the amendment is adopted, that is of a mechanical or industrial character.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Is agriculture or teaching such a pursuit as would be involved in the investigation?

Mr. SPRINGER. I think so. But clerical work would not be included, such as is done in the Departments for instance.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But would it apply to agriculture?

Mr. BARTLETT. It would not.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman from New York says it would not apply to agricultural work. Now, should it not apply as much to agriculture as to any other employment in which women and children are engaged?

Mr. COOMBS. It would be undoubtedly as well to have it apply to agriculture, if it would not make the scope of the investigation too large for the means at the disposal of the Bureau of Labor. At some other time, if it be deemed necessary, we may broaden the scope of the investigation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, this is the commencement of the investigation, and I wish to say to gentlemen that while I am in harmony with the Commissioner of Labor commencing the investigation, yet the great bulk of the people who do labor, the larger percentage of them, are laboring in agriculture, more so than in any one calling, or, perhaps in the aggregate of all the other callings combined.

Mr. COGSWELL. Oh, yes; a large majority of the people are so engaged.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, why not, while you are gathering these facts, obtain also the facts as to labor everywhere, on the farm and the field as well as in the factory? Let us have full knowledge of the subject, the object being that legislation and adequate public sentiment touching those who gain a livelihood in the sweat of their faces may be inaugurated. So I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw the amendment, and let this investigation be as broad as possible with the means at the disposal of the Commissioner.

Mr. COOMBS. The question of the gentleman from Illinois addressed to the mover of the resolution is the principal reason why I offered the amendment. It is the evident intention of the resolution which was offered to limit its operations and scope to mechanical and industrial employments in which women and children are engaged, and if we make it applicable to agriculture as well, and broaden the scope as much as the gentleman from Illinois desires, it will undoubtedly extend the work beyond the capacity of the Department of Labor with the present funds at its disposal.

I agree with the gentleman thoroughly, that female agricultural labor in this country should be investigated, but I fear, as I have said, if the resolution is made too broad—if it embraces too large a field—we shall not have such an investigation as will be of the slightest value, for the purpose contemplated, in the future.

Mr. MARSH. Then increase the amount of the appropriation so as to include the entire field to be covered.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman from New York, I say that if this investigation be worth making at all, let us make it thorough and take the time to cover all of the facts. Organization does exist. We have organized capital; we have organized labor, and I am not here to say that we ought not to have. I think organization of labor is and has been necessary, and it has grown upon me for many years.

But it must be remembered that there is a great mass of labor in this country that arises the greater part of the year with the sun, and which ceases to toil only with the going down of the sun.

That labor is not organized. Yet it bears the burdens and is a great conservative element in the Republic. It touches the ground daily and receives renewed strength from day to day; and I would be very glad, as this important investigation commences by, it seems to me, perhaps without speaking slightingly of the other bureaus, the best managed bureau in the Government with the amount of money it expends, I would be very glad to let the investigation be broad enough to give us when it is made all of the facts. If it requires $25,000 more, or any other sum to commence the work, let us begin at the beginning; let us cover the whole field and give all the facts that may be necessary to secure satisfactory results from the investigation.

Mr. COOMBS. I will put in the word "agriculture" in the amendment if it meets the views of the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, no; not agriculture. Let it be all labor.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope the House will not accept any modification of the amendment so as to extend the scope of this investigation into the whole field of labor. Comparatively few females are engaged in agricultural pursuits. We know that they are poorly paid, and no additional statistics would be necessary to confirm that which we already know to exist.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, well, it seems to me that we had better have full knowledge of the subject.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then vote down the amendment and adopt the original resolution.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not want to open up a field that will be the basis for an enormous expenditure of money.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I do not want an enormous expenditure of money; but I do stand here to voice the interests and the claims that are not voiced day by day before Congress. Capital is voiced. Organized labor is voiced, and that is all well; but the great majority of the people who labor are not specially voiced here. Now, if we are going to get facts, let us have the facts all along the line; and I think we ought to have them.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What do you want the facts for? What purpose do you intend to accomplish?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will ask, in reply, what do you want of the facts called for in this resolution?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. In my ignorance I am inquiring. I want to learn.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I have never yet learned that knowledge touching the condition of the citizens of the Republic was deleterious.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I know; but this is a proposition to collect a lot of knowledge which is in the mind of every intelligent person.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It is equally so all along the line.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The other, I think, perhaps is not.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, perhaps it is not. I am not antagonizing this resolution. I think it ought to pass.

Mr. BRETZ. Well, let it pass, then.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman says let it pass. I am content that it should pass, but I believe it ought to pass in such a form as to gain the whole information.

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has the floor.

Mr. PENCE. As the resolution is originally drawn, it is broad enough to suit the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] will withdraw all amendments, and let this resolution pass as it was originally introduced, that will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. COOMBS. If it is the general wish, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. PENCE. I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] now withdraws his amendment. I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Does the resolution stand without amendment?

Mr. PENCE. An amendment changing the word "may" to "shall" has been adopted.

The SPEAKER. The amendment reported by the committee has been agreed to, substituting "shall" for "may."

Mr. PENCE. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. As I understand it, one amendment changing the word "may" to "shall" has been adopted, and the other has been withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The committee amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And the other is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The other is withdrawn. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Can we have the resolution reported?

The SPEAKER. It has been reported twice.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the resolution can be again read. It will be the third time it has been read.

The resolution was again read.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PENCE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

JUDGMENTS OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6979) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States," approved August 1, 1888.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States," approved August 1, 1888, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That nothing herein shall be construed to require the docketing of a judgment or decree of a United States court, or the filing of a transcript thereof, in any State office within the same county or parish in the State of Louisiana, in which the judgment or decree is rendered, in order that such judgment or decree may be a lien on any property within such county, if the United States court has a permanent office and keeps a judgment record open at all times for public inspection in such county or parish."

The Committee on the Judiciary recommended the following amendment:

In line 10, page 1, strike out the words "or parish in the State of Louisiana."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOMBS. This bill is reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, is it?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRYAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL THURSDAY NEXT.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

HALL OF RECORDS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the House had under consideration the bill (S. 22) for the erection of a hall of records in this city. I desire to call up that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] calls up the bill which was being considered under a special order on Friday last. The Clerk will report the title of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 22) making appropriations for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon, in the city of Washington, D. C., of a building to be used as a hall of records.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 22) making appropriations for the purchase of ground and the erection thereon, in the city of Washington, D. C., of a building to be used as a hall of records, with Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session it was dividing on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] fixing the amount to be carried in the bill at $175,000. After a division was demanded and a vote taken the point of no quorum was made, whereupon the committee rose. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to know if an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska would be in order at this stage of the proceedings?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not, because the committee is dividing.

Mr. REED. The committee is dividing. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is endeavoring to secure order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, fixing the amount at $175,000.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRYAN. Division.

Mr. REED. I thought the committee was dividing when we arose the last time.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true.

Mr. REED. And tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's statement is correct. Tellers will take their places. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] will take their places as tellers.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] was acting as teller.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman is absent, and the Chair will request the gentleman from Nebraska to act as teller in his place.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Can we have the amendment read?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, before the tellers resume their places, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, page 2, strike out the words "two hundred and seventy-five thousand" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five."

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend until the committee comes to order. It is impossible for the Chair to hear what gentlemen are saying. [After a pause.] For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BRYAN. I want to ask unanimous consent that we have ten minutes' discussion before the vote is taken again. It is agreeable to the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Ten on either side?

Mr. BRYAN. Five or ten minutes on either side—ten minutes on either side.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the count by tellers, the gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that there be ten minutes' debate on either side.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate has been closed.

Mr. REED. I have no objection to having debate reopened on the condition that we have general debate.

Mr. BRYAN. We do not want more than ten minutes' debate.

Mr. REED. I shall object to that, because if we open debate I do not want it limited to ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine objects, and tellers will take their places.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 38.

Mr. COOMBS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, when the following-named members failed to respond:

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration the bill S. 22, found itself without a quorum. I caused the roll to be called, as required by the rule, and herewith report the names of the absentees, to be entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee, having under consideration the bill S. 22, found itself without a quorum, whereupon the committee rose and he reports the names of the absentees to the House. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. One hundred and ninety-five gentlemen having responded to their names, under the rule the committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. COOMBS. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers will resume their places. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that the vote will have to be again taken.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent that we have ten minutes' debate before we come to a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, that request was made before this morning and objected to by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] unless general debate were opened. In his absence, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects, and tellers will take their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 31.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being insisted upon, the Clerk will call the roll.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole having had under consideration a bill (S. 22), and finding itself without a quorum, he, as chairman, had caused the roll to be called, and now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. One hundred and sixty-five gentlemen have answered to their names.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. No quorum.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move a call of the House, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken on ordering a call of the House, and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. REED. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 33; so a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to respond:

Adams, Pa.	Edmunds,	Livingston,	Shaw,

The SPEAKER. The doors will now be closed, and the Clerk will call the names of the gentlemen who failed to respond to the first call. On this call excuses are in order.

The call was completed.

The SPEAKER. On this call 195 gentlemen have answered to their names.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the special order under which this bill is being considered by the House, and to withdraw the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. REED. What will be the next business in order?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The call of committees, I suppose.

The SPEAKER. No; we have no call of committees on this Monday. The only matter of which the Chair has knowledge is a bill reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency that has some privilege. The Chair does not know, however, whether there is any purpose to call that bill up at this time or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have been told, Mr. Speaker, that it is not the purpose to call that bill up now. It was the intention to do so, but on account of the absence of certain members, that purpose, I understand, has been abandoned.

Mr. REED. Well, I will not embarrass the House by making any objection. I do not think anybody wants to vote on this hall of-records bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, then, the order under which this bill is being considered will be vacated and the bill will be withdrawn.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. EDMUNDS, on account of sickness.

To Mr. ENLOE, for this day, on account of sickness.

The House then, on motion of Mr. BANKHEAD, at 2 o'clock p. m. (pursuant to the resolution previously adopted), adjourned until Thursday, July 5.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7216) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Joseph G. Marsh, of the United States steamship Galena, and the same was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KEM: A bill (H. R. 7635) to remove the charge of desertion standing against the name of Philo Newman—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LAYTON: A bill (H. R. 7636) for the relief of John M. Laughlin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 7637) making an appropriation for the improvement of the St. Marys River from St. Marys, Ohio, to Fort Wayne, Ind., and for other purposes—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BROOKSHIRE: Papers to accompany House bill 7607, to pension Mrs. Aletha D. Plank—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GEISSENHAINER: Petition of citizens of Long Branch, N. J., for the exemption of fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations from the income tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LOCKWOOD: Petition of citizens of Buffalo, N. Y., for exempting the fraternal beneficiary orders from the operations of the income tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. POST: Petition of B. Winter, of Rock Island, Ill., against any increased tax on whisky and any extension of present bonded period—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ROBBINS: Protest of citizens of Selma, Dallas County, Ala., against raising the tax on whisky—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SOMERS: Petition of Frank E. Gedfiess, C. J. T. Schultz, and others, of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring amendment to the tariff bill exempting beneficiary societies from income tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania: Petition of citizens of Wayne County, Pa., against including beneficial fraternal societies in the operations of the proposed income tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 3, 1894.

[Continuation of legislative proceedings of Monday, July 2, 1894.]

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m., at the expiration of the recess.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of June 29, 1894, a list of the judgments rendered in the Court of Claims in Indian depredation cases since his last report, together with a statement of the date when each was rendered, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Depredations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for the prevention of obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, $114,000, as submitted by the Secretary of War; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received yesterday from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. 2794) to amend the judiciary act of August 13, 1888—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 6656) for the relief of P. W. Mitchell, M. C. Felmet, George H. Smathers, and others—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 198) to print Agricultural Report for 1894—to the Committee on Printing.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 1110) to correct the military record of Calvin Daniel;

A bill (H. R. 1461) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Andrew L. Grugett, as a former member of Company E, Sixth Tennessee Cavalry, in the war of the rebellion, and to grant him an honorable discharge therefrom;

A bill (H. R. 6634) to grant a pension to Edwin Overman, an insane child; and

A bill (H. R. 6902) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Susie Conway.

MARY BROWN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 920) to pension Mary Brown, of Berlin, Vt.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was, in line 8, after "volunteers," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That it be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that the soldier's death was a result of his military service.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives, and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PALMER, Mr. VILAS, and Mr. GALLINGER were appointed.

EARNEST C. EMERSON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 307) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was, in line 7 to strike out "at the rate of $12 per month" and insert "subject to the limitations and provisions of the act of June 27, 1890."

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives, and request a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PALMER, Mr. VILAS, and Mr. GALLINGER were appointed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of the Builders' Exchange, of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the passage of House bill No. 7564, defining the term "anarchist," and fixing penalty for crimes attempted by anarchists; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Stone Cutters' Association, of Canton, Ohio, praying that the sale of goods made by convict labor be confined to the State in which they are made; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Millers' Meeting, of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation legalizing railroad pooling; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of 39 citizens of Toledo, Ohio, and a petition of 27 citizens of Akron, Ohio, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, praying that preference be given in the retention and employment of Union veterans in the public service; which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented a petition of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, praying that an appropriation be made for the extermination of the gypsy moth; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to suppress the lottery traffic; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Henry E. Cobb and sundry other citizens of Suffolk County, Mass., and the petition of C. J. Green and sundry other citizens of Boston, Mass., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of U. S. Davis and 15 other citizens of Boston; of Andrew J. Wilson and sundry other citizens of Salem; of M. H. Minty and sundry other citizens of Boston; of John W. Jewett and sundry other citizens of Danvers; of William C. Burdick and sundry other citizens of Borden; of Herbert A. Rhoades and sundry other citizens of Cambridge, and of A. B. Cleveland, H. D. Rogers, and sundry other citizens, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I trust the Senate will pardon me for suggesting that upon looking over the questions which remain open in the bill they are more numerous than those disposed of on yesterday. Perhaps they do not involve considerations that will take anything like the time that some of the questions took on yesterday; but I sincerely hope that each Senator will consent and resolve that we shall dispose of the bill before adjournment to-day or to-night or whatsoever time we may reach the point of adjournment, in order that we may adjourn over to-morrow. I simply desire to submit the suggestion, having with some care looked at the questions which remain open. If we will economize time so far as we can consistent with proper consideration I am sure that we can get through with the bill by a reasonable adjourning hour.

I desire to take the liberty of submitting the suggestion. I shall not ask for any unanimous consent or attempt any coercive measure of any sort now or hereafter, but I appeal in all sincerity and earnestness to every Senator to let us try to dispose of the bill to-day, and before we adjourn to-day.

Mr. PLATT. I sympathize with the Senator from Tennessee, but for my own convenience I should like to ask him whether he would feel it to be his duty to ask the Senate to sit to-morrow if it should be found that the bill can not be finished this afternoon.

Mr. HARRIS. Consulting my own sense of duty and propriety I should stay here to any hour to-night or all day to-morrow and to-morrow night sooner than let the bill go over another day or days.

Mr. CULLOM. I think if we proceed at once with the consideration of the bill we shall get through with it to-day at a reasonable time.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope so. As far as I am concerned I am done, having said all I desire to say.

Mr. CHANDLER. I merely rose, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee, to call his attention to the fact that what might be called the short debates of yesterday occupied very little time. There were two or three speeches of considerable length made upon the Hawaiian reciprocity clause, but the Senate made rapid progress, as it seemed to me, with the bill—progress sufficiently rapid, as I think. While, as far as I am concerned, I am willing to go on as we did yesterday and am willing to finish the bill to-day if it can be so finished after all the debate which Senators desire to bring to the consideration of the bill, and if it is not disposed of to-day to dispose of it on Thursday, I certainly hope the Senator from Tennessee will on no account think of proceeding with the bill on the Fourth of July. I can not conceive of a worse work for the Senate of the United States to engage in than to continue the attack which this bill makes upon American industries on the day which signalizes American independence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraph 270, in the following words:

270. Burlaps, containing not over 40 threads to the square inch, counting warp and filling, 20 per cent ad valorem.

And insert after paragraph 424, page 98:

424½. Burlaps, and bags for grain made of burlaps.

Mr. CULLOM. I regret very much that the Senator from Texas sees proper to offer an amendment proposing to put burlaps and bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, etc., upon the free list. Both these are industries which are carried on in different parts of the country, to a considerable extent in my own State, and it does seem to me that as the policy of the Senate is to give some protection to almost all manufacturing industries, this industry ought not to be made an exception. I hope the Senate will think better of what should be done than to place both these articles upon the free list. The industry has been carried on in my own State for many years and it gives employment to a good many people who are laboring men. I hope the amendment proposed will not be adopted.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I wish to inquire whether the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota has not voted.

Mr. PALMER. I withhold my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and withhold my vote unless it is necessary to make a quorum. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], but will transfer my pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McLAURIN. I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], but I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS], and vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], but my vote being necessary to make a quorum, I vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], but I transfer my pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and vote "yea."

Mr. QUAY. I vote "nay" to make a quorum.

Mr. FRYE. Has the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is informed.

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland.

Mr. PASCO. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is necessarily absent, and is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I wish to make this announcement for all the votes that may be taken to-day.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire if the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. HOAR. I am paired with that Senator, but am authorized to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay." I shall withdraw my vote if it should change the result or if a quorum votes.

Mr. McMILLAN. I inquire if the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. McMILLAN. Although paired with that Senator, I am authorized to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE. For the purpose of making a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS (after having voted in the negative). I ask if the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. DUBOIS. I withdraw my vote, unless it is necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH], and vote "yea."

The Secretary recapitulated the vote.

Mr. HOAR (after having voted in the negative). I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. CHANDLER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allen,	George,	Jones, Ark.	Perkins,
Bate,	Gray,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Berry,	Harris,	McLaurin,	Roach,

Carey,	Higgins,	Murphy,	Wilson,
Chandler,	Hoar,	Palmer,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, paragraph 275, in line 17, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out after the word

"cuffs" the words "and shirts," and inserted "composed wholly or in part of linen, 30 cents per dozen pieces, and in addition thereto 30 per cent ad valorem; shirts;" in line 19, after the word "all," inserted "other," and in line 22 before the words "per cent" struck out "and linen hydraulic hose, thirty-five," and inserted "fifty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

275. Collars and cuffs, composed wholly or in part of linen, 30 cents per dozen pieces, and in addition thereto 30 per cent ad valorem; shirts and all other articles of wearing apparel of every description, not specially provided for in this act, composed wholly or in part of linen, 50 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of this amendment as made in Committee of the Whole. It imposes a duty of from 85 to 125 or 150 per cent upon the great industry of Troy, N. Y., where are factories making collars and cuffs. I trust that Senators upon this side of the Chamber will stand by this industry and this great exemplary protective duty, and I hope the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber will do the same.

It seems to me that it would have been better to have allowed paragraphs 270 and 271 to stand as they were before the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS]. I had hoped that the Senator from Texas would remain subdued during the remainder of the discussion of the bill, but he came into the debate yesterday, and, as I was standing in the rear of the Chamber, I heard the word "robber" proceed from his mouth. "Robber" is a favorite word with the Senator, and I supposed, of course, he was denouncing anew the robber tariff barons; but no, it seems he was denouncing the great and good President of the Hawaiian Republic, the peer among the nations of the Senator's President of the United States, once addressed by that President as his "great and good friend." The Senator from Texas turns from the denunciation of the manufacturers of New England as robbers to the denunciation of the President of a sister Republic as a robber!

The two sections as they stood before the Senator made his motion were admirable illustrations of the condition of the Democratic party. Here we had a product of a manufacturing industry in the United States placed upon the free list, while we have a duty upon the raw material from which that manufacture is derived. This was the condition, a very apt illustration of the principle upon which Senators on the other side of the Chamber were constructing this bill, one of the anomalies of the bill, or, perhaps, as some would call it, one of the beauties of the bill.

The Senators in charge of the bill put bagging manufactured from burlaps by machinery and hand labor upon the free list, and they put a duty upon the burlaps, the raw material of that manufacture, thereby utterly destroying the manufacture of bagging in this country. So no burlaps would be imported at all, the Government would get no revenue whatever, and the business of manufacturing bagging from burlaps in this country would be utterly blotted out and destroyed.

The illustration of the way this bill was framed was all the more striking, standing as it does within four paragraphs from the paragraph imposing a duty on collars and cuffs, which my amiable and industrious friend, the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], has succeeded in introducing into and retaining in this bill.

Mr. President, the so-called conservative Senators one after another have retired satisfied. We hear no more complaint from the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] or from the Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] or from the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], members of the conservative forces who were organized to defeat this bill as it came from the House of Representatives and also as it came from the hands of the Finance Committee. They have all disappeared. The Senator from New York stands triumphant before the people of Troy, before the people of his own State, and before the country as the author and defender and protector of a 125 per cent duty upon collars and cuffs; and now comes the Senator from Texas and destroys the best illustration of the way in which this bill has been constructed by Senators upon the other side of the Chamber, by changing the clauses as to bags and burlaps from a duty upon the raw material and no duty upon the manufactured article to an exemption of duty, putting both of them upon the free list.

Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from Texas has asserted himself in the final discussion of this bill. I hope the committee will take these three paragraphs into careful consideration before the bill passes from the Senate, or if the bill shall pass the Senate, and those Senators deal with these paragraphs in conference, I hope they will either put burlaps and bagging upon the dutiable list, or else that they will strike collars and cuffs out of the dutiable list.

Nothing can be more absurd than the vote which the Senate has just given to put bagging upon the free list and that which it will shortly give upon a yea-and-nay vote to put a duty of 125 per cent upon collars and cuffs.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] has fairly appreciated the modest course that has been pursued by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY] in this matter. He is inclined, I see, to be satirical upon the Senator. I think, on the other hand, he ought to praise the junior Senator from New York for having been so self-restrained in his demands upon this bill. That Senator represents with his colleague [Mr. HILL], who has been in and out of season fighting certain provisions of this bill, the greatest of the American Commonwealths, containing in its borders the greatest of industries by the score and hundreds and thousands, and hundreds of those industries are doomed to death by this bill.

The junior Senator from New York has been very modest in his demands upon the committee. He has not claimed that the great State of New York should be saved in this bill, and thereby added to the embarrassment and indeed consternation of the committee, but he has limited himself to this comparative little industry in his own town.

Mr. President, when the Senator from New York looks over all the great industries in his State to which he has paid no attention, and sees them sacrificed by this bill, for which he will vote, and knows that he had the power to exact greater conditions by far than he has, he must say to himself in the language of Clive, "I wonder, sir, at my moderation;" and we wonder at the moderation of the Senator from New York. He follows along and trails in the course of the committee and will vote for this bill, not because he has exacted from the committee protection for the numerous industries in his State and can go to his State with that record, but he is content with the little industry of collars and cuffs which wrap the wrists and the necks of a few or many American people, and which are manufactured in his own town.

There has been no such instance of moderation in this bill from the beginning as that exercised by the Senator from New York, and I congratulate the committee that the Senator from New York, whose vote is so essential upon this bill, has limited himself and his demands to what is contained in this provision.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the yeas and nays upon concurring in the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS], and vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], who is absent, but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and vote "yea."

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. POWER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. This announcement will govern to-day's voting.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to say that I have a general pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], but I have transferred that pair to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH], who is temporarily absent, and I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—43.

Allen,	Dubois,	Lindsay,	Perkins,
Bate,	Faulkner,	Lodge,	Pugh,

So the amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out paragraph 278, in the following words:

278. Wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals in the form of slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, mungo, shoddies, garnetted or carded waste, carbonized noils or other waste product, any of which is composed wholly or in part of wool, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, which has been improved or advanced beyond its original condition as waste by the use of machinery or the application of labor, or both, and carbonized wool, shall be subject to a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the striking out of the paragraph, if it is desired, because I wish to offer a substitute for it.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move a substitute for paragraph 278.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert as paragraph 278 the following:

278. Wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to make a last appeal to the Senate of the United States to give some protection to one of the great industries of our country. It is a class generally known as the fifth of the industries of the United States, including the manufacture of woolens. I have no doubt it fully comes up to that grade. It gives employment, not exclusive employment but general employment, to over a million farmers in the United States who are engaged in the growth of wool. It involves an annual product estimated at $125,000,000 under the former prices, probably under the prices now in force about eighty or ninety million dollars.

It is therefore a great industry. And yet this industry has been left solitary and alone without the slightest protection given to it, directly or indirectly. The manufacture of woolen goods is amply protected. Even yesterday amendments were proposed and adopted without dissent adding largely to the protection of manufactures of wool.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Ohio and his friends on the other side be content as to the duty on woolen goods now fixed and not undertake to raise them if we vote this tax on wool?

Mr. SHERMAN. As far as I am concerned I would propose no change in the woolen schedule except one, and that is in the next paragraph, where the rate ought to be the same as other grades of wool, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator believe his associates will take the same position?

Mr. SHERMAN. They may speak for themselves; I can only speak for myself. That is a part of the argument I intend to make.

Mr. GEORGE. I should be very glad to vote for the Senator's amendment if I supposed that it would not be made the ground of another claim to raise the duties on woolen goods.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before I get through the Senator, I think, will be answered.

Now, Mr. President, this is a proposition to levy a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem. I do not believe as a general rule in the principle of ad valorem taxes, because they are so easily evaded and are constantly evaded by importers of foreign goods.

Still, I propose it in order to attract at least one or two Democratic votes, because with two Democratic votes some protection may be given to wool. I intend to make the statement very emphatic, that if all protection to wool is denied by the Senate of the United States it will be done by the Democratic party. No member on this side of the Chamber will refuse to vote for a reasonable, for even a moderate, protection on wool. So far as I can gather from the votes that have been heretofore cast, every one of the so-called Populists will vote in that way. So that if this protection to wool and the farmers is denied it will be denied by a partisan and a unanimous vote against what I believe to be the opinion of a large number of Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

If this was only a small interest, a matter not involving many people or much money; unless it involved the destruction of a great interest, I would not be here pleading for what I ought rather to demand as a right, but I do ask it.

Now, what is the general principle on which we all agree—the fundamental principle in regard to taxation on imported goods? I think I can state it in a few words, and that even the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who is said to be a free trader, will agree with me in the general proposition I make. The true rule for tariff taxation is to levy a duty upon every article that competes with domestic production at a rate that will, with other duties, yield enough revenue to supply the current needs of the Government and at the same time maintain wages and prices at the American standard.

That was the old Democratic rule, acted upon since 1816, until the Democratic party disappeared from the control of our politics in 1860. It was the rule advocated by every Democratic President and especially emphasized by Gen. Jackson. Indeed, the very rule that I have stated here is substantially the declaration made by Gen. Jackson in his first message to Congress.

There is another rule equally binding, and that is that protection should extend to all branches of industry. It should apply not only to the workshop, to the mine, and to the farm. Every kind of industry of this country ought to be dealt with alike; there should be no discrimination. It is a great mistake to suppose that our tariff laws are intended for the protection of manufacturers only.

If it were confined only to manufactures, as a matter of course the great mass of the people all over the country, being farmers or miners, or engaged in various pursuits, would be indifferent to the general theory of protection; but it is because this rule is sought to be fairly and impartially applied to all branches of industry that it has taken a strong hold upon the popular mind and is now practically adopted by two-thirds of the people of the United States.

I say, therefore, you can not discriminate against the product of the farm in favor of the product of the manufacturing establishment, or in favor of the miner. All must be dealt fairly with upon the same general principle. The labor bestowed by the farmer, the manufacturer, and the miner should be equally protected to the precise extent and proportion as his labor contributes to the value of the completed article.

All the necessaries of life are made by the combined labor of different classes of people. Especially is this true in regard to clothing. The first want of human life is food; the second want is clothing; the next want is shelter. These are fundamental wants lying at the foundation of all industries. We must have food every day. We must have clothing according to the season. We must have shelter from storms. All the industries involved in producing food, clothing, or shelter ought to be alike protected. But from the nature of things shelter being locally established in our own land it needs no special protection, although the things that enter into the building even of a house ought to be fairly protected alike, so that the domestic manufacturer or producer of those articles should be protected to the extent of the difference in wages paid here and in countries competing with us.

So far as clothing is concerned, one-half of the expense and cost of clothing is in the wool that is contained in the cloths. That is a rule which may be applied generally, although not universally, because of late the adoption of cotton and other textiles have sometimes changed somewhat our clothing. More or less other articles enter into our clothing; but as a rule in every $200 worth of cloth that is brought into this country or manufactured in this country, one-half of the value is the work of the farmer; and that work is not merely an incidental work, like the opening of a mine or day's labor, but it is the work of the whole year.

The farmer bestows his work upon the sheep from the 1st of June of one year to the 1st of June of the next in winter and in summer. Every day's care is required more or less for the sheep raised by the farmer. His crop is only cut at the proper season of the year, and then alone can he receive anything for his toil and labor. This industry lies at the very foundation of the great industries of clothing, protection against cold. Under these circumstances the farmer ought to be protected to a reasonable extent. He ought to be protected equally with the manufacturer.

It is highly important that we should maintain in this country of ours the general manufacture of our clothing. Now, nearly all, I think three-fourths or four-fifths of the clothing used by the people of the United States, is home made. It used to be made by the hand loom in almost every family in the country, and now it is made in manufacturing establishments. We have built this up. It is right. The manufacturers contribute the other half to the value of the wool and thus make clothing. Is it not clear that the same degree of protection ought to be extended to the work of the farmer as to the work of the manufacturer? Undoubtedly it is.

Therefore it is that this appeal comes with double weight; and yet by the action of the committee on the other side, by the action of our Democratic friends all protection whatever is denied to the farmer. No provision is made in his favor. He is brought into hard and close competition with wool grown on the plains of Australia and South America and all other new countries, and he is now sacrificed by the action of the Democratic party. I wish it distinctly understood, and I shall show before I am through that by this act a blow will be struck by that party, a party which now abandons its principle, turns its back upon the declarations of the fathers of that party, and seeks to strike this blow and yet at the same time give to the manufacturers of woolens a liberal and proper duty for their protection.

Now, why should this discrimination be made? No man can answer. Undoubtedly if the farmer contributes one-half to the cost of the clothing and the manufacturer contributes the other half, the same rate of duty ought to be applied to both. For instance, in every $200 of clothing $100 is the product of the farmer; the other hundred is the product of the manufacturer. A duty of 30 per cent on the wool imported in competition with the farmer will yield a revenue to the United States of $30, and it will be a protection to the farmer to that extent. However, when the imported cloth comes here it is doubled in value. It is worth $200 by the addition of the skill of the manufacturer. When that comes into consumption in competition with the manufacturers of our own country we levy a duty of 30 per cent, or $60; so that under this principle, even by an equal rate of duty upon wool and woolens, we give to the farmer protection on his part of the product, and give to the manufacturer protection on his part of the product.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I ought to state in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio that the scoured wool in a suit of clothes which costs $20 would be worth $3 instead of $10, as the Senator from Ohio seems to think.

Mr. HARRIS. We can not hear the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. It takes 5 pounds of scoured wool to make a suit of clothes which would sell at from $15 to $20, and that scoured wool is worth in the market to-day about 60 cents a pound, making $3.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that be true, although I do not concede it, because I think the division of the value of wool and woolens is more equal, it is a still stronger argument in favor of the farmer. If he contributes only one-tenth to the cloth he ought to have the one-tenth of protection. If his labor does not contribute more than one-tenth to the finished product of wool, he is entitled to protection at the same rate.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. It is an argument in our favor.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is an argument entirely in our favor. I think the Senator from Rhode Island is mistaken, because I have seen it stated over and over again—it seems to have been conceded in the committee—that the value of the wool which enters into the cloth is equal to the value of the woolen goods. As a matter of course raw wool full of grease and other things has to be cleaned and scoured, and it is partially manufactured by the farmer. The farmers of Ohio as a rule send their wool into the market almost clear of grease or any other dirt; it is advanced by washing; but when it is further advanced for manufacture by scouring and by other processes, as a matter of course that is the labor of the manufacturer, and to the extent that he gives labor to this common product as a matter of course he ought to have the relative duty.

Mr. President, if the fair average rate of duty on all the articles on our tariff list is 30 per cent ad valorem, if it is found that 30 per cent ad valorem on the aggregate of our importations will yield us enough revenue from tariff duties to carry on the ordinary operations of the Government, that should be an average rate. But as a matter of course in applying this rule there are many things that by common consent ought to be admitted duty free, and many articles ought to be favored by higher duties, and thus the general average is preserved. In order to protect special American industries we should give still higher rates of duty. But whatever rule may be applied ought to be applied equally to the farmer and to the manufacturer.

The industry of woolgrowing in this country is of vital importance to the independence of the United States, to its security in time of war, to its success in time of peace. That is absolutely demonstrable. Every nation in the world ought to be at least independent in clothing. The shelter of the blanket for the soldier is as indispensable in war as in peace. Our fathers in the period of the war of 1812 suffered enormously because they had not the facility to manufacture woolen goods, and the home-made production of woolen goods increased largely on that account. It was felt to be an evil, because we could not during the war import blankets.

The production of a sufficient amount of wool in our country to supply the domestic needs is one of national importance; it is one that is demanded by us for safety in peace and necessity in war. There can be no doubt about that. It is an industry that must be maintained in the United States if we would be independent. As it is now we produce 303,000,000 pounds of wool. We import about 170,000,000 pounds of the coarser wool to mix with it to make carpets and the like. So that now we have established in this country an industry almost sufficient to supply our entire wants, and if a reasonable protection can now be given to wool we can raise in this country all the wool that is necessary for our consumption, because we have the advantage also of vast plains in the West.

We have the advantage of new parts of the country that may feed sheep at little cost and little expense. Most of the sheep now drift from the East to the West. The sheep industry is now established west of the Mississippi River. Nearly all—two-thirds—of the sheep in our country are now west of the Mississippi River. So this industry there may increase and multiply. Texas itself could supply a large amount of the coarser wools of the country.

By the way, I can say to the Senators who represent that State that I have telegrams and letters from highly respectable persons in different parts of the State, which I have not presented or bothered them with, earnestly petitioning Congress to give to the woolgrowers of Texas a reasonable protection—anything. They say they demand it. They can not compete single-handed without protection against other countries, when the freight and all other elements of cost are in favor of the producers in South America and Australia. I am therefore a little surprised that our friends from Texas do not see the importance of preserving this industry. But that is for them to say.

Now, Mr. President, there is one question which I wish to present, on which probably my friends on this side of the Chamber may differ with me, and that is that a very faulty proposition was adopted under the tariff act of 1867, which provided for what are called the compensatory duties in favor of the manufacturer; that is, the manufacturers insisted, in their conference with the woolgrowers, that they ought to have not only an equal rate of duty on manufactures, but an additional duty, so as to cover the rate imposed upon wool. The unfortunate yielding of this proposition undoubtedly led to much evil that has grown up since, and many complications that have arisen between the sheep-growers and the woolen manufacturers. Their interests are identical. Their interests are the same. They ought to cooperate together.

But the theory of a compensatory duty is unfounded in fact or in any just principle of the application of a tariff duty. Why was that? It was because in the tariff on wool and woolens they adopted specific rates of duty. Specific rates of duty can not properly be applied to an article so various in its value as the different grades of wool and woolens. Some woolens are worth only a few cents a pound. Some of them are worth $5 a pound. They vary greatly from one to the other. Some kinds of manufactures of woolen goods made of shoddy and other cheap material come into the market of a very low grade and at a very low price, while the fine cloth, the more careful manufacture of French broadcloth, comes into our country worth ten or twenty times as much per pound. It is therefore one of those articles to which specific duties can not be applied because of the vast variety and range of prices in the value of the different grades both of wool and woolens. When they undertook to apply the specific rate they gave to the farmer a certain rate of duty on wool.

Then they gave to the manufacturer the same rate. Assuming that 3 or 4 pounds of wool in its ordinary state were required to make 1 pound of wool fit to be manufactured into cloth, they claimed and demanded and received a duty on their woolen goods not only equal to the duty on wool multiplied by four, on account of the nature and character of the wool that was brought into the market, but they added to that a protective duty amply sufficient to protect them, by what is called a compensatory duty, on account of the duty on wool added to the duty on the manufactured article. It compelled the imposition of very high rates of duty, which tended to produce unpopularity and to create objection to this system.

I myself do not care what rates are put upon woolen goods. If I had my way I should have all the goods consumed in our country manufactured here at home. I should protect our manufacturers to that degree which would enable them to make all the cloth, fine and coarse, that is needed for the clothing of our people. That is my idea upon the subject of protection. I do not desire to cripple the woolen manufacturers of our country. I should build them up. I should give them ample duties so that they can make all needed woolen goods. Provided they would keep out of all combinations and have free and open competition with each other, there could be no danger in the highest rates of protection being given to woolen manufacturers. Fortunate it is that woolen manufacture is one of those things which can not live and prosper by combination.

All the factories in this country are competing with each other. They can not make such combinations as can be made in some other branches of industry. Therefore competition has already reduced the price, and an examination of the scale of prices will show that, in spite of high rates of duty, domestic clothes have gone down more and more by the open competition of our protected manufactures until now clothing is cheaper in our country than it ever was before. Although the rates of duty under the McKinley act and the act of 1867 were very high, the demand for those goods is so great and the competition between the various manufacturers scattered all over the United States is so great that the price has been reduced.

When you put on woolens an ad valorem duty of, say, 30, or 40, or 50 per cent, whatever it may be, you give to the manufacturer the full benefit of protection against foreign competition. He ought not and does not, I believe, ask that the farmer be deprived of his share of this protection. I am glad to say here in behalf of the woolen manufacturers of the United States that so far as I know there has been no opposition on their part to reasonable protection on wool. An effort has been made in my own State——

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Ohio a question at sometime?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Ohio is the most experienced person in this body on this subject with one possible exception, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]; he is a member of the Finance Committee of the Senate, and I wish to ask him if he knows or can think of anything that a New England Senator can do, or anything that he has failed to do, or any other course of conduct than that taken by New England Senators which would have helped to secure a duty on wool?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am glad to say that every representative of a manufacturing district, so far as I know, every Senator on this floor on this side of the Chamber has been from the beginning of this controversy to this hour in favor of giving to the farmer his share of the protection on wool. Every Senator on this side has voted for it. Both Senators from Massachusetts especially not only voted for it, but have spoken for it in the strongest language.

The interests of the woolgrower and the woolen manufacturer are identical. If you wrong one you injure the other, and I am glad to say that every Republican in this Chamber has over and over again voted for a reasonable protection to wool. If there is any Senator who belongs to what are called the manufacturing States who has any different opinion, I should like to have him express it now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Ohio if they did not, in 1890, vote for the 11 cents duty and the graduated duty on wool?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think they have always voted for adequate duties on wool. An impression has been endeavored to be created among the farmers of Ohio recently that the New England manufacturers were secretly opposed to the duty on wool. I am bound to say that there has never been the slightest evidence of that. Every expression, by word or by vote, has been in favor of giving to the farmers their full and fair share of protection. There may have been differences in regard to what is called the compensatory duty of which I have spoken, but those differences have gradually died away, and when you apply the ad valorem principle to the tariff on wool and woolens there can be no question whatever about it.

The duty of 30 per cent on wool and woolens would divide between the woolen manufacturer and the woolgrower the degree of protection. If, as my friend from Rhode Island says, the cost of the wool is a much less element, so much the better for this view of it. The farmer would only get by an ad valorem duty according to the value of the article when he turned it over to the manufacturer, and the manufacturer would get the benefit of the duty on the completed article, wool and woolen combined in the cloth. So that each contributor to this necessity of life would receive his fair share of the benefit of protection.

Now, I say to Senators on the other side of the Chamber that while I make this appeal earnestly I do not do it for mere political reasons. On the other side of the Chamber, as I know, there are several Senators who believe with me that this discrimination ought not to be made against the farmer. Although I have not conversed with these Senators or sought to influence their opinion, yet I know their opinions very well. The Senators on the other side can not answer the charge I make this day, that they are responsible for any evil that comes or any feeling that may arise in the minds of the farmers of the South as well as of the North that they will be responsible for this discrimination, and now when we have added to the protection given to the woolen manufacturer, that they can not find any reason why a reasonable and moderate protection ought not to be put upon wool. We import 173,000,000 pounds of wool. I suppose the ad valorem duty would hardly amount to 4 cents a pound. Now, suppose the duty is put on. Does it hurt anybody?

Mr. President, under these circumstances I appeal to our friends on the other side of the Chamber to disregard party lines. I appeal to every Senator on the other side who feels as I do that this discrimination against farmers should not be a part of this measure of the Democratic party. The wool industry is not an industry of Ohio alone, although we happen to raise the best sheep, and probably now the greatest number. They are being rapidly slaughtered, and under free trade the sheep will disappear rapidly as time goes on. Is it wise to impair or disturb so great an industry, in which are interested the farmers of all parts of our country? They are the lifeblood of our population, the safe anchor of our institutions, the men who never strike except through the ballot box, the men who obey the laws, and the conservators of the public peace? Is it wise to deny to them that protection which they unanimously desire, and which is granted to all other industries?

I sincerely hope that this little amendment, giving them but 30 per cent, copied from the Walker tariff act, will be given to them. One other clause ought to bear the same rate of duty, and that is all so far as I know. It is a question for the Senate to determine, whether any additional rate shall be given to the manufacturers of goods. I sincerely hope that under the circumstances, as the manufacturers have been well cared for, no effort will be made to increase any other items except those which are classed in the name of wool or the hair of the camel, alpaca, etc. The next paragraph to the one which I now move to amend is one of that character, relative to wool somewhat advanced, now fixed at 15 per cent, but certainly it ought to be placed at 30 per cent if my amendment is adopted.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a short time. I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] will be adopted. The deadliest blow which it is in the power of man to strike at the manufacturing prosperity of New England will be to put wool upon the free list. It is none the less deadly because it may be accompanied by some modicum of protection to manufacturers which will enable them to continue in languishing, feeble, brief, yet uncertain life for a time. If the policy of free wool be adopted and the men who have adopted it are to continue in national power, there should be written over the gate of every woolen factory in the New England States, "The feet of the men who have carried out the Western farmer are at the door ready to carry thee out also."

This is a blow at the principle of national independence, both in war and peace. It is a blow at what all the great statesmen of the early times, Federalist and Democrat, Republican and Whig alike, declared the very essential of national safety and independence. The nation that can not produce its own clothing, that can not clothe its armies in war, that can not clothe its citizens in peace without foreign assistance is as weak and defenseless among the nations of the earth as the flocks that we seek to protect would be weak and defenseless in an African desert among lions and tigers.

There can be no separation of the interest of the woolen manufacturer and the grower of wool. Every manufactured article of wool that comes in from abroad not only throws into idleness the manufacturing operatives of America who otherwise would have produced it, but condemns to a like idleness the farmer who to that extent would have grown wool. It makes no difference to the farmer of the West whether the wool which drives his flock out of existence is imported from abroad in the form of cloth or in the form of raw wool itself, except that possibly in one case he would find an American customer for the other product of his farm which he does not find in the other case.

I account it the worst policy in the world for the representative of any woolen manufacturing industry to undertake to preserve for a little while the life of his industry at the expense of the farmers of the country. That man must be blind, that intelligence must be dull as a weed that can suppose that it is possible to long preserve a protective system in this country with wool upon the free list. One of the leading advocates of this modern free-trade doctrine declared at a convention of free traders in New England a year or two ago what I have just said. He quoted Byron's lines:

> While stands the Coliseum, Rome shall stand;
> When falls the Coliseum, Rome shall fall,

And applied it to the protective duty upon wool, and there never before came so true an utterance from such a source.

Mr. President, this attack, under all circumstances unwise, unpatriotic, un-American, unstatesmanlike, as it is made to-day is wicked and indefensible, because you are striking at this industry of the American farmer in a bill crowded and packed with high protective duties. The bill which you are about to put upon its passage announces the principle that a high protective duty may be placed upon a necessary of life solely because it is the author's desire to get the favor of some single Democratic Senator. The favor of a single Democratic Senator is more important in the eye of Democratic statesmanship than the interest, the livelihood, the lifeblood of the great agricultural interests of the Northwest and the Pacific States.

Mr. President, I see signs that some of the Senators who are doing this thing are making arrangements for pursuading the American people, or the people of the West, if they can, that the men who vote for free wool are not the men who are chiefly responsible for it. I saw in the newspapers the other day an interview attributed to the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], which it is impossible to believe is correct, in which he said that the New England Senators had very ingeniously contrived to get wool put upon the free list. I can not believe that Senator ever made such an utterance. I am sorry that he is not present here to speak for himself.

Mr. President, the New England Senators represent a constituency pledged up to the eyes to the protection of the wool-raising industry of this country. They could not go home to face their constituents, they could not go home with any prospect or expectation of receiving the continued support, or even the continued respect of the States which sent them here, if they had failed to carry out the wishes of those States by doing their best to secure the imposition of a duty upon wool. And it seems to me a little curious that the fabricator of that interview attributed to the honorable Senator from Ohio should not have sagacity enough to see the absurd folly of putting into the mouth of a gentleman who, on a bill whose various provisions are determined by a majority of one or two, has himself voted against free wool every time the question was up, a declaration that the men who are responsible for free wool are not the men who voted for it, but the men who every time voted in solid column against it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask my friend a question. I ask whether, on the whole, he does not think that any two Democrats on that side of the Chamber could overthrow this infernal conspiracy by voting against this bill?

Mr. HOAR. I did not use the word "infernal," but it is a most admirable expression, which I thank the Senator from Ohio for using. They could overthrow it.

Mr. President, I wish to put this thing right, if it can be put right. I wish to ask the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], I wish to ask the honorable Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], I desire to ask the honorable senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], whether they, or either of them, can suggest anything which any New England Senator can do, or anything which any New England Senator has failed to do, to save this industry? If there be such a thing, I pledge myself, for one, to submit myself to their judgment and guidance, and to follow them to the end.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In order to correct what, I fear, may be a wrong impression among certain people in my State, I want to testify here and now, that the very strongest appeals which have been made in the Senate for a protective duty on wool have come from the Senators representing the manufacturing States. There has nothing occurred here, so far as I am able to see, that would indicate in the slightest degree any disposition, either directly or indirectly, on the part of any of those Senators to prevent the placing of a proper duty upon wool; but, on the contrary, everything that has occurred has been in the other direction. In a word, the whole force of the Republican party in the Senate, without a single exception, has been in favor of retaining some proper duty on wool.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, in behalf of California, I desire to bear the same testimony which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has given. California produced in 1893 a larger number of pounds of wool than any other State in the Union, and the New England Senators, representing the manufacturing States of New England and of the North, have stood manfully by this great industry of the West.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to say for myself now that, as one New England Senator, I am ready to put myself under the direction of those Senators who especially represent the desire to obtain a duty upon wool. I will follow them in any course of action which they think is necessary to obtain that duty or to defeat the bill if that duty be not given.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, what the Senator from Connecticut has said for himself I have already said for myself, and I am quite sure, if my colleague were present, he would say the same thing.

Mr. GALLINGER. And so would every New England Senator.

Mr. HOAR. And, as the junior Senator from New Hampshire says, so would every New England Senator.

Mr. President, a question has been put from the other side of the Chamber—it was put just now by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to the Senator from Ohio—"If we will put a duty on wool will you accept it, without insisting upon a higher duty upon the manufactures of wool?"

That was a very ingenious question, but the answer to it requires no ingenuity. We go for a duty upon wool, which is the present question. We make no terms; we ask no conditions; we demand no bargain. Put the proper duty on wool by your vote, and the question of the proper duty on manufactures of wool will be settled hereafter, if it has not been settled already by the justice of the American Senate. We do not impose that condition or any condition, but we ask this thing to be done now. The other schedules of the bill will be dealt with when they come to be dealt with under all the facts.

We understand very well that the Democratic party has yielded, either to argument or to political necessity, a great deal of protection in this bill. Whether protection should be yielded to wool of course depends upon that party. But here is the Republican party, thirty-seven strong in this body, and here are two or three or four Senators belonging to a different party, for whom, of course, I have no title to speak, but who are in favor, as their votes show, of a duty on wool. Here they are ready to vote for it, without a bargain, without a condition, without entering upon the question now what ought to be done a year hence or an hour hence. Add to that force of thirty-nine or forty-one, two from your side of the Chamber, and the thing is done. Let the junior Senator from Ohio come with a single companion on his arm to the rescue of this amendment of his colleague, on which the industries of his State depend as for their life, and there is nobody to make a bargain with him, there is nobody to throw obstacles in his way; and the thing is done.

Mr. President, if the woolen manufacture of New England is to live, let it live in honor. If it is to die, let it die in honor, in such honor, at least, as a death at the hands of the Democratic majority renders it possible to any dying industry; but let it not be preserved by any base deed, by any evil principle, or by any bargain of shame.

This is the simplest thing in the world. Here are thirty-nine men, I suppose forty-one, though I do not undertake to speak for others than the Republicans—ready, without a bargain, without a condition, without a pause, without a delay, to give a reasonable, decent, and adequate protection to this great industry of the Northwest. Bring over your two men to go with us, bring over enough men to go with us, and the thing is done.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Would it not be better for all to come and go with us and do the right thing?

Mr. HOAR. But if you fail and refuse, take the responsibility like men, and do not go on the stump next fall, do not whisper in the ears of the newspaper correspondents this afternoon, "We who voted against free wool were all for it, and the men who voted and spoke for it were really all against it."

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, this is a protective tariff bill. It has none of the elements of a tariff for revenue which are not contained in all protective tariff bills. It protects what is commonly called raw material equally with the highly finished article. It protects coal and iron and every great industry that is found along the Eastern seaboard.

The section of country most interested in wool is the mountain region of the West. That is the natural home for sheep, and it is a country entirely similar to those countries with which we have to compete in this industry. We have not as low a scale of living as have those countries which compete with us; wages are much higher here; the necessities of life are much greater; we have not been accustomed to living on the low diet and scanty clothing and receiving the miserable wages of those who are competing with us in the sheep industry. The question of transportation is not in our favor, but is rather against us.

Our section has been struck almost a fatal blow, our principal industry has been destroyed. It is no satisfaction to me to know that the blow which struck us is rebounding from us and striking all humanity alike, but in a protective bill it seems hard that the country upon which the fatal blow at humanity was struck, and which is now prostrated, should be deprived of almost its only remaining industry. We are compelled to buy clothing in a protected market, of which I am not complaining, but there is nothing that we produce which is protected. The slight protection on borax and on lead is in effect nothing; it has been reduced so low that it is of little use.

But the great industry of the people of this intermontane region, composing nearly two-fifths of the entire area of the United States, which has now started up, is to be discriminated against and stricken down; and I want to call the attention of my Democratic friends to the fact, without inquiring whose fault it is, that three States, which are virtually interested in this question, are not fully represented in this body. If they were here, you could not do it.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada or some other Senator a question. I am informed—and he can tell whether or not I am correctly informed—that the sheep-herders and sheep-growers of the Northwest pay nothing for pasturage?

Mr. STEWART. That is partially true and partially not true.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it not true to the extent of 90 per cent?

Mr. STEWART. It is largely true.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it 90 per cent true?

Mr. STEWART. I will state the facts in regard to it.

Mr. MORGAN. It is nearly an exception where the sheep-grower has to pay anything for pasturage.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Our sheep-growers have to pay for five herders where they have to pay but for one in Argentina and in Australia, and we have to pay four or five times the amount of wages paid in those countries.

Mr. STEWART. Let me state the facts.

Mr. MORGAN. I have seen the pastoral herders out there, and I should think that an ordinary community ought to pay a sort of bonus to have them taken out of it, so far as those whom I have seen are concerned. Now I want to ask another question.

Mr. STEWART. Let me answer that one first.

Mr. MORGAN. After a herd of sheep has passed over the pasturage, will cattle take the grass there any more until a new crop grows?

Then I want to ask the Senator whether he claims in favor of the Northwestern sheep-herder the right of free pasturage, also a duty upon wool, and also a monopoly of grazing, so that cattle will not and can not feed upon the same grass? That is the way it strikes me.

Mr. STEWART. Then the Senator from Alabama would exterminate the industry on the ground that it is not useful.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator will allow me to say that I would not join the cattle men in exterminating the sheep men, for there is a war of extermination between them anyhow.

Mr. STEWART. That, like all other industries, is harmonizing itself. The sheep men have enough to contend with, and the cattle men have enough to contend with, but they are fast harmonizing their difficulties. The sheep men are acquiring land and making arrangements to keep their herds on the land. There was almost a war of extermination between the two some years ago, but that has ceased. The sheep men, as I have said, are acquiring their lands and regulating their herds so as to keep them within bounds.

That is an industry which is growing up. When the heavy storms came a few years ago and we had a very bad season, it was ascertained that it was easier to sustain sheep than cattle during such a season. The cattle men branched out too much, and they lost their cattle by the hundreds of thousands in the mountains of Nevada, Wyoming, Montana, and Idaho, where they perished, because the cattle-owners undertook to monopolize the whole country and not provide for their cattle in the winter. The cattle and sheep raisers are now changing their methods. If the sheep industry is allowed to exist, it will be carried on on their own lands, and the sheep-growers will have their homes there. If the cattle industry be allowed to exist, which it will, it will exist on ranges belonging to the cattle men, and the conflict will then soon harmonize itself.

There is no reason, I say, for Congress to take sides in the adjustment of this question between the cattle men and the sheep men. The sheep industry is a very important one; it is more profitable than the cattle industry, and there is no reason why it should be exterminated by this bill.

As I remarked before, there are three States which are not fully represented here, and if they were here you could not do this thing to us. It would be out of your power to do it.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. If the Senator will allow me, I want to say what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] is too modest to say. He is one of the largest cattle-growers in the West, a man who is no sheep-grower, and yet he is here pleading just as earnestly as the Senator from Nevada is and as I am and as have been all the Republican Senators here, to put a duty upon wool.

Mr. STEWART. The northern and eastern portion of Nevada is as good grazing ground as any in the United States or in the world. I do not know a cattle man in that section of country who is not in favor of a duty on wool and in favor of allowing the wool industry to succeed—not one. They have had their conflicts, but I am pretty familiar with the cattle men and with the sheep men, and I am sure their differences will be harmonized and the industry of growing sheep will be prosecuted, unless it is stricken down here. Many of the cattle men have sold their herds and gone into the sheep business, because it is more profitable, and there is no difficulty now that will not be settled by them.

I know that the cowboys for a time were very harsh on the sheep men, and they were harsh on the cattle-raisers. They ran their stock over homesteads and fences and all that, but as civilization advances, the right and title to land is acquired and all these troubles cease.

I say again that that section of country is peculiarly adapted to the wool industry. It is a great industry; it ought not to be stricken down here, and particularly it ought not to be stricken down when the States most vitally interested are only partially represented here. It seems like taking advantage of their absence and striking a blow at an industry which will not be forgotten.

I have taken very little interest in this tariff bill; I have said very little, and I have voted very seldom on the amendments to it. I do not believe that it will reach the evil which is destroying our civilization. The fact that, with our boasted intelligence, we should vote to destroy one-half of our metallic money at a time when the output of gold is substantially consumed in the arts is marvelous. Many nations have gone into barbarism because they had no metallic money on account of the failure of the mines; but no people in any age of the world ever committed hari-kari by destroying the basis of their circulation and credit. I am aware, whatever may happen to this bill, that this process of subtraction must go on, that prices must fall and continue to fall, compared to the gold standard. I am aware of the difficulties that will arise in this country in reducing wages to the level of Asiatic wages and the wages of some of the countries of Europe. I am aware of what the gold standard will do. There is no doubt about that.

This bill, whether it passes or fails, will be but a feather's weight; it will not stay the downward tide, the inevitable consequences of a shrinking volume of money. It is said your bank vaults are plethoric with money. Why? Because property is falling and nobody has confidence in property; nobody believes in it any more. Let it be known that $10,000,000 a month will be issued from the Treasury Department for the next five years and the banks would be drained in the next three days. Everybody would know that property would go up and there would be confidence in it, confidence in human labor, confidence in progress. That is the kind of confidence we want. When there is confidence in property it is a good thing to have, and it will go up. If men can not get money on property there can be no confidence in the country. No confidence can exist when wealth is shrinking in value in comparison with money.

No motive can be held out by this bill or by the McKinley act to a distressed people that there will be less depression, that if they create property they can make money out of it, that they can sell it for more than they gave for it; and until they have that feeling, the process of decay, the process of stagnation, the process of ruin will go on.

Let me say that I sympathize most sincerely with the manufacturers, with all men engaged in enterprises in this country, with all captains of industry. I sympathize with them because they have a task to perform which is greater than ever was undertaken by man before; they have a task to perform in reducing wages under the gold standard to bring our people on a level with the coolies of Asia. The American people will resist it.

This generation can not be subdued to submit to the conditions of the gold standard without a struggle. You men who are engaged in this struggle to put wages down will find a stubborn resistance. The poor men who struggle against it are doomed in the end and must ultimately perish, for their efforts will be unavailing.

As sure as the sun rises and sets, if the volume of money continues to contract, all values must shrink under it, employment must cease, starvation must be the rule, until our people come to a condition when they can live upon rice and rats, upon which many human beings are compelled to subsist. It is a war upon our higher civilization. When you lower wages, do you tell me that while prices are falling and the money of the world is pooled there can be prosperity from any bill you may pass?

I said before that protection and the gold standard can not stand together, for the gold standard contains that leveling-down principle which will destroy the barriers of protection. The poor people who buy your exports must buy in the cheapest market or perish. With the gold standard, with this international money, we are not a nation, but we are a province governed by a foreign money power, which makes conditions for us that we can not resist. While you adhere to that policy, pass this bill or do not pass it, the same condition of falling prices and hard times must continue. You may have temporary relief; people may think they can do something; business may start up a little; but the downward progress toward a lower state of living and a lower grade of civilization must be continued.

The advocates and the high priests of the gold standard especially do not deny that gold has appreciated from 50 to 60 per cent, and they say that it ought to; that it enables wealth to govern and make governments secure, and it avoids the insecurity arising from the democratic principle. Give opportunities to all, and the great mass of the people will become rich and independent. Take those opportunities away and they become poor and dependent.

The governing money power of Europe want the masses of the poor kept dependent, so that they can restore the ancient order of despotism and aristocracy. This is not only a war for the few to absorb the wealth of the world, but it is a contest to destroy free government everywhere; to take away the opportunity of the young men of this country to make an independence for themselves, and to destroy free government here; and when it is destroyed here by the iron hand of gold contraction it will be destroyed everywhere. If we can not resist, how can the downtrodden people of Europe resist who live in a great military camp, for every European nation is a military camp, each sustaining the other to increase taxation, to reduce the people to a lower state of living, to make the poor who produce the wealth subsist on less and less every year.

That is what is before us, and that is why I can not take an interest in a bill which does not promise relief; that is why I do not feel at home here in contending for nonessentials, when I see the condition into which this country is plunged by the fatal, the inexcusable blunder or crime, whichever it may be, of destroying one-half of the metallic money of the world and reducing the masses of the people to the level of serfs by falling prices, which will put down wages and which will put down everything. They may exist for a time. I glory in their spirit of contending for their rights; and they may do many wrongs; but they will accomplish nothing. I sympathize with them, and I sympathize with the business men who are under the necessity of subjecting the people of this country to lower wages, to starvation wages, to a lower position in life. It is a struggle which ought not to go on in a free government; it is a struggle which ought to be stopped here and now.

I appeal to Senators on all sides to wake up to the condition of this country, to see the trouble and distress which is everywhere abroad, and to find a remedy for it. Do not think it is in sugar trusts or collars and cuffs, in the lead trust, or in all these things. Individuals may profit by them, but the great mass of the people have no interest in any of your discussions here. The tariff does not reach the evil; it does not mitigate the evil. It will not do for us to close our eyes to what we see before us.

I appeal to the Senate and to the American people to wake up to the danger of destroying this civilization by this fatal and subtle scheme of depriving the people of money, which is the instrumentality of progress. Without money nothing can be done. Rob a man of money and he becomes a coward; he will submit to any condition. After one generation people will submit to be slaves for the sake of their families. No people are brave enough to resist conditions of that kind. We know that the bravest men who have ever lived have been compelled to yield under such circumstances; the descendants of the conquerors of the world have been sold as serfs. With his family and the little ones dependent upon him, a man will accept such conditions as will sustain life. That is where we are going.

Here from this wider field of observation, when we see that this blow has struck humanity everywhere, that millions are thrown out of employment in every country, and that suffering is abroad everywhere, it is time that we took heed and adopted the proper remedy.

But while this is going on, we have a tariff bill which discriminates against one section and in favor of another; which strikes a fatal blow at the remaining industry of our section, where they might raise a little wool and sell it for enough to clothe their children and prolong their existence, and you even take that away from them by this discriminating bill. I do not feel that there is any principle about it. You have protected other materials much rawer than wool. This discrimination is made not because wool is a raw material. Nobody will believe that. There must be some other reason for it; and I beg of you do not do it now, when three States vitally interested—Wyoming, Montana, and Washington—have not a full representation here to defend their interests.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, we have now reached probably within two or three days, or less, of a final vote upon the pending measure.

Mr. PUGH. Say "hours."

Mr. DOLPH. I do not wonder that Senators on the other side of the Chamber get impatient. They do not like to have this bill discussed and its enormity shown, and every vote they are compelled to make on amendments like this is very disagreeable to them no doubt.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask whether it would be convenient for him at this time to state what his view is as to the principle upon which the other side are constructing this bill?

Mr. DOLPH. I have attempted that once or twice in response to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire, and if I have not succeeded in enlightening the other side by this time I fear I shall not be able to do it, because I confess since I attempted it I have been rather confused myself.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether he thinks the bill is being constructed now in these final hours upon the same basis he thought it was being constructed on six weeks ago?

Mr. DOLPH. It is very hard to say upon what principle this bill has been and is being constructed. That matter has been sufficiently referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] this morning.

Mr. President, I was about to say that this measure is fraught with more danger and disaster to the prosperity of this country than any other measure that has been considered by Congress in the last quarter of a century. In 1887, after this country had enjoyed a period of nearly a quarter of a century of unexampled prosperity under the protective system, President Cleveland sent to Congress his celebrated free-trade message, advocating tariff reform, advocating free raw materials, advocating free wool. The result was the introduction in the House of Representatives of what is known as the Mills bill, which was passed through that body by the liberal use of Federal patronage and the refusal of Federal patronage to those who opposed the policy of the Administration in regard to the tariff. It came into the Senate and the majority of the Senate being Republican it prevented the passage of the bill through the Senate, and saved the country from the disaster which it would have carried to every industry of the country if it had become a law.

The result of the passage of the Mills bill in the House of Representatives and the threat to our industries by the Democratic majority in the House was that the Republican party secured a majority in the House of Representatives, elected a Republican President, and retained its majority in the Senate, and, in accordance with the declaration of the Republican party, contained in its national platform and its promises to the country, proceeded to revise the tariff.

It proceeded to correct the defects which experience had shown existed in the existing law. It proceeded to reduce the duties on certain articles imported into the United States and to increase the tariff on certain other articles. It proceeded to revise the tariff in the interest of the United States as against the interest of Great Britain and Europe. It proceeded to revise the tariff in the interest of the people of the United States instead of the people of Europe, and I to-day have no apologies to make for the McKinley law. It was what the Republican party promised. It was what the people demanded in the Presidential election that resulted in the election of Mr. Harrison.

Gross misrepresentation upon this floor during the discussion of the McKinley law, and the silence of Senators on this side of the Chamber who were anxious to reach a vote upon the bill and to secure its passage, and therefore refrained from discussing it, and gross misrepresentation by the newspapers of the country, caused the election of a Democratic majority in the House of Representatives. These misrepresentations helped to cause general discontent among the working classes and to make them believe that their condition was in some measure due to a protective tariff, and that general discontent at the last Presidential election caused the reëlection of Mr. Cleveland and placed both branches of Congress in the power of the Democratic party.

The Democratic party had declared in its national platform at Chicago that protection was robbery and unconstitutional; it had virtually declared for the destruction of our protective policy; and when the Presidential election resulted in elevating Mr. Cleveland to the Presidency and giving the control of both branches of Congress to the Democrats, and that fact became known; when the country came to understand that the Democratic party was not only to be in control of the other House, but had a majority in the Senate of the United States, then the threat of free trade, then the threat of the destruction of the protective policy had its legitimate effect upon the industries of the country.

It was that threat of the Democratic party, coupled with the known power of the party to execute it, that prostrated our industries, that closed our factories and mills, that threw millions of our people out of employment, that caused the suspension of banks and financial stringency, that stopped consumption, that diminished our imports, that diminished our revenue, that bankrupted the Government—a condition which has continued ever since Mr. Cleveland was inaugurated.

Our Democratic friends say, "Why, all this has occurred under the McKinley law. It was the McKinley law which produced this effect." I pity the man who will make such an argument as that. The McKinley law produced revenue enough to successfully conduct the affairs of this Government, and with a Republican Administration, with a party in power that believes in the protection of American industries and American labor, the McKinley law would have continued to produce sufficient revenue and would have continued to give this country that prosperous condition which it enjoyed from the time of the passage of the McKinley law until the result of the last Presidential election became known. And now we are upon the threshold of the consummation of the great crime proposed by the Democratic party against the industries and against the people of this country.

I thought that I had discussed this bill enough, all that it was profitable to discuss it, because I believe that it is to be passed. I believe that we are to have free wool. This great industry of our country is to be destroyed. But I have determined to make one more appeal to the Democratic majority in this body, one more appeal for this one great agricultural interest of this country to the majority in the Senate, inasmuch as they have abandoned largely, as the bill has been under consideration in the Senate, their policy with regard to raw materials, their policy in reference to the protective system, to at least give this industry a chance to live, a chance to be preserved until the Republican party can be restored to power and reimpose duties upon wool, so that the industry may be continued.

I understand this amendment proposes a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem on wool. Even that would be an insufficient duty. It would not make the wool industry profitable, but it might enable the flock owners of my State to keep their sheep from the slaughter-pen until there is a change in the political complexion of this body and the wrong that is about to be consummated can be remedied.

Mr. President, I desire to state the principle upon which I shall vote for the pending amendment, believing that the protection afforded would not be sufficient to make the industry profitable. From the start, when I could not get by an amendment offered by myself or others what I thought was fair protection to an industry I have voted for every amendment that in my judgment would make the bill better.

Yesterday, when I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], a Senator on the other side said to me, "Now, we have got you on record; we have got your party voting for a duty on sugar." Mr. President, that argument will not do. The minority had voted for free sugar. We had voted for every amendment offered to change the bill in the interest of the consumers of the product and we are ready to vote as we have voted. If we can not get what we want, we will vote for every amendment which in our judgment would improve the bill. Let no man say, if I vote for this amendment, "You voted to reduce the duty on wool from the McKinley rate to 30 per cent ad valorem." I voted in this body for the McKinley bill. I will vote for McKinley rates on wool, or a higher duty if I have an opportunity, but if I can not get protective rates I will take anything that I can get in this bill that will better it or to help the woolgrowers of my own State. Therefore I propose to vote for this amendment.

But as I have said I do not suppose that anything I can say, I do not believe that anything that the eloquent Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] or from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] have said, or that has been said by other Senators on this side, or that will be said upon this question, will affect the majority of the Senate. Several times since I have been a member of this body the Senate has voted upon the question of free wool, and as I said the other day, I think with one or possibly two exceptions on every occasion every Democratic Senator has voted to place wool on the free list.

Mr. President, how can the Democratic majority in this body defend their position? They claim to be in favor of free raw material, and they have placed a duty upon iron ore, and upon coal, and upon all raw materials that I can now recall, all that that they call raw materials but lumber and wool. They claim to be the friends of the farmer. They have denounced time and time again in this body and elsewhere the Republican party because it believed in the protective policy. They have denounced the Republican party because they claimed that they fostered the manufacturing industries, cotton manufacturing, and iron and steel manufacturing, and helped to support and make rich the robber baron manufacturers. The have denounced the Republican party because, as they asserted, its legislation was not in the interest of the agriculturists, the farmers, and the laboring men: and now when they come to pass a tariff bill, a bill to reform the existing tariff laws, they yield and favor every industry but the industries of the agriculturists and those which particularly interest the laboring man.

They give a reasonably satisfactory tariff to the manufacturers of iron and steel. They give us such a satisfactory cotton schedule that it passed through the Senate as in Committee of the Whole in thirty minutes without objection. They maintain certain protective duties upon woolen manufactures. In fact, no manufacturing industry is too great or too small to at least receive some concessions from the Democratic party, whether those concessions are sufficient, whether the duties provided are sufficiently protective or not; but when we come to this great industry of the American farmers, the woolgrowing industry, it is to be absolutely destroyed. Wool is to be placed upon the free list. The sheep are to be driven to the slaughter pen. We are to depend on foreign markets for our wool until the industry is destroyed in the United States, and then be at the mercy of the foreign producers as to the price of wool in the United States.

I repeat, how can you defend yourselves? What answer can you make to the American farmers when they charge you with having destroyed this great industry? There are 47,000,000 sheep in the United States. There are 2,500,000 sheep in Oregon. There are probably 10,000 persons in Oregon directly dependent upon this great industry for support, and three times that number indirectly interested in it. In fact every man, woman, and child in this country is interested in the woolen industry; for I tell you it is a mistake to suppose that you can strike down one industry in this country unless the blow falls upon every other industry. You can not destroy the prosperity of a class in this country unless you strike a blow at the prosperity of every other class. Our friends on the other side have asked of me, and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] has asked, why should we not prosper with free trade with Canada and other countries if the States of this Union prosper with free trade?

Mr. President, this is one country, and we have one Constitution and one flag, and the citizen of Texas or Florida is as much a part of this country, as much interested in the prosperity of this country as the citizen of Oregon or of Massachusetts. We are one family. Our interests are interdependent. The prosperity of the whole Union is dependent upon the prosperity of every State. You can not strike a deadly blow at an industry in the State of Oregon but it is felt in every other State of the Union. The power to regulate commerce, the power to protect industries was conferred by the Constitution upon Congress to be used for every State, and every citizen, and every industry. It is the duty of Congress when we legislate upon this question to legislate for all industries and all citizens.

I repeat, it is a mistake to suppose that you can strike blows at the industry of the North and the South will not feel the effect. It is a mistake to suppose that because the thirteen Southern States have only 20 per cent of the sheep of the whole Union you can destroy the wool-growing industry without striking a deadly blow at the prosperity of the South. It is one country. If we are prosperous at all it must be one prosperity, a prosperity like that which for the last thirty years has prevailed in this country, which has caused the wave of civilization to roll westward over Western prairies and mountains until it has reached the Pacific coast, which has caused prosperity to invade the South and extend over the Great Lakes to the Gulf, to open new industries, to open mines, erect factories, build railroads, and give employment to the people of the South. It is idle to suppose that you can promote the prosperity of a section by destroying the industries of another section.

Mr. President, it is not only the people who are engaged in producing wool who are interested in this amendment and in this question. The people who herd the sheep, the people who shear them, the people who transport the wool to the railway stations, the people who transport it the great manufactories of woolen cloths, the people who are employed in the manufacture of cloth, are all interested in this industry, and not they alone. Take the industry in Oregon where there are great flocks of sheep in remote portions of the State. The existence of this industry creates a demand where there would be none for agricultural products, for hay and grain to feed the sheep. So when you strike down this great industry in my State, you absolutely destroy the prosperity of the State.

It does not take the destruction of every industry in the State to destroy the general prosperity. Let the wheat crop be short by reason of drought and there be no surplus in my State; let wool be so low that it can not be profitably raised and transported to the markets; let the fruit crop be a failure—any one of these calamities is sufficient to destroy the prosperity of the State for a year.

Some questions were propounded by the Senator from Alabama to the Senator from Nevada about pasturage. Every sheep owner in the State which I have the honor in part to represent is compelled to own his own ranch. He must have his own establishment, his own buildings; and there may or may not be in the range upon which his sheep graze public lands on which they can feed. If that condition exists to-day it will not exist long; but the question as to whether the pasturage is free or what is the cost of pasturage in the United States is immaterial. Everybody knows who has examined the question, or may know if he cares to examine it, that the sheep industry can not be preserved in the United States with wool on the free list. Everybody knows that our sheep-growers and producers of wool can not compete with the woolgrowers of the Argentine Republic, of Australia, and other countries on account of climate, on account of price of labor, on account of pasturage, on account of less care required for sheep in those countries. It is immaterial to inquire what the conditions are in this country. Our sheep-growers are at such a disadvantage that they can not compete with foreign countries with free wool. I say to our friends on the other side of the Chamber that if you pass this bill two years from now instead of there being 2,500,000 sheep in the State of Oregon there will not be half a million sheep there. The industry can not be continued with free wool. The sheep are owned at great distances from the means of transportation. Wool has to be transported by teams for many miles to reach the railroad or reach the river; and the cost of transportation to the seaboard, if the wool goes west by sea, or even if it comes east, is much larger than in most other portions of the country. It is so great that by the time the cost of raising and shipping and transportation are paid there will be nothing left whatever for the owner of the sheep, and no inducement for him to continue the business, and the sheep will be sold; they will be driven to the portions of the country nearer to market, or be driven to the slaughter-pen. Then, as the sheep are owned remote from large cities, they are not where lambs can be profitably marketed, and the industry must be destroyed.

Why do you persist in destroying this great industry of the great Northwest? Why insist on striking this deadly blow at the farmers of this country? Why persist in doing the thing which will deprive millions of laboring men of employment in this country? After you have made reasonable concessions to other industries, to many of the great manufacturing industries, why insist on still demanding that there shall be no duty placed upon wool?

But, Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this question further. I did not rise with any idea that anything I could say would benefit my constituents or the farmers of this country. I fear that this great industry is doomed and that the only hope for the farmers, the only hope for the laboring men of this country, the only hope for the protection of this industry and the protection of other industries in which they are especially interested, the only hope of placing these industries upon an equality with the great manufacturing interests of this country, the iron and steel industries, and the cotton manufacturing industry, is the restoration to power of the party which believes in the protection of American labor and American industries.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, I wish to occupy but a few minutes of the time of the Senate. When the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] was giving us his very sincere and well-justified wail of woe over the destruction of the wool industry, it occurred to me that he might have gone further for the general section which he represents and classified lumber with wool, and then asked what is the explanation of the phenomenon that of all the large industries of the country it is wool and lumber which have been selected for slaughter? How is it that on this, possibly the final day of the preliminary action of the Senate upon this measure, those two great industries, peculiar to the section which he in part represents, are, so to speak, left outside of the breastworks?

Why is it that wool is not protected when coal, iron, sugar, woolen textiles, cotton textiles, rice, oranges, collars and cuffs, and all the other wide range of industries which make this measure in part a protective bill are protected? I think it is clear. The section of country which is hardest hit by the proposed destruction of wool and lumber is the section represented on this floor by the Republican Senators from silver-producing States, and they early in this debate elected the course they would take. They frankly proclaimed it and have honestly lived up to it, and no one more than the Senator from Nevada himself, who yesterday sat silent and did not vote on the crucial votes on amendments to the bill. It was by no such course that a duty was put on coal, iron, and collars and cuffs, and on sugar. It has been proclaimed and confessed upon the other side by the committee that they have been held up.

It did not seem right nor did it seem to comport with the sense of duty of the majority of the Republicans upon this side in the debate on the silver-repeal bill last summer to join in the obstructive and long protracted debate of the Senators who united with the Senator from Nevada in the course which he took. It has looked as if the interests for which the body of the Republican party have stood on this floor were to be paid back in their own coin. We did not take part in that fight for silver; and so our hands have not been held up in the strongest way by the Senator from Nevada and those who think with him. If they had been, the bill would not now have reached the stage it has. The bill would not become a law if the Republican Senators from silver-producing States had chosen to have stood with their fellows for whatever might be needed to be done to defeat this measure. It could have been done.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Delaware whether he means by that statement that the Republican Senators from the silver States have not voted on this question as their party lines indicated?

Mr. HIGGINS. I meant in part the utterance of the Senator from Colorado, when he stated on the floor that he would always be one to make a majority on this floor for the Democracy.

Mr. TELLER. I did so state, and I intend so to do. I believe that the majority had a right to pass some kind of a tariff bill. I did not intend to be party to any unnecessary and improper delay; and I am quite willing to take the responsibility of that position.

Mr. HIGGINS. I so understand, and I am obliged to the Senator from Colorado for stating in his own words what I was endeavoring to say, and wanted to know where he stood. It is that course which has landed the bill where it is to-day, and it is that course which is responsible for the sacrifice of wool. The section of country whose representatives elected to take that course is the section where the wool industry of the North is the largest and most exclusive. There is woolgrowing in Ohio, but there are a great many other interests in Ohio.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me?

Mr. HIGGINS. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator point out to the Senate what the Republicans in the Senate could have done that they have not done since the commencement of the discussion of the bill, which, in the opinion of the Senator from Delaware, would have resulted in getting a duty on wool?

Mr. HIGGINS. The same course could have been pursued as was pursued in every other way. If the Senator wants a very apt illustration he can take the speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], which was brought out whenever we reached any new schedule upon which proper terms had not been made. No schedule could have been passed over the determined purpose of any Senator to prevent its being done unless proper terms were made.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. In other words, the Senator from Delaware simply means that, in his jugdment, the only way to have secured a duty on wool would have been to have talked and talked and talked until the 4th day of March next in order to defeat the bill?

Mr. HIGGINS. If I knew as much as to how the bill has been modified as, I will not say the Senator from Oregon does, but Senators on this side, I should undertake to answer his question with more confidence. I only speak of it as one of the ways. I do not know any more than that.

There was talk last autumn of a patriotic union between the West and the South.

It was hinted by some that the interest of the West in protection was slight, and it was said that the West—the Rocky Mountain country—had been for protection in some sort of way for the interest of the East and not for the interest of the West. But the bill stands to-day with those two great Western industries alone left unprotected; and if the Senator from Nevada should ask me who is responsible for it in an essential way, I should answer, in the language of Nathan, "Thou art the man."

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am glad that my gold-bug friend from Delaware has delivered himself of that speech. I can return it. He is the man who is responsible to the extent of his ability for the distress in the country to-day. He is the man and his party the party which struck down silver. The Republican party did it. They did not know it when they did it, but they have stood by it every hour since. There has been no time when a majority of the Democrats were not in favor of remonetizing silver. It took months for the Democrats to even get a majority of their own party in that fatal extra session to vote to repeal the Sherman act. But you they had all the time. You were the old guard which stood by the London syndicate to strike down the money of the country.

For twenty years nearly four-fifths of every vote have come from the Democratic side of the two Houses. We got but one vote in the Senate against the final consummation of that outrage, against the ratification and confirmation of the act of 1873, east of the Dakotas and north of the Potomac and Ohio Rivers. That was the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], who stood alone. You were all solid. We appealed to you and told you of the desolation of our homes. We told you that an industrious and honest people, who had created the empire of the West, would be stricken down and destroyed. We warned you at that time that the blow you were then striking would send distress to every household in the land. We point to-day to the strikes, to the idle men, to the destruction and paralyzation of industry through your votes, which were solid.

The wool question to us is an important one, but it is a bagatelle compared with the other question. It is utterly insignificant compared with the greater question of our principal industry. The tariff is a bagatelle compared to the money question in its importance to the people of this country. The evil that is ruining this country is world-wide. Millions are out of employment and starving for bread to-day in consequence of the policy which you inaugurated and which you have stood by most faithfully. You have told us that you are friends of silver, but you always vote for gold. You have put in your platforms language indicating that you intended to do something for silver, but in your action nothing could be done for silver.

If it had been left to the Republican party, the act of 1873 would never have been disturbed. It would have remained the law. The Republican party, I say, would not have repealed it. It was by Democratic votes that a meager majority could be got for any bill in favor of silver. Then we are told that if we had filibustered with you during this session we might have defeated the bill and thus saved wool. I say that filibustering against the pending bill would have been unjustifiable. The American people voted for tariff legislation, and they are entitled to have a bill passed. The other side is responsible for that bill.

It is said that pressure was brought to bear and that the other side had to give way. We are not in the Democratic ranks; we could not threaten to bolt if they did not give us a bill that was satisfactory to us. You condemned us on this floor in the most severe language for protesting as long as we did in the extra session. Then you ask us to filibuster against the pending bill. If there is filibustering to be done you are the men to do it. I recognize the right of the American people to decide in favor of tariff legislation if they will, but I did not recognize the right of Congress at the extra session to take a snap judgment, as I claim it did, upon the American people.

With both platforms proclaiming fidelity to bimetallism, and both parties claiming it, and the people understanding it, a snap judgment was taken in the extra session and the act of 1873 was ratified. We protested against that as best we could, because we believed it was not only a wrong of the greatest magnitude, but because it had not the sanction of the votes of the people. I recognize the right of every man in the Senate to discuss all questions fully and freely, but I do not recognize the right to filibuster against a party which has the verdict of the people in favor of its legislation. That party must determine what that legislation shall be. I say that your condemnation of us at the extra session was wrong. We were right; but we would be wrong if we filibustered here to-day, and I have not done it.

It is said that I might have voted on questions, but there has been no question when my vote would have determined it. The Democrats have a majority here and are able to control legislation. They have controlled it. We could have done nothing, except by resorting to filibustering and to delay, which we have refused to do and which I now refuse to do, and which I say we have no right to do. You who talk about being friends of our section when you stuck the knife to the heart of our industries, destroying them and destroying your own, and filling the land with tramps and stragglers, ought not to say that the guilt lies with me. My conscience is clear. "Thou art the man."

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I know the anxiety of the Senate to vote. I know it is the intention of the Senate to vote on the bill to-night if possible. Therefore I shall not attempt to say anything in reply to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS], except to state that on some other occasion I shall reply to what I consider an uncalled for criticism on his part.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I have stated at length heretofore my own position and what I believe to be the attitude of the manufacturers of New England and the other portions of the country upon the question of a duty on wool. Nothing that I could say now would change that position or do anything else than to emphasize the words which I then used. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] have expressed the views and opinions of New England Senators upon this subject, and I can only say that I concur fully in what they have said.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Mr. President, the time for argument, so far as this question is concerned, is past, and for that reason I shall not detain the Senate with any attempt at argument. I have heretofore on several occasions discussed the question fully. I had hoped until very recently that we might be able to secure some consideration for wool. I have about abandoned that hope. I can not, however, in justice to the people whom I in part represent, refrain from uniting in the appeal which has been so vigorously made in the first instance by the distinguished and venerable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], followed up by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and others in behalf of some recognition of this industry.

If there is any one thing in this bill which more than any other thing, or all things put together, ought to secure for the bill the condemnation of the American people, it is the proposition to place wool on the free list. That is my judgment and my deliberate opinion.

This proposition means the absolute destruction of the wool industry, at least so far as concerns the industry west of the Rocky Mountains. The item of transportation, which enters into the question and becomes a material part of it, is of such a character that it will lead anyone who has studied the question at all to the conclusion that the industry can not live west of the Rocky Mountains without a duty. When you can ship wool from Liverpool to New York, and Boston, and Philadelphia for a quarter of a cent per pound, while it costs us from 4 to 5 cents a pound to get our wool to those points, how can you expect the wool-raisers of Oregon, California and Washington, Nevada, and Utah to compete with the cheap woolgrowing countries of the Old World?

They can ship wool from ports in Australia and the Argentine Republic at a much less cost than it can be shipped from points west of the Rocky Mountains.

But, as I said, the time for argument is past. It is no use to submit further argument. It is simply a consumption of time without any compensation. I unite in the appeal, however, to our Democratic friends. I unite in the appeal to one, or two, or three of them, representing great woolgrowing States as they do, to come to the front and join their votes with the united Republican and Populistic vote on this side of the Chamber and give us what the Walker tariff gave to wool, 30 per cent ad valorem. That will give you something over $5,000,000 of revenue. We received last year, under the existing law, a little over $8,000,000.

If the importations should be the same for the next year, they would give a revenue of $5,524,000.80. But of course the importations will be largely increased. Hence the revenue doubtless under this proposition will be more than $8,000,000, which was the amount received under the existing law last year. So from every conceivable standpoint the argument is in favor of the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. It will give $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 of revenue, and will save this great industry from absolute destruction.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I intend to occupy the time of the Senate for but a minute. The time for argument has passed. The proposed amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is not satisfactory, but it would do some good if it could be carried and engrafted upon the bill. Every conceivable kind of amendment has been offered and voted upon, and I suppose the Senator from Ohio asks a little with the hope that so little will not be denied. I do not think the Senate fully realizes the condition of the wool industry in the Western country, especially in the country which embraces the Rocky Mountain States and Territories. After the passage of the McKinley act a great many young men engaged in the wool business in the States and Territories west of the Missouri River. Some borrowed the capital, and others took their accumulations from wages for a number of years and invested in sheep. Some of these have large flocks, others flocks numbering but a few hundred head. They had every reason to think the McKinley act would remain on the statute books for a number of years. They believe if this bill becomes a law their industry will be destroyed.

I have no doubt it will be so. Under free wool they will be unable to compete with the wool produced in other countries. The business at the best will be most unsatisfactory. The Senate could well afford to give them protection on wool.

It is not worth while to again call the attention of the Senate to the principles of this bill. They have been thoroughly well discussed. It is not a free-trade bill; it is not a bill putting raw materials on the free list. Some raw materials are on the free list, but the most of what are known as raw materials are on the dutiable list and highly protected. As this bill is framed there is no reason why the people engaged in wool and sheep growing in the West should not have some protection.

The South by words has expressed great love for the West during the last few years, and has proposed to enter into an alliance with the West, and so organized to break down the East.

While I have no sympathy with any combination that does not include all the States and Territories composing our great country, I do say that if the South has any affection for the West now is the time to show it. You have virtually placed all the animals produced by the farmer on the free list, as the duties imposed are so small they will afford no protection. You have not given adequate protection to grain grown in the West. You have withdrawn the premium offered to the sugar-beet industry. The farmers of the West have absolutely nothing in this bill that is protected. You have given the white-lead trust ample protection, while you have given the lead produced in our portion of the country only half the protection which was accorded in the McKinley act.

It would be so easy for you to give us at least a little protection on wool. We have discovered in the consideration of the bill that it is not New England which wants free raw materials. She does not produce iron ore; she does not produce coal. I do not think the recent reports show that the six New England States have all told 1,000,000 sheep within their limits, while there are a dozen Western States which have from one to two million sheep each, and California has more than 4,000,000. Yet not a New England Senator has contended for free wool. Not a Republican member of this body has voted for free wool. Can not the South consistently give us the two or three votes which are required to secure some protection on wool? Can we not appeal to some of the States which have large numbers of sheep within their borders?

Will not the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] and the obliging Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE] help us out and give us a little protection? Will not the two Senators from the State of Texas, in which there were 7,500,000 sheep until the reduction of the tariff on wool in 1883, help us? Will not the Senators from the State of West Virginia, in which the sheep industry has become a great and profitable one; will not the Senators from the great State of New York, which has nearly a million and a half of sheep, help out so far as this industry is concerned? Can we not obtain the two or three votes on the other side which, added to the entire Republican and Populist vote, will place wool on the dutiable list? You have protected all your industries. You have rice on the protected list; you have peanuts on the protected list; you have coal on the protected list; you have iron ore on the protected list; you have your sugar on the protected list. Will you not help out these new States and these Territories in the far West which are trying to obtain a sound and substantial foothold in the American Union?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to say merely a single word, not by way of argument, because of course argument does not enter into the movement to put wool on the free list. There is no reason whatever for it. It is the mere wanton destruction of a great industry. I desire simply to add my word and repeat what I said as to the attitude of New England and of my people on this question. We are protectionists, and we believe in giving fair protection to everyone. No one is more ready and more eager to give fair protection to the sheep industry than the woolen manufacturers and the woolen makers of New England. We have no desire to discriminate against anybody. We do not come here to get duties for our section and to cut off the duties from other sections. That has been reserved for the bill of the Democratic majority.

If every duty in the bill seemed to me a satisfactory protectionist duty, my vote should still be against the bill so long as it committed the great wrong and injustice of placing wool upon the free list. Such I believe to be the attitude of the people of my State to-day by an overwhelming majority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. LODGE. Let the amendment be stated.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert as paragraph 278½, on page 72:

Wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, 30 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. PLATT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TELLER. My colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is absent from the Senate on account of sickness. If he were present he would vote "yea." He is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE].

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am requested to transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS.] I vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL. I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE.]

Mr. MCMILLAN (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Power,
Allison,	Frye,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Carey,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Quay,
Chandler,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,
Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Patton,	Shoup,
Davis,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Stewart,
Dixon,	Higgins,	Perkins,	Teller,
Dolph.	Hoar,	Platt,	Washburn.

NAYS—37.

Bate,	Gorman,	Martin,	Smith,
Berry,	Gray,	Mills,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Caffery,	Hill,	Morgan,	Vilas,
Call,	Hunton,	Murphy,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Irby,	Palmer,	Walsh,
Coke,	Jones, Ark.	Pasco,	White.
Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
George,	McLaurin.	Ransom,

NOT VOTING—16.

Allen,	Camden,	Jarvis,	Pettigrew,
Blanchard,	Cameron,	Kyle,	Squire,
Brice,	Daniel,	McMillan,	Wilson,
Butler,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I propose the amendment which was read by the Secretary when we were discussing the bill as in Committee of the Whole. As it is quite long I can explain it in much less time, if the Senate can bear with me, than it would take to have it read.

It is proposed to insert the amendment as new matter just before section 278. The amendment proposes to retain all of the sections of the existing law which describe the different classes of wool, with the addition of a change in the rates of duties upon the different classes. Where under the present law the duty on wool of the first class is put at 10 cents a pound, the amendment proposes to make the duty 5 cents a pound, a reduction of 50 per cent. Where the existing rate is 11 cents a pound on wool of the second class, the amendment proposes to make the duty 6 cents a pound; and where the present law divides wool of the third class as above and below 13 cents a pound in value the amendment makes the dividing line at 10 cents, reducing the duty 50 per cent on each of the grades above 10 cents a pound and below 10 cents a pound.

Then, in one of the sections of the present law there is a proviso in the following words:

Provided, That skirted wools as now imported are hereby excepted.

Those words are stricken out. The amendment was read in full when we were discussing the bill as in Committee of the Whole. I ask unanimous consent to forego the reading of the amendment at this time in order to save time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The amendment of Mr. PEFFER was, to insert after paragraph 277, on page 71:

SCHEDULE K.—WOOL AND MANUFACTURES OF WOOL.

All wools, hair of camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals shall be divided for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon into the three following classes:

Class 1, that is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote, Down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Ayres, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, and elsewhere, and also including all wools not hereinafter described or designated in classes 2 and 3.

Class 2, that is to say, Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood, and usually known by the terms herein used, and also hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals.

Class 3, that is to say, Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, Russian camel's hair, and including all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Egypt, Syria, and elsewhere, excepting improved wools hereinafter provided for.

The standard samples of all wools which are now or may be hereafter deposited in the principal custom-houses of the United States, under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be the standards for the classification of wools under this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the authority to renew these standards and to make such additions to them from time to time as may be required, and he shall cause to be deposited like standards in other custom-houses of the United States when they may be needed.

Whenever wools of class 3 shall have been improved by the admixture of Merino or English blood from their present character as represented by the standard samples now or hereafter to be deposited in the principal custom-houses of the United States, such improved wools shall be classified for duty either as class 1 or as class 2, as the case may be.

The duty on wools of the first class which shall be imported washed shall be twice the amount of the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed; and the duty on wools of the first and second classes which shall be imported scoured shall be three times the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed.

Unwashed wools shall be considered such as shall have been shorn from the sheep without any cleansing; that is, in their natural condition. Washed wools shall be considered such as have been washed with water on the sheep's back. Wool washed in any other manner than on the sheep's back shall be considered as scoured wool.

The duty upon wool of the sheep or hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals which shall be imported in any other than ordinary condition, or which shall be changed in its character or condition for the purpose of evading the duty, or which shall be reduced in value by the admixture of dirt or any other foreign substance, or which has been sorted or increased in value by the rejection of any part of the original fleece, shall be twice the duty to which it would be otherwise subject. Wools on which a duty is assessed amounting to three times or more than that which would be assessed if said wool was imported unwashed, such duty shall not be doubled on account of its being sorted. If any bale or package of wool or hair specified in this act imported as of any specified class, or claimed by the importer to be dutiable as of any specified class, shall contain any wool or hair subject to a higher rate of duty than the class so specified, the whole bale or package shall be subject to the highest rate of duty chargeable on wool of the class subject to such higher rate of duty; and if any bale or package be claimed by the importer to be shoddy, mungo, flocks, wool, hair, or other material of any class specified in this act, and such bale contain any admixture of any one or more of said materials, or of any other material, the whole bale or package shall be subject to duty at the highest rate imposed upon any article in said bale or package.

The duty upon all wools and hair of the first class shall be 5 cents per pound, and upon all wools or hair of the second class 6 cents per pound.

On wools of the third class and on camel's hair of the third class, the value whereof shall be 10 cents or less per pound, including charges, the duty shall be 15 per cent ad valorem.

On wools of the third class and on camel's hair of the third class, the value whereof shall exceed 10 cents per pound, including charges, the duty shall be 25 per cent ad valorem.

Wools on the skin shall pay the same rate as other wools, the quantity and value to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

On noils, shoddy, top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, garnetted waste, and all other wastes composed wholly or in part of wool, the duty shall be 20 cents per pound.

On woolen rags, mungo, and flocks the duty shall be 6 cents per pound.

Wools and hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals in the form of roping, roving, or tops, and all wool and hair which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, not specially provided for in this act, shall be subject to the same duties as are imposed upon manufactures of wool not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words upon the amendment.

In the first place, while the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] was addressing the Senate I understood in the colloquy between him and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] that the latter Senator insisted that because there is no need of a duty upon wool, therefore there ought not to be any duty placed upon it. If I am mistaken in the Senator's statement I should be pleased if he would correct me. That being true, if there is no need of a duty upon wool and if therefore no duty should be placed upon wool, the converse of the proposition must be true, that the manufacturers of wool need a duty and therefore they are entitled to a duty. Something follows from that inevitably; that is to say, that the bill is a protective tariff bill, and that no duty ought to be levied upon any article unless the article needs it by way of protection. That I assume to be the theory upon which the bill was constructed in the beginning of our discussion, and the longer it has proceeded the more clear the proposition becomes that it is a protective tariff bill.

I shall not go into a discussion of the importance or the magnitude of the wool industry, nor will I speak of the necessity of every people raising their own wool and manufacturing their own clothing, for these matters have been elaborately discussed in the preceding speeches. But upon the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] I have something to say. If a duty is required upon woolen goods and therefore they have received it, the same argument which justifies that conclusion will justify the demands of the woolgrower that he share the duty. In other words, the production of wool being as extensive an industry as the manufacture of woolen goods, as many people being engaged in it, as much capital being invested in it, it being primarily more important than that of the manufacture of wool, the wool-producer is not only as much entitled, but he is more entitled to a duty on wool, reasoning from analogy, than the manufacturer of woolen goods.

Mr. President, all that the woolgrowers ask is that they be treated fairly in comparison with the manufacturers of wool. I took occasion to say after discussing this subject before that, so far as the people I represent, and so far as the farmers of all the great Northwest, the West, and the Southwest are concerned, they are much more able to bear the pressure of free trade than the manufacturers, not because their interest does not need as much protection as that of the manufacturers, but for another and a much broader reason. A man who produces wool lives on a farm; he has the bounties of nature out of which he can provide himself and his family a livelihood; and it amounts to little to him in comparison with the effect which would be produced upon manufacturers if the doors of our commerce were to be thrown open and let them swing outward and swing inward upon the pivot equally to all men, whether at home or abroad.

So far as the farmers of Kansas engaged in the production of wool are concerned, they say to me, "Put your argument upon the ground of common fairness; if we are to have free wool give us free cloth. If you demand protection upon manufactures give us protection upon the material that we produce."

If you will examine the existing law, Mr. President and Senators, you will find that there is a greater degree of protection given—I mean in amount—to the woolgrowing industry than to the wool-manufacturing industry; and the reason is because wool is the component part of woolen cloth, which is a self-evident proposition; and there is more wool in cloth than anything else. So the farmer is not only entitled to protection, but under the existing law he receives it.

Now, he is entirely willing to have the duty upon free wool reduced, provided you are willing to reduce the duties upon manufactured wool. All he asks is fair treatment.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a proposition which has probably escaped the attention of Senators, Democratic Senators especially, and the attention of the country. That singular fact is that if you will deduct the duties which are allowed in the present law upon the manufactures of wool because of the compensating duty laid upon wool, you will find that the duties under the pending bill are substantially as high as they are in the McKinley law. Perhaps what I mean to say can be explained better by referring to the act itself; and I ask the attention of Senators to it.

I read from section 391 of the existing law wherein duties are laid "on woolen and worsted yarns made wholly or in part of wool," and where they are "valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, the duty per pound shall be two and one-half times the duty imposed by this act on a pound of unwashed wool of the first class." The duty on a pound of unwashed wool of the first class is 10 cents. Two and a half times that would be 25 cents. Here we have a duty of 25 cents levied upon 1 pound of yarn, simply to compensate for the duty that is laid upon wool, and that duty amounts to 83⅓ per cent. That is the duty fixed to the pound of yarn by reason of the duty on wool.

Going a little further along in the paragraph we find that where the yarn is valued at "more than 30 cents and not more than 40 cents per pound the duty per pound shall be three times the duty imposed by this act on a pound of unwashed wool of the first class." Three times the duty on a pound of unwashed wool of the first class amounts to 30 cents. There you have a duty of 30 cents levied upon a pound of yarn ranging in value from 30 cents to 40 cents; that is to say, the duty upon a pound of yarn of that value ranges from 100 per cent down to 75 per cent, an average of 87½ per cent by reason of the duty laid upon wool; and the ad valorem duty is 35 per cent in addition to the specific duty.

Then take the next class, "valued at more than 40 cents per pound, the duty per pound shall be 3½ times the duty imposed by this act on a pound of unwashed wool of the first class." Three and a half times amounts to 35 per cent. There we have 87½ per cent on cloth worth 40 cents a yard by reason of the duty laid upon wool, and in addition to that 40 per cent ad valorem.

Now, the point that I wish to call particular attention to and to ask the attention of Democratic Senators is that upon the first grade of yarns up to 30 cents the present law levies a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem; upon the next grade, between 30 and 40 cents, the present law levies a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem, and at 40 cents and upwards, 40 per cent ad valorem. There are the three grades, 35 and 40 per cent, in addition to the duty that is laid upon wool.

Now, if you will turn to the proposed law, the pending bill, on page 72, paragraph 280, you will find that the duty which it is proposed to lay upon wool yarns is 40 per cent ad valorem, which is as high as the duty now laid under the McKinley law. You may continue the examination through three or four paragraphs, as I have done, on woolen or worsted cloths, shawls, knit fabrics, etc., and you will find that there is a specific duty allowed on the cloth and that specific duty is to cover the duty that is laid upon wool. Then, in addition, there is an ad valorem duty. In section 392 of the present law there is a duty of 40 per cent. Then there is a duty again of 40 per cent and a duty of 50 per cent, and the wool duty alone amounts to 87½ per cent, and as high as 100 per cent. If you will examine the bill now before us relating to the very same class of matter, you will find that the proposed duty is 40 per cent, 35 per cent, and 40 per cent ad valorem, substantially the same as in the present law.

Then take paragraph 396 in the present law, where provision is made for clothing, and you will find that the same rule holds good. There is a specific duty 4½ times the duty imposed by the act upon a pound of unwashed wool of the first class. That would be 40 cents a pound, and is levied on a pound of cloth in order to compensate for the duty laid upon wool, and in addition thereto 60 per cent ad valorem.

In the proposed law the duty is 45 per cent. In this respect the difference is greater than as to any other one of the articles to which I have referred; but the point I make in this line of thought is that while the majority in this body insist upon retaining substantially the same duties that are now in force under the McKinley law, they at the same time remove all the duties wholly from raw wool.

If Senators say, as the Senator from Alabama did, that the producers of wool need no duty, all we ask of you is to apply the same rule to the manufacturer of wool and say that he requires no duty, and we have not another word to say. If the managers of this bill will rise before the Senate and propose to remove all duties from the manufactures of wool, that will wholly and completely and forever close the mouth of the senior Senator from Kansas on the wool question, and you will hear no complaint from the farmers of Kansas.

Now, if you are not willing to do that; compromise with us, make a fair reduction of duties upon manufactures of wool and a fair reduction upon raw wool. I care not where you place it; it is no matter to me whether it is a cent a pound or 2 cents or 5 cents a pound; no matter where you make the line of compromise, just treat us as you treat yourselves, and then we shall be satisfied.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] this morning used the word "blow," and it has been a common expression during this discussion, that you are striking a blow at a certain industry. He said to the majority of the Senate "you are striking a blow at the wool industry."

Mr. President, you are striking two blows. One is the forward stroke and the other one is the rebound. You are striking a blow at a great industry. When you have completed that blow and its force has fallen upon its victims you will find that there will be a rebound from the victim and his blow will be harder than yours. The public mind is sensitive to-day, and the farmer's mind is blended in with the great mass of mentality that we call the public mind. Forty-five per cent of the voting population of the United States is made up of farmers, and while a great many of them have no more interest in sheep than in any other industry in which they are not directly engaged, yet in the West where the most resisting, if I may use the word, where the most jealous and the most open-hearted class of farmers reside, you will find that they will resent this indignity placed upon them and upon their neighbors.

Ten years ago we had about a million sheep in Kansas. The number is now reduced to about 225,000. The few woolgrowers who still live in Kanas are neighbors with farmers who have no sheep, and when one of their representatives in this body asks the Senate of the United States to treat them fairly, with the same consideration that they treat the manufacturers, and you scorn that appeal, they take it that you scorn them and they will resist it at the ballot box, and they will unite their force with any other class of people that is opposed to this policy and the party that intends to fix it upon them. So there are two blows in this direction.

There was a time when farmers were not as sensitive as they are now; they were not as critical as they are now. They have felt the pressure of injustice coming from bad, ill-advised, vicious legislation. They have found the value of their crops depreciating. They have found the value of their farms depreciating. They have found their old prerogatives one by one being taken away from them. They find their influence in politics gradually wasting away and that a few men are usurping the powers of government. The farmer to-day is becoming watchful, not wasteful. He is becoming critical, not to say suspicious, and he is becoming watchful.

In the West the farmers are practically in revolution to-day. Do you not observe all through the Western States and Territories where the marching armies of unemployed men went that there was a sympathy between them; that the farmers took good care of those traveling men as they were passing over their territory? I ask the Senators who insist upon passing this bill, right or wrong, to think well about this matter.

The farmers in the part of the country where I live do not want any duty placed upon sugar. They have had a taste of free sugar. They know that their old 15, 14, 13, 12½ pound sack was increased to 18, 20, and even 25 pounds. They foresee that if this bill becomes a law, with an increase substantially of a cent and a quarter upon every pound of sugar that they use, that their 20-pound sack will be reduced to 15 pounds; and that is one of the ways of reaching the judgment and the consciences of men. While you put a duty upon sugar, something of which we produce a very small proportion comparatively in this country, an article which ought from every consideration to be on the free list, you refuse to put a duty upon wool, of which we produce only about 70 per cent of our consumption, importing the rest.

Now, Mr. President, I have said all that I care to say. I merely want to repeat that this is not a time to trifle with the people's interest. I doubt very much whether there would be more than one vote in ten cast for a duty upon sugar if the question were put to the people. On the other hand, if duties are to be removed from wool, I doubt very much whether there would not be an overwhelming majority in favor of removing duties from manufactures of wool. I expect after the vote is taken upon this amendment to test the sense of the Senate again upon the question of removing the duties from manufactures of wool. In conclusion I ask only to be treated fairly. Treat us just as the manufacturer is treated.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I wish to say a word to the Senator from Kansas. This is a very simple matter of arithmetic. He says the people are being trifled with. I think the members of his party who usually sit upon the other side of the Chamber are trifling with the people, because on the last vote they were not recorded as voting at all on the proposition for a duty on wool. They both come from wool-producing States, and yet their votes were lacking. I wish the Senator from Kansas who has just spoken would take occasion to appeal to them in private as he has appealed to all Senators in public in his recent address. It is a simple matter of arithmetic.

Here are twelve New England Senators voting for a duty on wool. Here are all the Republican Senators voting for a duty on wool. Here are the two Populists who sit on this side of the Chamber voting for a duty on wool. I say to my friend the Senator from Tennessee, now near me, it is only necessary for him to get the two Populists who sit upon the other side of the Chamber to vote for a duty on wool and detail two Democrats on the same side of the Chamber to vote for a duty on wool, and the deed is done and the sheep industry is preserved. Otherwise the sheep of this country are going to disappear from the face of the earth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. POWER and Mr. DOLPH called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and taken.

Mr. CALL. I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to state that I should vote "nay" if it were not for my pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

Mr. BRICE. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN], and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Platt,
Allison,	Frye,	Lodge,	Power,
Carey,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Quay,
Chandler,	Hale,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Davis,	Hawley,	Patton,	Stewart,
Dixon,	Higgins,	Peffer,	Teller,
Dolph,	Hoar,	Perkins,	Washburn.

NAYS—37.

Bate,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Berry,	Gorman,	Mills,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Blanchard,	Harris,	Morgan,	Vilas,
Brice,	Hill,	Murphy,	Voorhees,
Caffery,	Hunton,	Palmer,	Walsh,
Cockrell,	Irby,	Pasco,	White.
Coke,	Jarvis,	Pugh,
Faulkner,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,
George,	Lindsay,	Roach.

NOT VOTING—16.

Allen,	Cameron,	McPherson,	Proctor,
Butler,	Daniel,	Martin,	Squire,
Call,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Camden,	Kyle,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

Mr. PEFFER. I propose another amendment, and I shall not say a word upon it; I merely ask that a vote may be taken by yeas and nays. I move to insert just before paragraph 278:

All manufactures of wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. MANDERSON. I appeal to the Senator from Kansas to withhold that amendment for the present and offer it later in the day, when the other members of the party of which he is such a distinguished member may be present. There is no question but that they will act with him upon the measure.

Mr. PEFFER. I am trying to take care of myself in this Chamber, and I have no doubt that all of the other Senators are availing themselves of that privilege.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hoped the Senator might want a full vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Kyle,	Proctor,
Allen,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
Bate,	Frye,	Lodge,	Quay,
Berry,	Gallinger,	McLaurin,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	George,	McMillan,	Roach,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Brice,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gray,	Martin,	Smith,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Mills,	Stewart,
Carey,	Harris,	Mitchell, Oregon	Teller,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Mitchell, Wis.	Turpie,
Cockrell,	Higgins,	Palmer,	Vest,
Coke,	Hill,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Cullom,	Hunton,	Patton,	Voorhees,
Daniel,	Irby,	Peffer,	Walsh,
Davis,	Jarvis,	Perkins,	Washburn,
Dixon,	Jones, Ark.	Platt,	White.
Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Power,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert as paragraph 277½:

All manufactures of wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. PEFFER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore withhold my vote. If the Senator from Alabama were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I agreed yesterday with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] that I would pair with him. I have been voting to-day, having forgotten the pair. I withhold my vote and will consider myself paired with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. TELLER. Very well. Then I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], but I am assured that he would vote in the negative if present and I will let my vote stand.

Mr. FRYE. My colleague [Mr. HALE] has been necessarily called out of the Chamber for a short time. He is paired with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay;" and the Senator from North Carolina, being informed of that fact by me, has already voted "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 61; as follows:

YEAS—5.

Allen,	Irby,	Kyle,	Peffer.
Hansbrough,

NAYS—61.

Aldrich	Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Pugh,
Allison,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Bate,	Frye,	Lodge,	Roach,
Berry,	Gallinger,	McLaurin,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	George,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Smith,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Martin,	Teller,
Call,	Gray,	Mills,	Turpie,
Carey,	Harris,	Mitchell, Oregon	Vest,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas,
Cockrell,	Higgins,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hill,	Pasco,	Walsh,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Patton,	White.
Davis,	Hunton,	Perkins,
Dixon,	Jarvis,	Platt,
Dolph,	Jones, Ark.	Proctor,

NOT VOTING—19.

Brice,	Gordon,	Murphy,	Stewart,
Butler,	Hale,	Pettigrew,	Washburn,
Camden,	McPherson,	Power,	Wilson,
Cameron,	Morgan,	Quay,	Wolcott.
Daniel,	Morrill,	Squire,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the wool schedule has been already very exhaustively discussed. I am tempted to ask the Senate that on the remainder of the reserved amendments, and all questions arising thereon, until the final disposition of the bill, debate be limited to five minutes to each Senator. I ask unanimous consent that from this time on while we are considering the bill the five-minute rule shall be observed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. POWER. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I believe I will ask Senators who object if there is any limit that they will consent to? Will the Senator from Montana be kind enough to state whether he will consent to any specific limit?

Mr. POWER. This bill is a deathblow to the interests of my State, and if there was any way that I could prolong this debate until next November I should do so, and defeat the bill. I shall object to every proposition of the kind offered.

Mr. HARRIS. Inasmuch as the Senator wants to limit debate to the 1st of November next, I will withdraw my request. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 279——

Mr. POWER. I have an amendment to offer to come in as paragraph 278, before paragraph 279 is acted upon. I send the amendment to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new paragraph the following:

278. All wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and all wool and hair on the skin, noils, yarn waste, card waste, bur waste, rags and flocks, including all waste, or rags composed wholly or in part of wool, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. POWER. This is the same amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] except that the rate proposed is 25 per cent ad valorem instead of 30 per cent.

I have here an editorial and figures taken from the American Economist, giving the losses in the sheep industry by States, which I shall not read, but ask to have inserted in the RECORD. I wish, however, to give a summary of the losses up to the present time. The loss figured on the price of wool and the value of sheep in this list was made on January 1. I shall give a summary in a general way, not specifying any of the States except my own, in which I have a list of the sheep-growers. I ask the privilege of having this article printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE SHEPHERD AND HIS SHEEP.

The farmers of the United States were all promised great things during the Presidential campaign of 1892, if Grover Cleveland should only be the successful candidate. He was. Even greater and better things were promised to the farmers if only a Democratic majority could be sent to Congress. It was. These results were very largely secured by the aid of the farmers, and the farmers naturally expected that the campaign promises of 1892 would be kept. The farmers will again be asked for their votes in the fall, and they should compare the promises of 1892 with the performances of 1894. Let us help them do this.

The farmers raise sheep in every section of the country. There are forty-seven different States and Territories in which the farmers look to their sheep and the wool from their sheep as a money crop to supply them with hard cash wherewith to purchase the many necessary farm supplies and tools that they can not obtain by trading in their local stores. The value of their sheep and the value of the wool are therefore very important factors to the farmer. Good prices for sheep and good value for wool mean comfort in the farm houses; they mean the payment of mortgages; they mean new tools; they mean new buildings for more stock; they mean general prosperity to the farmer.

When the Republican party was in power, and when the farmer's true friend, the late Hon. J. Rusk, was at the head of the Department of Agriculture, which is the farmer's particular part of the Administration, it was customary to publish each year a careful statement showing the number of sheep in each different State in the Union, the value of each sheep in each State, and the total value of all the sheep in each State. There was nothing hidden from the farmers in those days. Jerry Rusk was a true farmer himself. He was not a fancy farmer who farmed on Mr. Cleveland's "theory," but an honest, hard-working farmer who farmed on the good "condition" of his land and stock.

But there has been a change since then. Mr. Cleveland, who made such great promises to the farmers in 1892, put Mr. J. Sterling Morton, from Nebraska, at the head of the farmers' Department of Agriculture. Mr. Morton celebrated his arrival in Washington by telling the farmers that they didn't know what they wanted, but that he would teach them. Mr. Morton is said to have once planted a tree and he called it Arbor Day, and what he didn't know about farming wasn't worth knowing. It might fill dictionaries full.

When the time came round, in January of this year, for the farmers to learn about the number and value of their sheep, the farmers were surprised to find that Mr. Morton had forgotten to tell them as much as Jerry Rusk did. He told them how many sheep there were in the country and what they were all worth. He told them that each sheep was worth 60 cents less on January 1, 1894, than it was worth the year before. He gave them the value of each sheep under and over 1 year old at the beginning of this year, but he left them to figure out for themselves how much less money the sheep in each State were worth. Jerry Rusk used to tell them everything, but then he was a good, honest Republican farmer.

What Mr. Morton forgot to tell the farmers has been specially prepared for them in the American Economist. Here it is:

States and Territories.	Number of sheep.		Average price.		Total value.

These are a lot of figures, but the farmers should not pass them by. Let each farmer look for his own State or Territory and he will see that the number of sheep are given for 1892, in the good days of McKinley protection, and also for 1894, in the bad days of Cleveland free-trade. The farmer will also see the average value of each sheep in each State or Territory in 1892 and in 1894. The farmer will also find what all the sheep were worth in his own State or Territory in 1892 and in 1894. Then if he looks down to the end of the table he will see the corresponding figures for the whole of the United States, and he can compare the value of his own sheep with those for the whole country, or in other States or Territories.

Farmers know that sheep in this country increase largely in numbers. They look forward to the lambing season, because it adds to their flocks, and every little lamb that lives is worth a few dollars to the farmer. But there must have been something the matter with the sheep between 1892 and 1894. In the good old McKinley protection days there were 44,938,365 sheep in the United States, yet two years later there were only 91,430 more sheep. This is a very small percentage of lambing. For the year 1893 the lambing season must have been very bad, or some plague must have struck the sheep. Perhaps it was the free trade-plague of Grover Cleveland. That struck every other part of the country and blasted business; perhaps it struck the farmer's sheep and made them barren.

Whatever the trouble was, the good American farmer who tends his sheep will know, and if he has a good remedy against a return of the disease he will rub it in well this fall before winter comes on. The farmer will know why each one of his sheep is worth more than half a dollar less now than it was in 1892. He does not want to lose money like that if he can help it. In Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas, and New Mexico a sheep was worth less than a dollar this year. Think of it. This same free-trade plague may attack your own section again and bring the price of your own sheep down below a dollar. Get that remedy ready to stop the disease. Rub it in well and apply it thoroughly next November. That's the time to check this free-trade in wool disease.

These figures get mighty interesting when they come near home. Now, here are some more. Don't pass them by. They show just how many more or less sheep there were in each State this year as compared with 1892, and they also show how much more or less money all the sheep were worth in each State this year. These figures that show the losses are what the farmer will remember while he is mixing that sheep wash that he intends to rub in next November. Here they are:

*Gain.

There is not a State or Territory missing. Every farmer can be interested. Study them after your day's work is done. See how bad the lambing season was in New England, where there was a loss of 410,577 sheep; in the Southern States of 250,135; in the Western States of 612,221 sheep. Then there was very poor lambing in the Middle and Pacific coast States. What a bad season it was to be sure when there were only 91,430 more sheep in the country after the farmers had just one year of Grover's clover. Is this what he promised the farmers when he asked them to vote for him?

Now, look at the money that the American sheep farmers have lost. In New England they lost $1,805,825. In the Middle States they lost $793,661. In the Southern States they lost $4,769,159. In the Pacific coast States they lost $4,427,238. In the other States and Territories they lost $4,070,521. All the sheep farmers in all the States and Territories have lost $25,660,013 in the value of their sheep. This does not include the loss in the price of their wool. That is an extra loss. This free-trade disease that has got among the sheep is worse than the scab. Is this what Grover Cleveland and the Democratic party promised the farmers in 1892 when they wanted the farmers' votes?

Grover Cleveland and the Democratic party do not like American sheep or American farmers who raise sheep. Why? Well, Grover Cleveland said "that a large proportion of the sheep owned by the farmers throughout the country are found in small flocks numbering from 25 to 50." Those were his very words. If the sheep all belong to one farmer or to half a dozen farmers, if there was a sheep trust, like the sugar trust, it would be different. But the Democrats are down on the sheep and the sheep farmers because there are so many farmers who each have a few sheep, which help to give the farmers ready cash.

Senator JONES of Nevada—all the sheep men know him—gave an answer that knocked Grover Cleveland out. He showed him that there were 830,960 different farmers in the United States who owned sheep, and that the free-trade disease, which is worse than the scab, would injure all of these 830,960 sheep farmers. Senator JONES was right. It has injured them. The loss on all the sheep in the country has been $25,660,013 under the free-trade sheep disease. Divide that loss among 830,960 sheep farmers and you will find that each farmer has lost $30.88.

Thirty dollars and eighty-eight cents lost by each farmer who owns sheep, since the sheep ranches were attacked by the free-wool plague. This is a pretty sort of good times. Is it what the Democrats promised in 1892? If not, just stir up that sheep-wash mixture again and rub it well into the Democrats next fall.

Mr. POWER. Mr. President, the figures in the foregoing table show a loss of $25,660,013 to the American farmer who raises sheep. This estimate was made on January 1, 1894, since which time the price on mutton has continued to fall, and will not now average over $1.25 per head. These are stubborn facts, as can be seen from the commercial reports and account of sales for the past six months.

See what a great loss this is to the sheep-grower. In the New England States he loses $2,911,500; in the Middle States, $6,880,156; in the Southern States, $6,420,047; in the Western States, $26,866,307; in the Pacific States, $8,710,977; and in the other States, $8,045,059. A total loss of $59,834,046, or $72 to every farmer in the United States who raises sheep. This is aside from the loss on wool.

In Montana the number of sheep estimated January 1, 1894, was 2,780,908, averaged at $1.25 per head, is $3,160,122, a loss over 1892 of $2,068,444, or in round numbers about $2,100 to each sheep-producer of the State.

I have a copy of a letter written the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] from one of the most prominent breeders of Merino sheep in this country, Mr. Davis Cossitt, of Onondaga, N. Y., which I ask be inserted with my remarks to substantiate the summary presented of the present values of wool and sheep.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

ONONDAGA, N. Y., June 25, 1894.

DEAR SIR: "Owing to certain climatic conditions fine wool can not be produced in these United States."

For the last eight or ten years the above has been the stock argument of 'free-wool" advocates, many of whom do not know a fleece of fine wool from the hair of a bull terrier, and the Hon. Mr. VOORHEES seems to be a convert to this convenient free-trade doctrine.

It is not to be supposed that because a man has reached even the exalted position of United States Senator, he must necessarily know everything; it should be his aim, however, when great and important interests are under consideration that he use every means to learn that the arguments used are not in direct opposition to the facts.

It is hard to believe that an American, and especially one who has been selected to represent Americans, should become so strongly partisan as to knowingly indorse a statement so injurious to the people he represents, merely to gain a temporary partisan advantage.

We must infer, then, that the statement referred to was made ignorantly, but we insist, carelessly.

The inclosed samples of wool are from a flock of Merinos that was established in 1802. Previous to the election of 1892 the wool from this flock was never but once sold at less than 20 cents per pound, unwashed; for the clips of '93 and '94 I am offered 10 cents.

The blood being considered desirable, the increase of the flock has always (previous to the election of '92) sold readily and at fairly remunerative prices, but a contract to deliver 100 ewes and rams at the Syracuse station in November, 1892, at $10 per head was canceled as soon as the result of the Presidential election of that year was known. I have since sold these sheep at $1.50 per head.

The "climatic" conditions of America, Mr. VOORHEES, are favorable to the production of the very best wool that can be grown anywhere. Any country where the snow flies produces finer furs, finer and softer wools than can be grown in a hot climate. This is a natural law that neither free wool fallacies, willful ignorance, nor partisan malice can abrogate.

The best wools can not only be grown here, but in sufficient quantities too, to fully supply every demand of manufacturers and consumers, and at prices low enough to satisfy every reasonable requirement.

But the tariff-tinkering majority in Congress is pursuing a course that must compel every American woolgrower to surrender his only market to foreign competition. Corrupt trusts can be fostered, wealthy corporations and manufacturers can be protected, but the interests and rights of American farmers are not to be regarded.

Yet the men at Washington expect Democrats who are engaged in the woolgrowing business, and in other branches of farming as well, to meekly (you are fond of saying loyally) fall into line and continue to vote the straight ticket. Well, wait till they get a chance and see.

Very respectfully, yours,

DAVIS COSSITT.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES, United States Senate.

Mr. POWER. I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD an article from the American Economist on "The Farmer and His Wool Bale," with the tables accompanying it as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE FARMER AND HIS WOOL BALE.

We have had a talk with the American farmer who raises sheep and have shown him how the promises of Mr. Cleveland and of the Democratic party that were made before the election of 1892 have been kept during the year 1894, as far as his sheep are concerned. The farmer naturally is anxious to know all that the Government does for him in improving the value of his stock, his crops, and his property; and now, having shorn the farmer's sheep, let us have a look at the wool and what it is worth to the farmer in his wool bale.

The American Enconomist has gone into every detail in regard to the number of sheep, their average price, and their total value in each State and Territory of the country two years ago and now; the wool clip in each State during 1893 and the average price paid for that wool last year, comparing it with its average value per pound at the beginning of the present year, thus showing what the total wool clip was worth at the beginning of 1893 and what it was worth at the beginning of 1894, as follows:

Seates and Territories.	Estimated clip for 1893, washed and unwashed	Price per pound.		Total clip value.

* Washed.

We find that the entire American wool clip for 1893 amounted to 301,538,133 pounds of washed and unwashed wool. Its price ranged from 18 to 32 cents a pound, and the total clip was worth $68,391,055. A year later, however, the average price of wool ranged only from 10 up to 23 cents per pound, there being a loss of from 5 to 9 cents per pound. The total clip at the beginning of this year was worth only $45,317,459, a total loss to the farmers of $23,073,596.

From the facts supplied as to the clip and the average price per pound, we have worked out the total clip and its value in each and every State and Territory in the Union. In order to approximate the value per pound of wool from each State, it is necessary to average the price by estimating the amount of fine, medium, and coarse wool, and also in some cases the percentage of washed wool. This has been carefully done, and we think the values given herewith are as nearly correct as such estimates can be made. The farmers have already learned that this free-trade disease which has got among their sheep cost them $25,660,013 loss in the actual value of the live stock. We have above given them the total clip value at the beginning of 1893 and 1894, which showed a loss of $23,073,596 in the value of the wool, thus making a total loss to the sheep-raisers of the United States of $48,733,709.

But this does not cover the entire wool loss; first, because the nearer we have been getting to the time when free trade in wool is to take effect the lower has been the price of the American wool quoted, and farmers are not able to obtain to-day nearly as much money for their wool as they could six months ago. This further loss of money to the farmers we are not able as yet to arrive at. But we have shown that there are 830,960 different sheep-owners in the United States, each one of whom lost $30.88 through the lower value in the price of his live sheep since a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress controlled the administration of the country; and we further find that each one of these 830,960 farmers lost $27.77 through the decrease in one year in the price of their wool, thus making a total loss to every sheep-raiser in the country of $58.65. What fine Democracy this is, and how it tallies with the promises of 1892.

That loss in the value of sheep we have shown to the farmer was worse than the scab. This loss in the value of wool comes on the top of the free-trade scab like a dose of foot rot. In fact, the present condition of the American sheep is worse than if it were afflicted either with the scab or foot rot, or with both. It will take longer to efface the Democratic disease than it would to eradicate all trace of either scab or foot rot, or both.

Look now at the loss in the value of the sheep and the loss in the value of the wool in each separate State, given as follows:

*Gain.

Every farmer can easily add together these two losses, the loss and value of the sheep and the loss and value of the wool, and he will know at once how much money the farmers in his own State have lost altogether since the country was cursed with a Democratic administration. Let the farmer figure up these losses and just think of the good times he was promised when the free traders were asking for his vote in 1892. Won't he just stir up that sheep mixture?

Now, look at the total loss to the sheep-raisers of the country in the different sections. In New England the farmers who own sheep lost $2,165,264; in the Middle States the farmers who raise sheep lost $2,695,152; in the Southern States they lost $9,048,180; in the Western States they lost $17,179,784; in the Pacific States they lost $8,874,225; in all other States and Territories they lost $8,771,104, making a total loss to the sheep farmers of the United States of almost $50,000,000 from this one farm crop alone.

Here are the figures:

	Loss by sections.		Total loss.
	Sheep.	Wool.
New England	$1,805,824	$359,440	$2,165,264
Middle States	793,661	1,901,491	2,695,152
Southern States	4,769,159	4,279,021	9,048,180
Western States	9,793,710	7,386,074	17,179,784
Pacific States	4,427,238	4,446,987	8,874,225
All other	4,070,521	4,700,583	8,771,104
Total United States	25,660,113	23,073,596	48,733,709

Nearly $50,000,000 or $58.65 hard cash lost on an average by each farmer in the country who was unfortunate enough to own sheep when the government of the country was placed in the hands of men who favor foreigners and hate Americans. And this is not all, because to-day's price of wool will average fully 12 cents per pound less than in January, 1893, and the value of each sheep is correspondingly less, not being worth more than $1.25 on an average for the whole country.

This is the result of the free-wool plague, worse than the scab or the foot rot, and worse than both. Make that mixture a little stronger, stir it up again, and keep on stirring it, and rub it well into the Democrats next fall; apply it strong, very strong, on the first Tuesday in November.

Mr. POWER. Wool has fallen so that to-day it would be very hard to get on an average more than 8 cents per pound net to the sheep-grower for his wool clip. There has been a falling off in the average price paid for wool last year compared with the average value at the beginning of the present year. According to the tables submitted, the value of the wool clip at the beginning of the year 1893 and its value at the beginning of 1894 show that the loss in New England on wool was $2,165,264, the loss in the Middle States $2,695,152, the loss in the Southern States $9,048,180, the loss in the Western States $17,179,784, the loss in the Pacific States $8,874,225, and the loss in all other States $8,771,104.

Since the time these estimates were made, as I have stated, the price of wool has still further declined, so that to-day it would be difficult to realize more than 8 cents per pound on our wool clip. The commercial reports for the last six months will bear me out in this statement.

This table gives the entire wool clip of the United States for 1893 as 301,637,102 pounds, valued at $68,391,055. To-day this clip, at 8 cents per pound, would bring $24,130,968, a loss of $44,260,087 to the sheep farmers of the United States, or $53.60 to each sheep-grower on the value of his wool clip for 1894 over the preceding year.

Adding to this the loss on sheep ($72), we find that the actual loss to every American sheep farmer is $125.60.

The table referred to in the article from the Economist gives the price of wool January, 1894, for Montana, at 13 cents per pound. The price now will not average over 8 cents per pound, which shows a difference of 12 cents loss on the pound over 1893. The value of the wool clip for 1893 in Montana was $3,539,337. Taking the same yield for 1894 (17,696,686 pounds), the value (at 8 cents per pound) is $1,415,734.88, showing a total loss over the preceding year of $2,123,602.32 to the Montana sheepmen, or an average loss of $2,500, in round numbers, to each sheep-grower in Montana on his wool clip for 1894. The average loss to each sheepman in Montana in the value of his flock is $2,100; add to this the loss on the value of his wool clip over 1893, $2,500, makes a total loss of $4,600 for every sheep-owner in the State.

The following table shows the loss to the sheep farmer in the various States on his sheep, and the present value of his wool:

	Loss by sections.		Total loss.
	Sheep.	Wool.
New England	$2,911,500	$1,046,248	$3,957,748
Middle States	6,880,156	4,623,947	11,504,103
Southern States	6,420,047	8,659,921	15,079,968
Western States	26,866,307	16,961,505	43,827,812
Pacific States	8,710,977	5,747,679	14,458,656
Other States	8,045,059	7,220,787	15,265,846
Total United States	59,834,046	44,260,087	104,094,133

It does seem to me that Democratic Senators in charge of the bill and Senators from the Southwest should consider this interest. They are killing the industries of the whole Northwest, and are protecting the manufacturing interests of the whole Northeast. It is certainly unnatural and unjust; but, as has been stated on this side of the Chamber, there seems to be no help for it. One or two votes from the other side of the Chamber would save this great industry. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], who is interested in the wool question, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH], the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], and the Senators from New York have it in their power to save this industry. Two votes from the other side of the Chamber would accomplish that purpose.

It has been stated here that if Montana had another Senator perhaps something could be done for this great industry, and the same has been said of the States of Washington and Wyoming, which, like Montana, are only represented in part in this body. If Montana had elected a Senator this year, he would have been a Democrat, and he would naturally do as the Democratic Senator from Ohio, the Democratic Senator from California, the Democratic Senator from North Dakota, and the Democratic Senator from Kansas have done, and be bound by the Democratic caucus to vote against the interests of his people.

It is well known that the trusts are protected by this bill, and no doubt will make a great deal of money by its passage. Where there are great gains, as in the sugar and lead trusts, some other interests must suffer. The $104,000,000 loss in sheep and wool, as above indicated, shows that this industry is the scapegoat and must bear the burden which will tend to equalize the gain in lead products, and in the sugar and whisky trusts, fathered and fostered by the Democratic party.

I know it is useless to offer any arguments, and that the people of the Northwest will have to abide by the will of the Democratic party, but I wish to state that the farmers will be heard from, and this is the last time that the two Senators, one from Missouri and one from Arkansas, will have it in their power to strangle the interests of the Western sheep-growers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. POWER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am paired on this question with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Allison,	Frye,	McMillan,	Quay,
Carey,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Patton,	Shoup,

Brice,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Butler,	Hale,	Palmer,	Wolcott.
Caffery,	Irby,	Pettigrew,
Camden,	McPherson,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 72, in paragraph 279, line 4, after the first word "on," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted "flocks, mungo, shoddy, garnetted waste, and carded waste, and carbonized noils, or carbonized wool, and on;" in line 7, after the word "tops," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "valued at not more than 35 cents per pound, the duty shall be 25," and inserted "15;" and in line 9, after the word "ad valorem" struck out "valued at over 35 cents per pound, the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem;" so as to make the paragraph read:

279. On flocks, mungo, shoddy, garnetted waste, and carded waste, and carbonized noils, or carbonized wool, and on wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals, in the form of roving, roping, or tops, 15 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask that the remaining reserved amendments to the wool schedule may be adopted as a whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire time to look at the schedule before deciding.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator can offer any amendment he chooses hereafter.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not so anxious to offer amendments, but I desire to be sure that the amendments now pending are proper amendments to be adopted to the bill; but as I see the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] on the other side of the Chamber, I shall take his word for it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask unanimous consent that the remaining amendments to the wool schedule may be acted upon as a whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered. The question is on concurring in the remainder of the reserved amendments made as in Committee of the Whole to the wool schedule.

The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In "Schedule L.—Silks and Silk Goods," in paragraph 298, on page 76, line 25, after the words "combed silk," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "25 cents per pound," and inserted "20 per cent ad valorem;" in line 3, on page 77, after the word "description," struck out "except spun silk, 20 per cent ad valorem," and inserted the word "and;" and in line 5, before the words "per centum," struck out "twenty" and inserted "thirty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

298. Silk partially manufactured from cocoons or from waste silk, and not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk, 20 per cent ad valorem. Thrown silk, not more advanced than singles, tram, organzine, sewing silk, twist, floss, and silk threads or yarns of every description, and spun silk in skeins, cops, warps, or on beams, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to say a word with reference to the silk industry. While we do not raise cocoons in this country, and therefore import the raw material, the raw silk, I believe that California alone, if the industry were properly developed, would supply all the raw silk that is needed for the manufacture of silk in this country; and I trust that one of the first acts of the next Republican Congress will be to provide for a bounty on the raising of silk-worms and the manufacture of raw silk in this country.

With reference to the manufactures of silk, as I have already given some tables showing the progress of the cotton and woolen industries, taken from Census Bulletin No. 242, I will present a similar table relating to the silk industry, which, under protection, is growing to large proportions.

I ask that the table may be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection.

The table referred to is as follows:

This table, with various others used by me in debate, was prepared under my direction by Mr. E. N. Hill, of Arkansas, who is very competent for the performance of such work. He was a Confederate officer, and is now not only a lawyer, but a student of economic questions, a fluent writer, and a statistician of great merit.

The table shows the operatives in silk receive larger wages on the average than those in either of the other textile fabrics, and that the number has increased in greater proportion.

Everything points to the conclusion that with protection continued the time would not be distant when the entire demand for silk goods could be supplied by the home product.

One thing we all know has resulted from the manufacture of silk in this country. Before it was begun the manufacture was confined principally to France, Italy, China, and Japan, and these countries put whatever prices they chose upon their fabrics. Whilst the United States is not yet a very large producer, what it does produce has caused a large reduction in prices.

At present the manufacture is confined principally to four States—New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, and Connecticut. The growth in Pennsylvania during the decade was enormous.

Whilst silk is not a necessary of life, it will always be used and there is no reason why its manufacture should not be encourged, as it already provides profitable labor for 50,000 people, and that number can be quadrupled even before the home demand is met.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole to paragraph 298, which has been stated.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was on page 77, to strike out paragraph 299, as follows:

299. Velvets, plushes, chenilles, or other pile fabrics, 45 per cent ad valorem.

And insert:

299. Velvets, chenilles, or other pile fabrics, $1.50 per pound; plushes, $1 per pound; but in no case shall the foregoing articles pay a less rate of duty than 50 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that there should be some designation there as to the material of which these plushes are composed. There may some trouble arise if that is not done. The language is "Velvets, chenilles, or other pile fabrics," so much per pound. They are composed sometimes of silk, sometimes of mohair, and sometimes of cotton and other materials. There should be inserted the words, "composed of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value."

Mr. VEST. Those words ought to be inserted.

Mr. FRYE. That would apply also to "plushes," beginning in line 8, after the semicolon.

Mr. VEST. After the words "pile fabrics," in line 8, I move to insert "composed of silk, or of which silk is the component of chief value;" and after the word "plushes," in the same line, to insert the same words.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 299, on page 77, line 8, it is proposed to amend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole by inserting after the words "pile fabrics," the words "composed of silk, or of which silk is the component of chief value;" and after the word "plushes," in the same line, to insert "composed of silk, or of which silk is the component of chief value."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in paragraph 300, on page 77, line 15, before the words "per cent," to strike out "forty" and insert "forty-five;" so as to make the paragraph read:

300. Webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, fringes, cords, and tassels, any of the foregoing which are elastic or non-elastic, buttons and ornaments, made of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, 45 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, in paragraph 301, on page 77, before the word "clothing" in line 20, to insert "nettings and veilings;" so as to make the paragraph read:

301. Laces and articles made wholly or in part of lace, and embroideries, including articles or fabrics embroidered by hand or machinery, handkerchiefs, neck ruffings and ruchings, nettings and veilings, clothing ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including knit goods made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, composed of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, and beaded silk goods, not specially provided for in this act, 50 per cent ad valorem.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, on page 38, paragraph 307, line 18, before the words "tissue paper," to strike out "all," and in line 21, before the words "per cent," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

307. Papers known commercially as copying paper, filtering paper, silver paper, and tissue paper, white, printed, or colored, made up in copying books, reams, or in any other form, and albumenized or sensitized paper, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. After the word "form," in line 20, I move to strike out the word "and" and insert "35 per cent ad valorem," and after the word "paper," in line 21, to insert the words "and writing paper and envelopes, embossed, engraved, printed, or ornamented."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was to insert as a new paragraph the following:

318½. Coal, bituminous and shale, 40 cents per ton; coal slack or culm, such as will pass through a half-inch screen, 15 cents per ton.

Mr. HILL. I desire a vote upon the insertion of that paragraph. I do not propose to take up the time of the Senate with any lengthy discussion of this question. The Senate understands my views upon it. I think that coal should be placed upon the free list. I think so because it is one of the raw materials which we have declared for many years should be placed upon the free list. The House so considered it, and the House passed the Wilson bill, and in that respect it was clearly a Democratic measure.

I hold in my hand an elaborate article taken from the North American Review of last February, wherein the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] argues this question far more ably than I can. He says the work must not stop with coal and ore, but it must be extended to all raw materials. Perhaps that is stretching the doctrine a little too far; but to the extent to which we pledged ourselves I am ready to go.

Mr. President, I think if coal were put upon the free list it would perfect this bill; it would make it better; and I think it is in the interest of true Democracy that this amendment should be rejected. I do not expect, of course, that it will be rejected, but I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is an additional reason why coal should be put upon the free list beyond the promises that were made in various ways by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and that is the fact that a syndicate has been organized in New York, composed of capitalists of large means, many of them, I suppose, Republicans, but mainly composed of distinguished Democrats, high in the councils of their party, who desire to help forward the principles of political and economic action advocated by the Senator from Texas. They bought large mines in Nova Scotia, and are prepared to put in force in New England this great boon to the New England industries, which was promised the owners of those industries by the Senator from Texas; they have invested their capital in this work, and they will receive a great disappointment if the Senate changes the Wilson bill, which gave them the opportunities they sought, and puts a duty upon coal.

Notwithstanding these large expectations of the Nova Scotia coal syndicate, I am forced to vote for a duty on coal, because I believe that coal is entitled to protection, that the owners of coal mines are entitled to protection, and that the hardy toilers in the mines of this country are entitled to be protected from coal mined by those who receive the low wages which prevail in Nova Scotia.

This whole question of the tariff is a question of wages; and high wages the Republican party is determined to secure for the workmen of America if protective duties will enable them to secure to those workmen high wages.

Therefore, notwithstanding the Nova Scotia coal syndicate, I oppose the Senator from New York, and I join the Senator from Texas in putting on a duty, an insufficient duty to be sure, but a duty which will afford some measure of protection to the coal mines of this country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HILL. As I understand, the question simply arises on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. That will bring up the question, I think, and those in favor of free coal will vote in the negative.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct; the question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], but if he were present I am satisfied he would vote the same way as I do, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

The result was announced—yeas 57, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—57.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Lindsay,	Pugh,
Allison,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Quay,
Bate,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	Frye,	McMillan,	Roach,
Blanchard,	George,	Manderson,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gibson,	Martin,	Smith,
Call,	Gorman,	Mitchell, Oregon	Teller,
Carey,	Gray,	Mitchell, Wis.	Turpie,
Chandler,	Harris,	Morgan,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Murphy,	Voorhees,

Butler,	Hansbrough,	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Camden,	Jones, Nev.	Sherman,	Wolcott.
Cameron,	McPherson,	Squire,
Gallinger,	Morrill,	Stewart,

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. PEFFER. I move to strike out paragraphs 339, 340, 341, and 342, and to insert as paragraph 501½ the following:

All leather and manufactures of leather shall be exempt from duty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraphs 339, 340, 341, and 342, and to insert as paragraph 501½, in the free list, the following:

All leather and manufactures of leather.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRYE. Has the amendment in paragraph 339 been concurred in? I understood the Presiding Officer to say that that paragraph had been reserved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment referred to will be stated from the desk.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 339, line 24, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "five" before the words "per cent" and inserted "ten;" so as to read:

339. Sole leather, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was on page 86, paragraph 341, in line 7, before the words "per centum," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" in line 10, before the words "per cent," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" and in line 13, before the words "per cent," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the paragraph read:

341. Calfskins, tanned, or tanned and dressed, dressed upper leather, including patent, enameled, and japanned leather, dressed or undressed, and finished; chamois or other skins not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 20 per cent ad valorem; bookbinders' calfskins, kangaroo, sheep and goat skins, including lamb and kid skins, dressed and finished, 20 per cent ad valorem; skins for morocco, tanned but unfinished, 10 per cent ad valorem; pianoforte leather and pianoforte action leather, 20 per cent ad valorem; boots and shoes, made of leather, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. ALLEN. I offered an amendment on Friday last to insert a paragraph to be considered as 262½ on the dutiable list, which I should like to have acted upon now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment is not in order, Mr. President. New amendments are not in order until the reserved amendments are disposed of.

Mr. ALLEN. This was a reserved amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This was a reserved amendment, as the Chair understands.

Mr. ALLISON. It was not a reserved amendment, because it was not an amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole. It therefore must be offered anew in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Nebraska later for the purpose of offering the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I meant to reserve paragraph 410. If it has not been reserved, I wish to have it treated as reserved long enough to ask the committee whether they have devised any better language than the phrase "books and periodicals devoted to original scientific research." That is a most unmeaning phrase, I think. I have received some communications from persons of high authority on such subjects since the paragraph was considered in Committee of the Whole. The suggestion was made that perhaps the Senator from Missouri would consult with the committee and try to substitute a better phrase.

Mr. VEST. I confess I have not done so; I have been so busy about other matters that I have not had the time.

Mr. HOAR. I shall not detain the Senate by discussing the matter.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that this whole paragraph will be open to amendment in conference.

Mr. HOAR. That is what I was about to say. I was about to say that I have not myself any language in mind which would accomplish the result, but that I hope, if it goes over now, the Senator will understand that the Senate does not adopt this language as being satisfied with it. I hope in conference we shall be able to get the matter in proper shape.

Mr. GRAY. Would not striking out the word "original" meet the Senator's view?

Mr. HOAR. I do not think the phrase "devoted to scientific research" would amount to anything. I shall let the matter pass for the present.

Mr. VEST. I am not satisfied with the language myself, and shall endeavor to arrange it suitably. I shall be glad to have any suggestion about it.

Mr. HOAR. I merely wanted to call attention to it now.

Mr. HIGGINS. I desire to say that my attention has been called to this by important book publishers, who call attention to the fact that the term "scientific research" is a very misleading term, and, worse than that, that it would be very difficult of application in the actual business of the Government.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not know that I understand the paragraph, but what harm would there be in striking out "devoted to original scientific research"?

Mr. GRAY. Strike out the whole of it.

Mr. DOLPH. And let it stand "scientific books and periodicals." I suppose that it was meant to cover books used by persons who are investigating scientific questions. I do not know why, if books are used for educational purposes, they should not also be subject to the same duty.

Mr. VEST. I think it would be a good idea to strike out the words "devoted to original scientific research," and then we can adjust the matter in conference.

Mr. ALLISON. Let that be done.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not object to its being done now tentatively, but the adoption of that amendment will make the paragraph very much worse than it is now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WHITE in the Chair). Will the Senator from Missouri be kind enough to restate his proposition?

Mr. VEST. My proposition is to strike out the words in line 2, "devoted to original scientific research," so to leave the matter open in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed on page 97, line 2, paragraph 410, to strike out the words "devoted to original scientific research;" so as to read:

410. Books, engravings, photographs, bound or unbound, etchings, music, maps, and charts, which shall have been printed more than twenty years at the date of importation, and all hydrographic charts, and scientific books and periodicals, and publications issued for their subscribers by scientific and literary associations or academies, or publications of individuals for gratuitous private circulation, and public documents issued by foreign governments.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will not insist on that now, because that would lead to debate. It is a new proposition, and the Senator will see that it involves very much indeed.

Mr. VEST. My only object was to leave it to the conference committee, so that the whole matter will be open.

Mr. HOAR. That was my object.

Mr. VEST. Very well. I am satisfied with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, the Chair understands, is withdrawn.

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the next reserved amendment.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, on page 109, paragraph 575, line 22, before the word "professional," struck out the word "such;" in the same line, after the word "productions," inserted "whether round or in relief;" in line 24, after the word "sculpture," struck out "only" and inserted "and the word 'painting,' as used in this act shall not be understood to include such as are made wholly or in part by stenciling or other mechanical process;" so as to make the paragraph read:

575. Painting, in oil or water colors, original drawings and sketches, and artists' proofs of etchings and engravings, and statuary, not otherwise provided for in this act, but the term "statuary" as herein used shall be understood to include only professional productions whether round or in relief, in marble, stone, alabaster, wood, or metal, of a statuary or sculptor, and the word "painting," as used in this act, shall not be understood to include such as are made wholly or in part by stenciling or other mechanical process.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. KYLE. I inquire if a vote has been taken on paragraph 575. I believe I made a reservation there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota perhaps did not note that the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in, in the absence of objection; but if there be objection it will stand open.

Mr. KYLE. I move to strike out the whole of paragraph 575.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota moves to strike out paragraph 575, which has just been read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that is not in order now, as that is not an amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. It will be in order later.

Mr. MILLS. We can dispose of it by voting on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. ALLEN. I reserved an amendment to the same paragraph, 575. In Committee of the Whole I offered an amendment as a substitute, placing paragraph 575 in the free list. I ask that it be taken up and considered now. It is the provision of the McKinley act.

Mr. FRYE. These amendments are not now in order.

Mr. ALDRICH. I made that suggestion a few moments ago.

Mr. FRYE. They will be in order as soon as the reserved amendments are disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood there was no objection to the Senator calling attention to the point.

Mr. ALDRICH. We are proceeding under an order of the Senate, and I think we had better proceed in regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will have an opportunity to offer his amendment later.

Mr. ALLEN. The amendment I wish to offer is among the reserved amendments. It was reserved by me expressly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand that it is proposed to amend the paragraph.

Mr. ALLEN. I propose to amend this paragraph by striking it out and substituting the provision of the McKinley act, and I reserved it expressly.

Mr. FRYE. That does not make it in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that is the purpose of the Senator, the Chair will hold that it is in order.

Mr. HOAR. How can it be in order? It is a new amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Nebraska reserved the right to amend this paragraph.

Mr. HOAR. I understand, if the Chair will pardon me, that what are spoken of as reserved amendments, that is, amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, are now being dealt with under the order of the Senate, and the notice that the Senator reserved the right to offer a new amendment—a right which he had even if he had not given notice and had not reserved—does not bring the amendment into this period of time. It comes up when the Senator makes his new motion. The Senator from Nebraska does not simply ask a vote on the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, but proposes a new amendment to strike out and insert. That comes later; not now.

Mr. DOLPH. The bill is in the Senate, and is subject to amendment as it was in Committee of the Whole. When the bill comes from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate the question is, Shall the amendments which have been made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in in the Senate. The custom is, unless some Senator wants a separate vote on an amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, to adopt the amendments thus made as a whole in the Senate; but if a Senator wants a separate vote, he indicates that by reserving certain amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. Therefore the reserved amendments are the committee amendments now in the bill, which must first be acted upon if there is objection. After they are disposed of, any amendments made as in Committee of the Whole and voted on and lost, may be offered and voted upon in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the order heretofore followed has been in the line suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, as when the sugar schedule was under consideration there were motions made to strike out and insert, and Senators desiring to offer amendments were not confined to the amendments theretofore offered to that particular schedule.

Mr. HARRIS. The amendments to the sugar schedule, my recollection is, transcended what I understand to be the rule of the Senate, but they were offered and acted upon by consent. There is nothing clearer to my mind than that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska at this time is not in order. The only question is upon the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole; will the Senate amend that amendment, not the whole paragraph, or concur in it without amendment. When we have gone through with the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, and have concurred or nonconcurred in them, then every line of the bill from the first to the last is amendable, and the motion of the Senator from Nebraska will be perfectly in order at that time, but it is not now.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Tennessee seems to think that I did not reserve this amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FRYE. That does not make any odds.

Mr. ALLEN. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator offered it, but the Committee of the Whole did not agree to it, and therefore it is not now under consideration in the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, every amendment that the committee has offered has been followed in identically this way. Every schedule that has been considered has been treated in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Nebraska will pardon the Chair, the Chair, following the plan heretofore adopted, entertained the amendment; but upon careful consideration, the present occupant of the Chair is of opinion that the Senator from Nebraska can offer the amendment later; but the Senate will now proceed with the amendments adopted as in Committee of the Whole. The question before the Senate is in relation to the amendment to paragraph 575, which has been read and acted upon, but which was reopened on the request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. ALLEN. I now move to strike out paragraph 575.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At this time the Chair holds it is not in order so to do. The next reserved amendment will be read. The Chair will state that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] reserved the consideration of certain amendments with reference to the wood schedule.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should be glad to have the reserved amendments all disposed of. Section 5, on page 124, was reserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That section has not been reached, the Chair will state to the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. In paragraph 676, which is in the wood schedule, line 12, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "or dressed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will first be stated, and then the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, on page 119, paragraph 676, line 11, after the word "lumber," inserted the words "rough or dressed, except boards, plank, deals, and other lumber of cedar, lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all other cabinet woods," so as to make the paragraph read:

676. Sawed boards, plank, deals, and other lumber, rough or dressed, except boards, plank, deals and other lumber of cedar, lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all other cabinet woods.

The amendment proposed by Mr. ALLISON was in line 12, after the word "rough," to strike out "or dressed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa to the amendment made as in the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was, on page 120, paragraph 685, line 2, after the word "waste," to strike out "rags, and flocks, including," and to insert "slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, and;" in line 4, after the word "wool," to insert "all the foregoing not otherwise herein provided for;" and, beginning in line 5, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That this paragraph shall take effect on and after August 2, 1894.

So as to make the paragraph read:

685. All wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and and all wool and hair on the skin, noils, yarn waste, card waste, bur waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, and all waste, or rags composed wholly or in part of wool, all the foregoing not otherwise herein provided for.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert as a substitute for the part printed in italics in section 5, what I send to the Secretary's desk. Before that is read, however, I move to insert after the word "origin," in line 16, the words "and the quantity of their contents."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 124, section 5, line 16, after the word "origin," it is proposed to insert "and the quantity of their contents;" so as to read:

SEC. 5. That all articles of foreign manufacture, such as are usually or ordinarily marked, stamped, branded, or labeled, and all packages containing such or other imported articles, shall, respectively, be plainly marked, stamped, branded, or labeled in legible English words, so as to indicate the country of their origin and the quantity of their contents.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that amendment, but I want a yea-and-nay vote upon the free-wool clause just passed over.

Mr. FRYE. We can move to strike that out when we get through with the committee amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire a vote by yeas and nays on that paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole to the paragraph will now be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 124, section 5, line 16, after the word "and," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "unless" and inserted "until;" in line 18, after the word "importer," it struck out "except under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe," and inserted "and if any article of imported merchandise or the packages containing the same shall be marked, stamped, branded, or labeled with a quantity in excess of said merchandise, then the same shall not be delivered to the importer until the false marking thereon shall be totally removed or effaced."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I now offer the amendment which I have sent to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole by striking out, beginning in line 19 with the words "and if any article of imported merchandise" and ending with the words "removed or effaced," in line 24, and inserting:

Should any article of imported merchandise be marked, stamped, branded, or labeled so as to indicate a quantity, number, or measurement in excess of the quantity, number, or measurement actually contained in such article, no delivery of the same shall be made to the importer until the mark, stamp, brand, or label, as the case may be, shall be changed so as to conform to the real facts of the case.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suggest that the word "real" before the word "facts" might as well be omitted. If they be facts, of course they are "real facts."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I accept that modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified accordingly. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. ALLEN. Paragraph 686 has been passed over, and at that point an amendment was to have been offered. It was offered when the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it read.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not in order yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for information. The Chair has no knowledge of the contents of the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. If it is a new amendment it is not in order.

Mr. ALLEN. It should be paragraph 686.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand the Senator from Nebraska to have stated whether the amendment proposed is an amendment to the paragraph or a substitute for it.

Mr. ALLEN. It is to come in as a new paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add as a new paragraph:

683½. All wire imported exclusively for fencing shall be admitted free of duty under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a new amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the matter will be passed over for the present. The Chair will state to the Senator from Nebraska that the amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to be heard for a moment. This amendment was considered when the bill was as in Committee of the Whole. The question of free wire was taken up and discussed; and it was determined by the committee, and distinctly stated by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who has this matter in charge, that wire was to be placed upon the free list, and that he would formulate a paragraph and offer it at the proper time. It was among the reserved paragraphs mentioned by him yesterday. The whole question was fully and fairly considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and was reserved.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment which was offered by the Senator from Nebraska in relation to barbed wire is in the bill and the request was made for a separate vote upon that item, which has not yet been taken. It will be taken up when the other reserved amendments have been gone through with. It was passed over yesterday.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply wish to call attention to the fact that like every other amendment which has been considered in this Chamber to-day it was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and was reserved.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Nebraska did ask the Senator from Arkansas, there having been a vote that barbed wire should be free, whether he intended to propose a suitable clause to be added to the free list, and I certainly understood the Senator from Arkansas to say that he was prepared to complete the arrangement. But this is not the proper time, I understand, to do this thing. The Senate is now considering the reserved amendments. After those are considered, of course, it will be in order, and it will be the duty of the Senator from Arkansas to move to add to the free list the words which the Senator from Nebraska desires and understands are to be added to the free list. I did not understand that it is in order to do so at this time.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas rose.

Mr. FRYE. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question before the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I object to further debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained. The Secretary will state the next reserved amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to rise to a question of order. I ask whether it is in order to object to debate after a Senator has finished his remarks?

Mr. FRYE. I saw another Senator on the floor at the moment.

Mr. PALMER. I desire to make an inquiry for information. I wish to state that at some suitable time I shall call the attention of the Senate to the proviso found on page 28, at the end of paragraph 124, in respect to barbed wire.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is what we have been talking about.

Mr. PALMER. I am not so familiar with the rules of the Senate as to know when that ought to be done. I am very anxious to have that considered. I do not want to be foreclosed. I wish Senators who are familiar with the rules to inform me at what time I may properly call up that proviso.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator from Illinois that that was one of the reserved amendments, and it has not yet been disposed of. It was postponed a day or two since in the absence of the Senator from Illinois who has just addressed the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, page 171, line 13, after the words "ninety-five" the Senate as in Committee of the Whole inserted "and until the 1st day of January, 1900;" and in the same line, after the word "be," it inserted the word "assessed;" so as to read:

That from and after the 1st day of January, 1895, and until the 1st day of January, 1900, there shall be assessed, levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income, etc.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 54, line 15, after the word "income," the Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out the words:

Of every person residing in the United States, or any citizen of the United States residing abroad, derived in each preceding calendar year.

And inserted:

Received in the preceding calendar year by every citizen of the United States, whether residing at home or abroad, and every person residing therein.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest that a vote be taken on concurring in all the amendments to the income-tax sections, except such as Senators desire to reserve.

Mr. HILL. I do not care so far as I am concerned to take the time of the Senate upon concurring in the amendment already made. The amendments to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate will come up subsequently. I have no objection to all the amendments to the income tax provisions being adopted pro forma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. Before that is done I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to page 181, line 4, in which a section is described as section 56. As that section now stands it is section 29.

Mr. VEST. That is on account of the changes?

Mr. ALLISON. It is on account of the changes "29" should be inserted instead of "56" after the word "section."

Mr. VEST. Let that change be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri moves to strike out "56" and insert "29" in line 4, page 181, so as to read:

And complying with the provisions of section 29 of this act.

Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that amendment will be made.

Mr. McLAURIN. As I understood the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, it is that all amendments to the income tax provisions shall be considered as adopted.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, not as adopted, but that they shall all be voted on at once.

Mr. McLAURIN. There is one of those provisions which I have asked to reserve for a separate vote.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is a verbal correction which I ask unanimous consent to have made at this time. On page 73, paragraph 282, in making a motion some days since to strike out certain words, the words "and felts for" were stricken out, which should not have been done. Merely the words "paper-maker's use and" should have been stricken out; so as to read:

On blankets, hats of wool, and flannels for underwear and felts for printing machines.

I ask that that correction be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, paragraph 282, page 73, after the word "wear," restore the words "and felts for," and strike out the words "paper-maker's use and;" so as to read:

And felts for printing machines, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAURIN. What became of the reserved amendment on page 173? Has not that been reached?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 55, page 173, after the words "United States," the Senate as in Committee of the Whole inserted:

Not including the salary of the President of the United States and the judges of the courts of the United States, but.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McLAURIN. This is an amendment which was offered by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and accepted by the committee. No vote was taken on it as in Committee of the Whole. I trust that the Senate will not concur in the amendment. It proceeds upon the assumption that Congress has no power to tax the President of the United States and the judges as other people are taxed. This assumption is derived, so far as the judges are concerned, from the following section of the Constitution:

The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

I grant that if this is an effort to diminish the compensation of judges or to diminish the compensation of the President of the United States, either directly or indirectly, it could not be done; it would be in contravention of this provision of the Constitution of the United States; but it is not an effort either indirectly or directly to diminish the compensation which they have received. It is to require the judges of the courts and the President of the United States to pay taxes like other people pay them. It never entered the minds of the framers of the Constitution, as I conceive, that those persons should be exempt from the payment of taxes as other men pay taxes. It was only intended that the compensation which should be given by law to the judges of the courts should not be diminished during their continuance in office. Of course if it can not be done directly it can not be done indirectly.

So of the President of the United States. But it was never conceived that on account of this provision of the Constitution they should be exempt from paying taxes as other men pay them. When they received compensation for their services to the country as judges or as President it is part of their income just exactly as the clerk in the store or the bookkeeper's income is made up in part of the compensation he receives for his services.

One of the fundamental principles of the Government is that there shall be no class legislation.

The very first declaration of a self-evident truth made by the framers of the Declaration of Independence is that all men are created equal. It was not intended by the framers of the Constitution or the founders of our Government to say that this class of men shall be exempt from the payment of taxes. It was not intended to say that one class of men should be exempt. On the contrary, it was intended to say that all men should be put upon an equal footing, but only that the salary of the President of the United States and the salary of the judges of the courts of the United States should not be diminished during their continuance in office.

It has been a favorite doctrine of the Democratic party as I have understood it and have heard it declared all my life that there should be no discrimination; that there should be no class legislation; that when this provision is undertaken to be incorporated upon the statute books of the United States, I for one want to enter my solemn protest against it. It is the veriest class legislation. It is true the amount of tax from this income will be small, but so was the amount of the tax small which was required to be paid upon tea in 1775, and yet it was the cause of the independence of this country and its separation from the British Empire.

I trust that the Democratic party, which will be held responsible for the legislation contained in this bill, will not be the first party to foist upon the statute books of the country plain class legislation.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I wish to add a word to what has been stated so well by the Senator from Mississippi. I am pleased to know that he has asked the Senate to strike out this particular language from the bill. I had it encircled around myself for the same purpose.

The constitutional provision which requires that the salaries of the judges of the courts shall not be diminished during their term of service is specific in its terms, and there can be no mistaking the meaning of the language. The Congress is prohibited from diminishing their salaries by direct legislation or in any other way that would affect the salaries. It is not to be presumed that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution to relieve any class of citizens from bearing their proper proportion of the burdens of taxation. We are now trying to enforce a system of just taxation, so that every man and every woman in the country whose income exceeds $4,000 a year shall pay a certain percentage on the excess. There can be no fairer system of taxation than that except the graduated system.

I believe that when a case of this kind is taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, if it ever is, that court will be unanimous, notwithstanding it affects the members of that exalted tribunal, in holding that no citizen of the United States shall be exempt from taxation unless expressly excepted by statute. That is the point which I understand the Senator from Mississippi has made.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, this whole question was very fully discussed the other day; and while the Senate of the United States sometimes does some very peculiar things I do not suppose it is prepared to reverse itself within a single week. The propriety, in the first place, of exempting the salaries of the judges of the courts of the United States is very apparent. The Senator from Mississippi admits that Congress has no right, directly or indirectly, to diminish the compensation of the United States judges appointed for life when the Constitution says that such compensation shall not be diminished during their term of office.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator from New York allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. McLAURIN. I do not admit that Congress has no power to require judges to list their salaries as a portion of their income just as other people do.

Mr. HILL. That is a mere play upon words. In the first place, the salary is established by Congress, and the Constitution says it shall not thereafter be changed during their continuance in office. This is simply an effort by Congress, not by the ordinary means and methods of taxation, but by the peculiar species of taxation known as an income tax, to tax the salaries of these individuals and thus compel them to pay directly back to the Government a portion of the compensation which they receive. It is indirectly taking away from them the very compensation which the Constitution contemplated should not be diminished.

Mr. President, this is not a new question. Away back in 1863, under the old odious income tax from which the country then suffered, the question arose. I hold in my hand a copy of a letter written by Roger B. Taney, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury, in which he disagrees with every proposition now presented by the Senator from Mississippi. He holds that it is an attempt to reduce the compensation of the judges. It was a delicate matter for the court; it will be a delicate matter again.

But, if there was no question of right under the law, as a question of propriety, those judges ought not to be called upon to pass upon the question. The compensation which they derive was intended not to be disturbed, not to be diminished during their continuance in office. It was not intended that they should be exempt from ordinary taxation, but this is a special taxation based upon the amount of their income. How can the question be raised in the courts? It affects the salaries of the judges of the highest court in the land. What a spectacle it would be for those judges to be haggling over the income tax upon a question raised under the Constitution. I do not know how it can be properly presented to the court, because all the judges will be interested. We owe it to this other branch of our Government that they shall be relieved from this burden.

The same reasons which urge the exemption of the judges of the courts of the United States require that the salary of our President shall also be exempt. The same language is employed in the Constitution of the United States, and the same reasons exist. We have provided that a certain sum shall be paid to the President for his services to our country. The theory is that it shall not be disturbed, that it shall not be diminished, that it shall not be affected by legislation; and yet, by this indirect method of taking back from him, not in general taxation, but by a pretense of special taxation, you invade the Constitution of your country.

Mr. President, by the very terms of the bill which the Senator from Mississippi seems anxious to vote for, the salaries of all the judges of the State courts are exempt, the salary of every county officer in the United States is exempt, the salary of every municipal officer exceeding $4,000 is exempt. That is class legislation which is inherent in the bill; and it is a pretty poor time at this late day to come forward and say you ought not to pass this bill because it is class legislation. It is inherent in the measure and you can not avoid it.

Mr. President, as a matter of right, as a matter of constitutional law, as a matter of propriety, this provision should remain in the bill. It is about the only portion of the bill that I am disposed to approve so far as the income-tax feature is concerned.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Tennessee allow me one moment? I am about to leave the Chamber.

Mr. HARRIS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. With one exception, I wish to put on record my entire approbation of what has been said by the Senator from New York and what is said in Chief Justice Taney's letter, which was put upon the files of the Senate the other day. The Chief Justice says, as the Senator from New York repeats, that every member of the court being interested they could not properly determine the constitutionality of this matter if we were to err and should undertake to reduce the salary in this indirect way. I wish to express my dissent from that proposition, and I think the dissent ought to be recorded now, if the question should ever come up in the future.

I understand that each Department of the Government is entrusted with the constitutional authority in its own sphere of protecting its own constitutional functions and powers; I conceive that it would be the duty of the President of the United States to interpose his veto to a measure which trenched upon the executive power under the Constitution, and that for the protection of his office, if we undertake to tax his salary, it would be his duty to veto the bill on that sole ground.

I conceive that if the question came before the court it would not be the little individual tax of the particular judge, but it would be the protection of the constitutional independence and authority and dignity of the office. Certainly it can not be undignified for the judges of the Supreme Court to protect their own constitutional right by their decision, especially when we remember that the Constitution lodges in the legislative bodies the power of fixing their own salaries in the first instance. It would be a very singular thing if the Constitution had committed to the Senate and House of Representatives the right to raise their own salaries without limit, and at the same time had denied to the Supreme Court or to the President of the United States the power to check a law which unconstitutionally reduces theirs.

With that exception, Mr. President, I cordially agree with what has been said by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Now I am prepared—

> To hear the watch-dog's honest bark,
> Bay deep-mouth'd welcome as we draw near home.

[Laughter.]

Mr. HARRIS. I am grateful to the Senator from Massachusetts for his parting flying shot. I rose only to say that this amendment was never considered by the Committee on Finance or recommended by that committee, and for myself, as a member of the committee, I shall vote against concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. My speech is made.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I just want to speak a few words in reply to the Senator from New York. The letter to which he referred is not the decision of the Supreme Court, but it is an extrajudicial opinion of one of the judges of the court, a Chief Justice to be sure, on a question in which he was interested. This is not taking away from the judges or from the President of the United States any portion of their salary without giving them a reasonable consideration for it.

The judges of the United States courts and the President of the United States get the benefit of the protection of their property, and of their rights, and of their liberty by the law of the country, and it is their duty to share with all the other citizens of the country in bearing the burden of the expenses of government and the expenses of administering the laws. When those judges and the President of the United States receive compensation for their services they should be required just as other citizens of the country are required to take a part of that compensation and help defray the expenses of the Government, and to require them to do it is not diminishing their salary in the sense of the Constitution.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I think that the argument which proves the right of Congress to levy this tax is unanswerable. Senators who argue in opposition to this tax forget the rules which govern the taxing power. The salary of a judge is no more protected by the Constitution of the United States than every man's private property. That Senators may see how this matter stands I turn to the fifth article of amendment:

> Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

So in proceeding with this argument we must understand that every single particle of property which a citizen owns, whether it be personal or real, is as much protected from seizure by the Government of the United States as the salary of a judge, yet it has been held from time immemorial that these constitutional protections and guarantees of private property were not guarantees nor were they protections against the taxing power. The taxing power is above all these guarantees, so whenever the Congress of the United States, acting under the Constitution, proceeds to levy a tax it may levy it upon any species of property owned by any citizen, it makes no difference how acquired or for what purpose acquired, and the levy is made either in accordance with the rule of apportionment required by the Constitution or the rule of uniformity.

Can any man say that a judge is any more entitled to his salary than a citizen is to his homestead? Yet when you come to levy a tax the Government can levy it upon the homestead, and why not levy it upon the income? It is said you diminish the salary during the continuance in office. You do not diminish the compensation. He gets all the compensation which the law authorizes him to get. It becomes his private property, and it is no more sacred than any other property he has.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me a moment?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Has Congress any power after it has established the compensation of the judges or the President to withhold any portion of the salary thus prescribed?

Mr. GEORGE. It has no power to diminish the compensation.

Mr. HILL. If it withholds it does it not diminish it?

Mr. GEORGE. If it refuses to pay the compensation then it withholds it.

Mr. HILL. Precisely.

Mr. GEORGE. But when it taxes the compensation after it becomes the private property of the judge it does not diminish it; it merely makes the judge do as every other citizen is compelled to do, pay for the property which he owns. I admit that if we were to pass a law taxing only the income of judges and taxing nobody else's income it would be an indirect mode of diminishing the compensation, and it would be an evasion of the constitutional rule; but when you impose the same tax upon every other citizen that you impose upon the judges you simply put the judge in the same position that you place other citizens, and he has no right under the Constitution to an exemption of that sort.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi whether it would make any difference in his argument if a proposition should be made to tax 50 per cent all salaries paid by the United States?

Mr. GEORGE. If the proposition was to tax 50 per cent all salaries of all citizens derived from whatever source, it would apply as well to the salaries of judges as to everybody else; but I have just stated, if the Senator had listened, that there would be a difference if we made a discrimination against the judges and taxed them, and then did not tax anybody else under similar circumstances.

Mr. President, I think that argument proves the constitutionality of this tax.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, one word more. If there should be proposed a 50 per cent diminution of all salaries paid by the Government, there would be no discrimination against the judges in that?

Mr. GEORGE. None whatever.

Mr. HAWLEY. Would it be lawful?

Mr. GEORGE. And if Congress in its wisdom should tax 50 per cent all incomes—not all salaries, but all incomes—it would fall just as fairly and justly and constitutionally upon the income of a judge as upon the income of a private citizen.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. The power to tax is the power to destroy; to take all the property of a citizen, if necessary, for governmental purposes. Does not that rule apply as much to the judges and the President of the United States as to the property of a private citizen?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly, with only one qualification, that the tax must be a genuine tax and not a mere provision to evade the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "United States," line 18, page 173, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the words:

Not including the salary of the President of the United States and the judges of the courts of the United States, but.

Mr. McLAURIN and Mr. HILL called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Vermont has not voted.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Gray,	Morgan,	Ransom,
Allison,	Hale,	Palmer,	Roach,
Brice,	Hansbrough,	Pasco,	Sherman,
Carey,	Hawley,	Patton,	Squire,
Cullom,	Higgins,	Perkins,	Teller,
Davis,	Hill,	Platt,	Vilas,
Dixon,	Lodge,	Power,	Washburn.
Dolph,	McMillan,	Pugh,
Dubois,	Mitchell, Oregon	Quay,

NAYS—36.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Jarvis,	Peffer,
Bate,	Frye,	Jones, Ark.	Pettigrew,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Kyle,	Shoup,
Blackburn	George,	Lindsay,	Smith,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Turpie,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Vest,
Chandler,	Harris,	Martin,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hunton,	Mitchell, Wis.	Walsh,

NOT VOTING—15.

Butler,	Daniel,	McPherson,	Stewart,
Call,	Gordon,	Mills,	Wilson,
Camden,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Cameron,	Jones, Nev.	Proctor,

So the amendment was nonconcurred in.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest that unless there is some other amendment to the income tax clauses that a Senator wishes to reserve for a special vote, the motion be put on concurring in all the amendments at once.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is upon concurring in the remainder of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole upon the question of the income tax.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. VEST. On page 189, line 23, I move to strike out the words "and sixthly" in the provision in regard to the income tax.

The amendment was agreed to

Mr. PEFFER. There is an amendment reserved on page 192. I ask the Senate to strike out the proviso contained in lines 12, 13, and 14.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 192, after the word "dollars," in line 12, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the following proviso:

Provided, That salaries due to State, county, or municipal officers shall be exempt from the income tax herein levied.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out section 86, on page 229, in the folowing words:

SEC. 86. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

And inserted:

SEC. 69. Every person whose business it is to manufacture tobacco or snuff for himself, or who employs others to manufacture tobacco or snuff, whether such manufacture be by cutting, pressing, grinding, crushing or rubbing of any raw or leaf-tobacco, or otherwise preparing raw or leaf-tobacco, or manufactured or partially manufactured tobacco or snuff, or the putting up for use or consumption of scraps, waste, clippings, stems, or deposits of tobacco resulting from any process of handling tobacco, or by the working or preparation of leaf-tobacco, tobacco-stems, scraps, clippings, or waste, by shifting, twisting, screening, or any other process, shall be regarded as a manufacturer of tobacco.

Every person shall also be regarded as a manufacturer of tobacco whose business it is to sell leaf tobacco in quantities less than a hogshead, case, or bale; or who sells directly to consumers, or to persons other than duly registered dealers in leaf tobacco, or duly registered manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or to persons who purchase in packages for export; and all tobacco so sold by such persons shall be regarded as manufactured tobacco, and such manufactured tobacco shall be put up and prepared by such manufacturer in such packages only as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That farmers and growers of tobacco who sell leaf tobacco of their own growth and raising shall not be regarded as manufacturers of tobacco; and so much of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and acts amendatory thereof, as are in conflict with this act are hereby repealed: Provided further, That section 27, chapter 1244, page 863, volume 1 of Supplement to the Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended by striking out all after the word "repealed," in line 5 of said section, as follows: "Provided, however, That it shall be the duty of every farmer or planter producing and selling leaf tobacco, on demand of any internal-revenue officer or other authorized agent of the Treasury Department, to furnish said officer or agent a true and complete statement, verified by oath, of all of his sales of leaf tobacco, the number of hogsheads, cases, or pounds, with the name and residence, in each instance, of the person to whom sold and the place to which it is shipped; and every farmer or planter who willfully refuses to furnish such information, or who knowingly makes false statements as to any of the facts aforesaid, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $500." That section 3361 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This amendment was reserved by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

Mr. KYLE. I will waive the reservation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reservation is waived.

Mr. ALLISON. Then the amendment ought to be concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 232, section 89, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the following:

But nothing herein contained shall be held to abrogate, or in any way affect such reciprocal commercial arrangements as have been heretofore made and now exist between the United States and foreign countries, except where such arrangements are inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

Mr. CHANDLER. I asked that that amendment might be reserved simply for the purpose of stating that notwithstanding the committee amendment, which is obscure in its language, the passage of this bill does destroy the existing reciprocity arrangements. The clause added by the committee may possibly "keep the word of promise to the ear," but it certainly "breaks it to the hope." When the committee say, "but nothing herein contained shall be held to abrogate, or in any way affect such reciprocal commercial arrangements as have been heretofore made and now exist between the United States and foreign countries," they seem to preserve those arrangements; but when they say, "except where such arrangements are inconsistent with the provisions of this act," of course they destroy those arrangements.

Those arrangements notoriously were built up upon the provisions of law in reference to sugar, and now when we impose duties upon sugar by this proposed act and make them absolute by the terms of the law, we do not save the existing arrangements by this amendment of the committee. The clause might just as well be left out entirely. It ought to be understood that when the bill passes, if it does pass, with this clause in it the reciprocity arrangements are destroyed just as effectually as if this amendment had not been submitted by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. PEFFER. I reserved an amendment to come in on page 233 as a new section. I send it to the desk.

Mr. FRYE. Does that complete the reserved committee amendments?

Mr. CULLOM. It does not.

Mr. HALE. There are several other reserved amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will have the amendments enumerated. There are yet some which were passed over.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 1, line 3, I move to strike out the words "That after the 30th day of June, 1894," and to insert "That on and after the 1st day of August, 1894."

Mr. ALLISON. I take it for granted the Senator from Arkansas does not expect that in fact the proposed act will take effect on that day, but only moves to change the date now so as to make it a future date instead of a past one. I suppose the question of the final date when the proposed act shall take effect will be settled at a later period, because if it is to be settled now a later date than the 1st of August surely should be inserted.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The date can be changed whenever it is necessary to be done. The amendment keeps the date in the future.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, paragraph 2, after the word "acid," the Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out "20 per cent ad valorem" and inserted "2 cents per pound;" so as to read:

Boracic acid, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. VEST. I move to amend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole by striking out "two" and inserting "three;" so as to read:

Boracic acid, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. CHANDLER. I feel authorized, in behalf of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], to extend his thanks to the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the following clause at the beginning of paragraph 10, page 2, line 23:

Borax, crude, or borate of soda, or borate of lime, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. VEST. I move to amend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole by striking out the clause and inserting:

Borax, crude, or borate of soda, 2 cents per pound; borate of lime, 1½ cents per pound.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. HILL. The date when the proposed act is to go into effect having now been fixed at August 1, 1894, I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that in paragraphs 182 and 182½, pages 40 and 41, the words heretofore inserted, "on and after the passage of this act," should be stricken out.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New York allow me to inquire of the Chair if all the reserved amendments which were passed over have been considered?

Mr. CULLOM. They have not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They have not yet been considered.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I hope the Senator from New York will allow us to dispose of all the reserved amendments.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This is simply a proposition to fix some dates to conform to the date which has just been fixed in the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HILL. The suggestion I make is, that instead of the words "on and after the passage of this act" there should be inserted the words "on and after August 1, 1894," in several different places on page 40, paragraphs 182 and 182½, in lines 20 and 21, in lines 23 and 24, in line 25, and line 1 on page 41; and then again in lines 22 and 23 on page 41. That makes the bill consistent.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from New York that he will accomplish the purpose he has in view by striking out the words "on and after the passage of this act," because unless there is some special reservation to the contrary those clauses will take effect when the remainder of the bill takes effect. The whole of line 20, in paragraph 182, down to the word "ninety-five" in line 21, should go out. Then, in paragraph 182½, line 25, the words "on and after January 1, 1895," should be stricken out.

Then the schedule will stand with the remainder of the bill and take effect at the same time, whenever that may be.

Mr. HILL. It is one and the same thing, as I understand the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ALLISON. It is one and the same thing, but it is a great deal better.

Mr. HILL. I accept that suggestion, if the Senator from Arkansas has no objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection.

Mr. HILL. Then I move to strike out those dates.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The word "thereafter" should be changed to "hereafter."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment will be made without objection.

Mr. ALLISON. The same change should be made on page 41, line 23.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That was pointed out by the Senator from New York.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 91, section 2, line 18, after the figure "2," I move to restore "on and after;" before the word "the" I move to strike out "after;" after the word "the"

I move to restore "first;" before the word "day" I move to strike out "thirtieth," and after the words "day of" I move to strike out "June" and insert "August;" so that the clause will read "on and after the 1st day of August, 1894."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that the reserved amendments which were passed over will be taken in their order as they come in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I wish to finish these dates. There are a number of them. I think they ought to be disposed of at one time.

Mr. CULLOM. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 202, line 13, section 38, I move to strike out the word "July" and insert "August;" so as to read, "on and after the 1st day of August, 1894."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 169, line 9, section 23, I move to strike out the word "June" and insert "August;" so as to read, "from and after the 1st day of August, 1894."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. On page 213, line 13, I move to strike out the words in the first line of section 48——

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall object to that amendment. Those words were put in by a vote of the Senate after discussion, and I shall certainly object to any change being made now in that section.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator from Rhode Island object to making it conform to the other dates?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

Mr. HALE. All that can be settled in conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next reserved amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, at the end of paragraph 124, after the word "pound," in line 20, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That barbed wire, commonly used for fencing, shall be admitted free of duty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I ask permission to make a very brief statement in regard to this particular item. I shall not occupy the attention of the Senate more than the five minutes which has been suggested as a proper length of time to be occupied by a Senator.

Barbed wire is a completed product, and it is well understood throughout all the West. The difficulty about it is that every material from which barbed wire is made is subject to a duty. It is one of the few instances, so far as I have observed, where the particular completed product has been selected for free admission and where all the materials of which the completed product is composed are made the subject of duties. I am aware of the great desire of the Senate to conclude the bill this evening, but I ask attention to the fact that it is the exception where the finished product is admitted free, and where all the materials of which it is composed are the subject of taxation.

Now, I wish to state in reference to my own personal knowledge and experience that since the barbed-wire patents have expired the price has been greatly reduced. The business is a very extensive one.

Very many large and very many small establishments exist in the West, and the price of barbed wire has fallen to a point which ought to be satisfactory. It is complained by those who manufacture it that it is made an exception and that they are embarrassed by the prospect of being compelled to confront taxed material while their product is expressly exempted. I hope that the Senate will concur in that view and strike out this proviso.

The fact is that barbed wire to-day is worth about 2¼ cents per pound. I have been a purchaser of barbed wire for many years. From the first until now it has fallen in price, and as the patents have expired the price has become less and less. The best galvanized barbed wire can now be bought at wholesale anywhere in the West for 2¼ cents per pound.

It is an industry that deserves encouragement, if any industry does. Its peculiar hardship is that all its material is taxed and the product is made free.

Mr. GORMAN. Do I understand the Senator from Illinois to move to amend the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole by striking out the proviso?

Mr. PALMER. I think that will effect it, to strike out the proviso.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas whether the proviso is one of the amendments of the Committee on Finance?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. No, sir; the proviso was not offered by the committee. It was proposed on the floor of the Senate and put in by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand the Senator from Illinois moves to perfect the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole by striking out the proviso.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is the same thing.

Mr. ALLEN. I offered and there now lies on the table an amendment to be inserted as paragraph 683½, on page 120, which covers this entire question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated for information.

The SECRETARY. Insert as paragraph 683½:

683½. All wire imported exclusively for fencing shall be admitted free of duty, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

Mr. ALLEN. I may state that the amendment was approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and that it covers the entire question of barbed wire and all other kinds of fence wire. I have nothing further to say particularly in reference to the matter.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from Nebraska was not heard on this side. Do I understand him to say that the proposed paragraph was prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. ALLEN. I say that as I understand it—I will give my authority if necessary—the paragraph as now proposed meets the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. I did not get it from the Secretary of the Treasury. I know nothing about it individually.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Nebraska mean that the idea or the language is satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will not interrupt me upon an immaterial matter.

Mr. PLATT. It is not immaterial.

Mr. ALLEN. I said I am informed the amendment I offer meets the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; that is, the form of the amendment. The question when this matter first came up was how a paragraph could be so framed as to prevent evasions and to prevent the importation of wire which might be imported as fence wire and then used for other purposes. It was to avoid that the paragraph was framed so as to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury might prescribe certain rules and regulations to prevent fraud.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator from Nebraska permit me? He does not mean to say more than that the form of the amendment is satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. ALLEN. That is all. I do not mean to say that the Secretary is a party to it in any way, except that the form of the amendment meets his approval as covering the question of evasions of the law.

Mr. President, I can not understand why the Senator from Illinois desires to place this wire back upon the taxable list. The people are compelled to pay an enormous tax upon the wire or the material that enters into the fence wire. They are taxed upon it heavily. The Western States are growing very rapidly indeed. Our population is increasing, farms are being opened, and a great demand exists in that part of the country for fence wire. We have no material with which to fence except wire of this character. The tax upon it is a very great burden in a new country among a poor people. The benefit of free wire to my State alone will be $1,000,000 a year at the present time, and in a State which is constantly growing and constantly developing from year to year it can easily be seen that the burden grows greater as time grows apace.

I know of no reason why such wire should not be classed with other free material, unless there be some barbed-wire factories in the State of Illinois which want some protection, so that they can raise the price of this necessary article to the people west of the Missouri River. They have practically a control of the market of Nebraska. It is shipped from Chicago out to Nebraska, Kansas, and the neighboring States, so that Chicago has practically the control of that market. I can see no benefit to be derived from placing this article back upon the taxable list unless it be to please and to profit a few manufacturers in Chicago and other portions of the State of Illinois.

Mr. PALMER. It would please not a few manufacturers in Illinois, and I trust it would profit them, if this proviso were stricken out. At the same time the Senator is mistaken in his designation of a few. Since the expiration of the patent, which by the way was for an Illinois device, fence-wire manufactories are numerous in Illinois, and the price has been lowered, it would seem to the satisfaction of any fair-minded purchaser. I have stated that the best steel barbed wire can now be bought for 2½ cents a pound. The manufacturers of barbed wire in Indiana and Illinois—not in Chicago, but in other parts of the State—do not complain so much of free wire as they complain of the hardship of being compelled to submit to the payment of a duty upon the material of which barbed wire is made. Every material is chargeable with a duty.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me? Is not the duty upon the materials which enter into the article charged to the consumer?

Mr. PALMER. I have no doubt it is.

Mr. ALLEN. And the tax which the Senator would have put on wire of course would be charged to the consumer also. Now, I simply wish to inquire of the Senator whether he asks that the duty be put on wire as a protection to the wire factories of the State of Illinois?

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from Nebraska will state his proposition a little more clearly, so that I can comprehend it, I shall answer it frankly. I understand the Senator to inquire whether I ask for the imposition of a duty for the benefit of the manufacturers of barbed wire in the State of Illinois. Is that the question?

Mr. ALLEN. It is.

Mr. PALMER. I answer with the greatest possible frankness that I do, and I maintain that it is not just to them that all the materials of which fence wire is made shall be taxed and that the wire shall be admitted free of duty.

I do not ask protection for the manufacturers of barbed wire; I simply ask that they shall not be placed at the disadvantage of being compelled to pay a duty upon the rawest materials, ingots, and at the same time be handicapped, and the foreign producer of barbed wire, free from any of these burdens, shall have the privilege of invading the market. If the Senator will give us free raw material out of which to manufacture the wire we shall ask for no protection.

But if the manufacturers of wire in Joliet and Springfield, Ill., and elsewhere are compelled to pay a duty upon the ingots and upon everything except the mere preparation of the barbed wire, the mere twisting of it, the process of which is understood by the Senate, and their competitors, who pay no such duties, are allowed to enter the market free, it simply handicaps them. I am no protectionist in any special sense, but I do not believe in handicapping American industries for the benefit of others. The proposition here is to burden the raw material by taxes and then allow the finished product to be imported free of duty. That I call left-handed protection. I shall not consume time, as I know how impatient the Senate is.

Mr. CULLOM rose.

Mr. PALMER. My colleague [Mr. CULLOM], who has an extensive acquaintance with this subject, will speak for a few moments.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois a question before he takes his seat, if he will allow me. Do I understand him to say that under the influence of the existing protective duty the price of fence wire has gone down?

Mr. PALMER. No; I never said that.

Mr. ALDRICH. That it was borne down.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator was a little indistinct. I thought I heard him say that the price had been cheapened under the influence of protection.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator will pardon me; I have not said that.

Mr. CHANDLER. What did the Senator from Illinois say?

Mr. PALMER. I spoke of the expiration of the patent. If the Senator will pardon me, I will state that I am in the position of an old gentleman down in Virginia——

Mr. CHANDLER. I know it is the Senator's first speech for protection, but still he ought to take all the time he needs.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator will perceive that I am very awkward at it, at all events. But I am like an old gentleman in a story which Mr. Lincoln told me. He said that down in Virginia a gentleman was making a very eloquent speech, and some one in the crowd interrupted him. The speaker made no reply. Somebody said, "Why do you not answer him?" He said "I am hunting votes, and that man's vote is just as good as anybody's else." That is my answer to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will have my vote.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate more than a moment. When barbed wire was patented, the first year only about 300 pounds of it were made, and it was sold at 18 cents a pound. The business was established, and began to grow and grow, and as it grew the price of barbed wire went down. In the present year it is estimated that from 250,000 to 260,000 tons of what is called barbed wire will be manufactured. There are two kinds of barbed wire. One is plain, painted, I believe, and the other, galvanized barbed wire, costs a little more.

I understand from the manufacturers of barbed wire that to-day it is being sold in the market at 1½ cents per pound for the cheaper quality and a little more for the galvanized wire. I shall not undertake to argue whether the protective duty placed upon barbed wire has brought about the cheapness of the article, but it is the fact that it is so cheap to-day that you can fence up a section of land with a very few dollars' worth of wire. While the other day this matter was under consideration in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, as I saw by the RECORD, it was stated, I think by the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], that barbed wire is going out of use. The fact as to the whole country is exactly the opposite. There was more made last year than ever before, and according to the estimates of the present year there will be more made this year than there was last year or during any previous year. So it is still greatly in demand.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] says that if barbed wire goes upon the protected list, as I understand him, it will cost his State a million dollars. For that sum the Senator can almost fence up his State with barbed wire at its present price.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me suggest to the Senator from Illinois that the price of barbed wire in the State of Nebraska is much higher to the actual consumer than it is in the State of Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. It may be a little higher on account of transportation.

Mr. ALLEN. It is a good deal higher.

Mr. CULLOM. But every year the product is being reduced in price. The Senator from Nebraska says that a few manufacturers in Illinois will be pleased and benefited by the imposition of a duty. I desire, in perfect frankness, to remind the Senator that there are tens of thousands of laboring men who are dependent upon this industry in the State of Illinois alone. The manufacture of barbed wire is not confined to the State of Illinois entirely. Barbed wire is manufactured in Missouri and Pennsylvania, and I believe in Indiana, and perhaps in other States. In my own State alone, all the steel and iron mills in the city of Joliet, when last I heard from them, were closed except the barbed wire mills, and upon those alone thousands of men, who are dependent upon the operations of the manufacturing establishments, are getting their livelihood from day to day.

I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate. I hope however, that this discrimination will not be made, because I think the Senator from Nebraska will realize that while it is barely possible that he might get barbed wire in Nebraska at a fraction of a cent less than he does now, I am informed that if we put barbed wire upon the free list as the tariff now stands, it will result in closing up these establishments, and then the constituents of the Senator from Nebraska will have to pay more that they are paying now. So I hope the motion of my colleague to strike out this proviso will be agreed to without further delay.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I had not intended to break the rule which imposes silence on the friends of the bill, but inasmuch as it fell to me by an assignment of duty from the committee to have an interview with the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to this matter, I shall simply recall the attention of the Senate to the fact that when this subject was under discussion in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole there was a very strong and apparently a strongly prevailing sentiment in favor of admitting fence wire free of duty as a matter of just acknowledgment to the agricultural interest, which has to bear mainly and chiefly the burden of the discrimination imposed by the tariff bill in favor of manufactures, and as a matter of justice to the widely extended sections of the West and Northwest where fence wire is necessary to agricultural operations.

At that time a difference was indulged in amongst us as to the proper phraseology to be used in order to express safely what should be admitted as fencing wires. Various phrases were suggested on the floor, and finally the matter was passed with the understanding that at a later date when the bill came into the Senate a phrase should be accepted which met the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and permitted all fencing wires to come in free. Accordingly, after an interview with the Secretary of the Treasury the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] was prepared. It met his approval, and for that reason it has been offered to carry into effect what was understood to be the desire as expressed in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska will prevail, for, without entering into the argument, so much at least is due and ought to be yielded to the farming interest of this country in the great Northwest.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose the first question to be determined is whether we shall strike out the proviso.

Mr. VILAS. Is not the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska pending?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not yet.

Mr. CULLOM. It is not pending.

Mr. VILAS. It amounts to the same thing.

Mr. CULLOM. Of course.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for a moment? I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that the vote be taken on the paragraph I have just offered, and let whatever the result may be upon that amendment determine the question.

Mr. CULLOM. My colleague has charge of the matter.

Mr. PALMER. Let the proposed paragraph be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert in the free list as paragraph 683½:

683½. All wire imported exclusively for fencing shall be admitted free of duty, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am greatly surprised at the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], that the Secretary of the Treasury or anybody else who has ever had any experience in customs matters should have approved the amendment which has just been read from the desk. You might as well put all wire upon the free list, and have it done with, as to adopt that provision. It says that all wire, without any regard to size, which is "imported exclusively for fencing," not used exclusively for fencing, but "imported exclusively" for that purpose, shall be admitted free.

After it is imported and goes out of the hands of the importer, it can be used for any other purpose, because it is utterly impossible to follow it. You might just as well, by a provision in the bill, put all wires of all sizes and numbers upon the free list as to adopt that provision. I am utterly amazed that the present Secretary of the Treasury, or anybody else who has any knowledge of customs matters, should have consented to a provision of this kind. I certainly believe the Senate will never approve it.

Mr. VILAS. The exact point suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island was suggested when the matter was under discussion in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and it was presented by me to the Secretary of the Treasury. He said it was perfectly easy, by the system of regulations devised for that purpose, to control the admission of wire proffered as wire for fencing, in such manner that it should not furnish a device for admitting other wire.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for a question?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly. I have said all I desire to say.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to ask the Senator if he called the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury to the fact that there is a certain kind of corrugated iron strips, I believe they are called, which are manufactured very largely by one of the constituents of the Senators from New Jersey, and which go into competition very largely with barbed wire, and are not alluded to in the proposed amendment at all. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether he called attention to the fact that that competing wire for fencing was alluded to by me in the former debate, and whether the provision here is intended to cover the suggestion I then made?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the fact that the wire of which he speaks, manufactured in New Jersey, is also a barbed wire in a sense, although not in the same sense.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not a wire at all. I happen to know about it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. They are strips.

Mr. ALLISON. They are strips with little points stuck in them.

Mr. MCPHERSON. With sharp points sticking up.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; that wire does not come at all within the definition here given.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It serves more as an admonition than as a punishment to animals that run against it. At the same time it is a barbed wire. I would suppose a designation of barbed wire by the Treasury Department would include it as barbed wire.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not wire at all, and it is not barbed at all. So how they could call it barbed wire I do not see.

Mr. VILAS. In answer to the question of the Senator from Iowa, I will say that I did not state to the Secretary of the Treasury that some particular person or firm manufacture a particular wire, but I called his attention to the fact that corrugated wire or corrugated strips were manufactured.

All those are known as wires, and fencing wires in ordinary phrase; and it was the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, as I understood him at the time, that this phraseology, with authority to make special rules and regulations, would be ample to provide all the guards which are necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. They are not commercially known as wires, and certainly could not be classified as barbed wires.

Mr. PALMER. I am afraid the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska, indorsed by the Senator from Wisconsin, is not broad enough to cover the particular point in view.

The wire of which the barbed wire is made, as we all know, is not round now; but in the beginning barbed wire was made of two wires. The barb was inserted between the wires, and was retained by twisting the wires. Barbed wire is a manufactured product, therefore, made of wire. The wire is made not necessarily by the maker of the barbed wire or him who makes the fencing wire. Two wires may be said to lie side by side. Mr. Glyddon, who invented the barbed wire, commenced twisting it by the simplest method, and his first essay was to buy a ton of wire. The process was then attemptedof putting two wires side and side, the barb was inserted, and the wires were twisted so as to retain the barb. The process has been perfected from that time until the present.

I ask the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Nebraska whether "wire for fencing" would mean the finished product produced by the twisting of the wire and the insertion of the barbs? The finished product is not known in commerce as wire. It is produced by the twisting of two separate wires and the retention of the barb. I do not think the language proposed is comprehensive enough. It is possible it may be, but I should prefer, if I am allowed to have my way about it, to stand by my own motion to strike out the proviso.

Mr. CAREY. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him a question? I wish to ask the Senator whether he is in favor of a duty on barbed wire for the purpose of revenue or to protect the industry?

Mr. PALMER. I think, after we have been several months on this question, that Senators ought to tolerate me in attacking one abuse. I want it because the people want it; that is all.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall stand by the Senator from Illinois, and I desire to aid his argument by saying that all attempts in the administration of the revenue laws to make an article dutiable or not dutiable according as it is used for a particular purpose or not used for that purpose will utterly fail.

No Secretary of the Treasury can devise regulations which can be put in force so that when two articles, identically the same, come into the country one of them shall be dutiable if put to a particular use after it gets into the country, and the other shall not be dutiable if put to a different use. Attempts of this kind have been made at various times, and they have all proved failures. If the amendment is adopted every yard of telegraph wire will come into this country free of duty, and hundreds of thousands, not to say millions, of dollars of importations will come here which will supplant the domestic manufacture. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] will, I believe, concur in what has been said on this subject, that it is utterly futile to say that an article shall be free if it comes in for a particular purpose. It has been tried, and it can not be done.

I distinctly understood the Senator from Wisconsin when he said that the Secretary of the Treasury had approved of this form of amendment. I know the Secretary of the Treasury very well; he has a high reputation in this country, throughout its length and its breadth, but I do not understand when the Secretary of the Treasury puts in writing a paragraph designed to carry out an arrangement which has been made here in the Senate he commits himself in the slightest degree to the approval of the moral character of the transaction which he simply helps put in form.

So the Secretary of the Treasury is not a party to the arrangement which has been made upon the other side of this Chamber with the Senator from Nebraska, any more than the Secretary of the Treasury is responsible for the moral character of the sugar schedule when he kindly put it in form, in words, and delivered it to the Senator from Arkansas. He was a sort of scribe, as it were; but I say the Secretary of the Treasury is no more involved in that clause or in this clause than a a girl typewriter is when she takes down the eloquent words which my friend from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] dictates to her. He is not in the slightest degree responsible. The business of the country is transacted here.

When we want a little thing put in shape to carry out an arrangement which is made in the Senate or in any of the committee rooms of the Senate or anywhere about the Capitol, whenever we want a little thing like this put into words, it is the duty as it is the pleasure of the Secretary of the Treasury to put it into words. But I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Carlisle, is not in the slightest degree to be responsible for barbed fence wire which has at last run the gauntlet of all the tribulations of the pending bill and got on the free list.

Mr. CULLOM. I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate to one fact, and that is that the House bill, which we are considering now, put barbed wire or all fence wire on the dutiable list at 30 per cent. I think most of my friends on the other side of the Chamber have felt tolerably friendly to that bill.

It seems to me that my colleague and those of us who stand with him on this question are asking nothing unreasonable. We are not asking anything beyond what the other House has done, and we simply desire that this industry, which is a great industry in this country, shall not be destroyed. The idea has seemed to prevail that it is a trifling affair, that there is not much of it; but there is 260,000 tons of it manufactured every year. It is selling at 1½ cents a pound, and I understand the Senator from Wyoming states that he has had an offer of a whole carload from Minneapolis, delivered at the capital of Wyoming, for 2⅜ cents per pound. In view of these facts it seems to me there should not be any question as to the propriety of putting this article on the protected list.

I desire to repeat that there are great establishments engaged in this industry, working thousands of men, and, as I said, in my own State those mechanics and laboring men will be absolutely out of employment and dependent if the establishments are closed up.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Illinois says he thinks he is asking nothing unreasonable when he asks that fence wire be permitted to remain upon the taxable list. It occurs to me that it is entirely unreasonable on the part of the Senator from Illinois to ask to have it remain there. The present duty upon fence wire, as I remember it, is 1¼ cents a pound.

Mr. CULLOM. One and one-quarter cents a pound.

Mr. ALLEN. One and three-quarter cents a pound, as I recollect it. One and three-quarter cents a pound on ordinary fence wire is placed as a protective duty to the manufacturer. Both Senators from Illinois confess that they want this duty for protection. They do not claim that it is necessary for revenue, or that it is proper. The sole claim is that some manufacturers of barbed wire or fence wire in the State of Illinois will have their profits diminished to some extent if the article goes upon the free list.

Now, I should like to know how it is possible to manufacture wire in Germany and Belgium and bring it across the ocean and ship it from the seaboard into the interior of this country and come into successful competition with the manufacturers of wire in Chicago or Springfield. It can not be done. It is simply for the purpose of giving the manufacturer of wire an opportunity to put his hand into the pocket of the farmer, who is constructing a home in the West, and take his profits out of the farmer's pocket.

That is its purpose. Call it what you see fit, give it whatever soft name you may see fit to give it, it means nothing more nor less than that the persons who have waxed fat and grown rich in this country in the manufacture of barbed wire, are to put their hands into the pockets of the poor people who are compelled to use this fence wire, and take some of their profits from them.

Is it right that a State which is developing constantly and rapidly, like the States lying west of the Missouri River, whose people must have this article—for they must fence their fields and their pastures—is it right that a people who are struggling to build up empires and States should be burdened by an unnecessary tax upon an article like this simply to appease the wishes of a few manufacturers? The manufacture of wire, with this upon the free list, will go on just as it does now. The only effect will be to diminish somewhat the profits of the manufacturers, and give the benefit to the men who consume the product.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate long, but I may as well take advantage for a few moments even at this serious time, of the opportunity to show the benefits of protection. I quote substantially, condensing somewhat, from a leading manufacturer of this fence wire. He says that wire rods and billets are the raw material. In 1883, when he first engaged in manufacturing barbed wire, he imported all the rods from abroad. The average price paid for the foreign rod in New York was $62 to $65 per ton, costing him in Illinois about $68. They were importing rods then from a free-trade country.

Establishments grew up at Johnstown, Worcester, Cleveland, Pittsburg, Beaver Falls, Braddock, Joliet. With a duty of six-tenths of a cent a pound placed on wire rods in 1883, the price of the domestic rod—the domestic rod, remember, made here in America—has gradually gone down until to-day the wire-maker can get a similar rod and a better one at home for $30 a ton, a good deal less than half, made in America, employing American workmen, as compared with the rod in 1883, which was bought abroad for $68.

This manufacturer submits that when a duty of six-tenths of a cent a pound was placed upon the rod, it had a tendency to decrease the cost of wire rods rather than increase it. In 1883 barbed wire produced from a foreign rod was selling at 8 to 10 cents a pound; to-day, the Senators tell me, it is selling in the West at from 1½ to 1¾ cents a pound.

I do not see what is the use of opening it to foreign makers. Nor do I know how you are to have these rods imported from abroad to manufacture into wire for fencing and gain an advantage by it. As for the foreign market, if these gentlemen choose to import foreign rods, which they do not, for they would rather take the American, they can make wire fencing for the foreign market, they can get a rebate of 99 per cent of the duties and they can compete in the foreign market with the foreign manufacturer of fencing. By retaining the duty on rods and fence wire, the foreign manufacturers are prevented from an unjust cutting under and a destruction of the interests of our makers. If we remove the duty upon foreign rods and wire, we shall find men who employ labor at one-half or one-third the wages paid in this country underselling our makers, at least long enough to weaken them, and then they would have the market for themselves. We would not have fence wire cheaper in the end, but we would banish an American industry.

I shall not quote at length what the manufacturer says about wire nails, but their history is very like that of fence wire. They were sold when made from a foreign rod at 10 cents a pound, and they are now sold for $1.90 a keg of 100 pounds. I think we had better let the law alone as it is.

You will get no benefit for the farmer by placing this article upon the free list. The Senator from Nebraska had an admirable opportunity to help the farmers. He could have made a difference of a cent and a half a pound in the sugar the farmers buy, and he did not.

Mr. PLATT. Will my colleague allow me a moment?

Mr. HAWLEY. With pleasure.

Mr. PLATT. It is not intended to help the farmer. It is intended to help the politician.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is obvious. It is a change in the tariff for the protection of politicians.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, I hope that the duty will be maintained upon barbed wire for the reason that it cheapens the wire to the consumer in the Western country. We can buy barbed wire in the State of Illinois cheaper than you can buy it in the State of Pennsylvania. The great factories for the production of barbed wire are located in the West. I have had some experience in the purchase of barbed wire. In 1882 I paid as high as $12 a hundred pounds for it. Within the past year I have been offered a carload of barbed wire shipped from the city of Minneapolis to a station in Wyoming for $2.38 a hundred pounds. It will not do the farmer in Nebraska any good to have the wire imported free on the Atlantic seaboard or on the Pacific coast. The railroads are what increase the price of wire in our country. If we could go to the factories we could buy it to-day for $1.50, and I think it is $1.78 for the galvanized barbed wire.

If you reduce the factory price of barbed wire it will certainly close up the factories in this country and thereby increase the price of barbed wire in the Western country.

All of us on this side of the Chamber certainly feel very good to think that a distinguished free trader from Illinois has come out in favor of protection for barbed wire. It shows the former utterance of the Democratic party to be in some respects correct, that the tariff question is a local issue. But so far as barbed wire is concerned, if we are going to have barbed wire cheaper than it is to-day, it must be by the maintenance of the factories which are located in the extreme West.

I am not certain, but I am under the impression that there is already a barbed-wire factory in the State of the Senator from Nebraska. If not, there was a good deal said about the establishment of a barbed-wire factory in the city of Omaha. In every Western city they are building up barbed-wire factories, and barbed wire has become so cheap that we find it is used almost universally in States like Missouri, where lumber is abundant, and beside trees which are suitable for fence rails. It is as cheap to-day as we can possibly ask that it shall be.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senator from Wyoming. The Senator says that he can buy barbed wire for $2.38 a hundred pounds, as I understand, by the carload. The Senator is an extremely rich man, and he buys everything that he gets by the carload, but the farmer can not do that, and he does not get barbed wire as cheap as the Senator from Wyoming. He has to pay 3 and sometimes more than 3 cents a pound for it. Out on the Western prairies I have known it within a short time to be over 4 cents a pound.

I am talking about the man who has a little farm to fence. He is compelled to go to the local dealer and buy his wire as the great majority do buy their wire. Why hold up as a refutation of my argument some man who is worth one hundred thousand or two hundred thousand dollars or a million dollars, who can go to the manufacturer and buy wire cheaper than can the ordinary farmer? It is the men who break the prairies and make homes there who have these bills to pay, and they have an enormous price to pay for wire to the local dealer. Ninety-nine per cent of every foot or pound of wire used in the Western country is bought of a local dealer and not bought by wholesale. Why, then, hold up the case of a man who is exceptional and who buys by the trainload or the carload at wholesale figures?

Mr. CAREY. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to know what he is going to do with the middleman or the local dealer?

Mr. ALLEN. I decline to go into the question of the middleman. I simply state the facts.

Mr. CAREY. I will venture to say that if the Senator from Nebraska will go into his own town he can buy barbed wire by retail at the lowest possible profit. It is like nails. You can buy nails at one-eighth of a cent profit by retail. They are standard goods, which are sold at the lowest possible profit all over the country; and I do not know how the Senator would cure the difficulty. If he permits men to import barbed wire by the shipload, how is he going to do away with the local merchant? I suppose under his plan he proposes to have each farmer who has one acre to fence import his own barbed wire.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Wyoming has no right to undertake to put me in such a light. I recognize the necessity of the local dealer. The average man must deal with the local dealer; and it is because he is compelled to deal with the local dealer and pay the local dealer's prices that I want this enormous tax of a cent and three-quarters taken off this necessary article.

Mr. MANDERSON. I do not wish to detain the Senate, except to announce an axiom and give its abundant proof. It is true that proof is a sort of a boomerang, but it proves the assertion that is frequently made. The axiom of the free trader is that the tariff is a tax paid by the consumer. Proof of that proposition: The tariff on barbed wire is 1¼ cents per pound. It sells where it is made in Illinois at 1¼ cents per pound. Result: The duty off, of course the manufacturer would sell it to the consumer for nothing. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to strike out the proviso at the end of paragraph 124.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FAULKNER. I inquire whether the question is not on concurring in the committee amendment inserting the entire paragraph?

Mr. HARRIS. No; the committee amendment was voluminous, and the question now is to strike out the proviso at the end of the committee amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. The question is on the motion of my colleague [Mr. PALMER] to strike out the proviso at the end of the paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In order that the Senate may understand the question, the Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 124, on page 28, line 20, after the word "pound," it is proposed to strike out:

Provided further, That barbed wire, commonly used for fencing, shall be free of duty.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PUGH (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and withdraw my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is paired on this vote with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN].

Mr. WASHBURN (after having voted in the affirmative). I did not notice when I voted that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], with whom I am paired, was absent. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—38.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Power,
Allison,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Blanchard,	Frye,	McMillan,	Quay,
Brice,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Carey,	Hale,	Murphy,	Smith,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Squire,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Patton,	Teller.
Davis,	Higgins,	Perkins,
Dixon.	Hill,	Platt,

NAYS—32.

Allen,	Blackburn,	Coke,	George,
Bate,	Call,	Daniel,	Gibson,
Berry,	Cockrell,	Faulkner,	Gray,
Harris,	Kyle,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Hunton,	Lindsay,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Irby,	McLaurin,	Peffer,	Voorhees.
Jarvis,	Mills,	Ransom,	Walsh,
Jones, Ark.	Mitchell, Wis.	Roach,	White.

NOT VOTING—15.

Butler,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Washburn.
Camden.	McPherson.	Pugh,	Wilson,
Cameron,	Martin,	Stewart,	Wolcott.
Gordon,	Morrill.	Vest.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended in the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. What has become of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That has not yet been acted upon.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. MILLS. Now, I move to strike out paragraphs 123 and 124, and insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraphs 123 and 124, and in lieu thereof to insert:

Wire rods, rivet, screw, fence nail, and other iron or steel wire rods, and all wires made from them, shall be admitted free of duty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

I wish also to state that on the amendment to place barbed wire on the dutiable list, if I had been present I should have voted "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHOUP (after having voted in the negative). Has the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. SHOUP. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 52; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Allen,	Gray,	McLaurin,	Vilas,
Bate,	Irby,	Mills,	Walsh.
Berry,	Jarvis,	Pasco,
Coke,	Kyle,	Peffer,
George,	Lindsay,	Roach,

NAYS—52.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hunton,	Perkins,
Allison,	Dubois,	Jones, Ark.	Platt,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Jones, Nev.	Power,
Brice,	Frye,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Caffery,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Quay,
Call,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Carey.	Gorman,	Martin,	Smith,
Chandler,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Squire,
Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Wis.	Teller,
Cullom,	Harris,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Daniel,	Hawley,	Murphy,	Vest,
Davis,	Higgins,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Dixon.	Hill,	Patton,	Washburn.

NOT VOTING—16.

Blanchard,	Gordon,	Pettigrew,	Stewart,
Butler,	Hoar,	Pugh,	White,
Camden,	McPherson,	Ransom,	Wilson,
Cameron,	Morrill.	Shoup,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask a vote now on the paragraph which I offered to be inserted as paragraph 683¼.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new paragraph the following:

683¼. All wire imported exclusively for fencing shall be admitted free of duty, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. CALL. Then I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Allen,	George,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Bate,	Gray,	McLaurin,	Roach,
Berry,	Harris,	Martin,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Hunton,	Mills,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Irby,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas,

NAYS—38.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Quay,
Allison,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Brice,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Shoup,
Caffery,	Gorman,	Mitchell, Oregon	Smith,
Carey,	Hale,	Murphy,	Squire,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Patton,	Teller,
Davis,	Higgins,	Perkins,	Washburn.
Dixon,	Hill,	Platt,
Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Power,

NOT VOTING—15.

Blanchard,	Cameron,	McPherson,	Pugh,
Butler,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Call,	Gordon,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.
Camden,	Hoar,	Proctor,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANSOM. I beg leave to offer an amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I inquire of the Chair if the consideration of the reserved amendments has been completed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reserved amendments are completed. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38 it is proposed to insert the following as a new paragraph:

167¾. Mica, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. RANSOM. That is strictly a revenue duty.

Mr. PLATT. I should feel fully satisfied to vote for that amendment if the Senator from North Carolina had not voted to put all wire on the free list; but I think, on the whole, I shall vote for the Senator's amendment.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina to permit me to offer an amendment on the subject of wire, which will dispose of the matter we have just had in hand. I find that the amendment as it was offered did not contain all the words which I supposed were in it, and which were necessary to obviate the objection urged by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. If the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, I will simply present the amendment, and ask for a vote upon it without further discussion.

Mr. RANSOM. Of course, I can not say no upon a subject of that sort when it is requested by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a new paragraph the following:

683¼. All wire and material for the manufacture of wire imported exclusively for fencing shall be admitted free of duty, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

Mr. ALDRICH. Instead of all wire being admitted free under that amendment, if it should be adopted, it would admit all iron and steel free. That would be the only effect of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], and withhold my vote.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 29, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Allen,	George,	McLaurin,	Vest,
Bate,	Gray,	Mills,	Vilas,
Berry,	Harris,	Mitchell, Wis.	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	Hunton,	Pasco,	Walsh,
Caffery,	Irby,	Peffer,	White.
Cockrell,	Jarvis,	Ransom,
Coke,	Kyle,	Roach,
Daniel,	Lindsay,	Turpie,

NAYS—40.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Lodge,	Platt,
Allison,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Power,
Brice,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Quay,
Carey,	Gorman,	Martin,	Sherman,
Chandler,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Morgan,	Smith,
Davis,	Hawley,	Murphy,	Squire,
Dixon,	Higgins,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Dolph,	Hill,	Patton,	Teller,
Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Perkins,	Washburn.

NOT VOTING—16.

Blanchard,	Cameron,	Jones, Ark.	Proctor,
Butler,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Pugh,
Call,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Wilson,
Camden,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RANSOM. I now ask that my amendment may be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, on page 38, as a new paragraph, the following:

167¾. Mica, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HILL. Where is that article now in this bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. On the free list.

Mr. HILL. What do the committee say as to where it ought to be?

Mr. VEST. We put it on the free list, and I have seen no reason to change my opinion about it.

Mr. RANSOM. I wish the Senator from New York would ask me the question. He has not been in the habit of consulting the committee generally on this bill, and it seems to be rather a late hour for him to ask the Finance Committee as to how he shall vote.

Mr. HILL. I should be glad to hear from the Senator the reasons why the action of the committee should be reversed at this stage of the game? [Laughter.]

Mr. RANSOM. I will tell the Senator from New York with great pleasure why it should be done.

The duty named in the amendment is strictly a revenue duty, and the very lowest duty ever put upon mica. Formerly the duty was over 100 per cent, and the duty in the McKinley act is 35 per cent. In the McKinley act the duty was reduced about 100 per cent from what it was before. If I am in error, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] will correct me.

The revenue derived from the importations of mica, with the duty at 35 per cent, amounts to about $75,000 annually. In my judgment—and I think the committee will agree with me—at 20 per cent ad valorem the revenue derived from that source will be nearly $200,000. The Senator from New York knows as well as I do that we have to raise revenue by imposing duties upon articles imported into this country.

I will say to the Senator from New York that if there is an industry in the country to which some attention ought to be paid it is that of working mica in the mines of North Carolina, and I have no doubt in the mines of Montana and of New Hampshire. Mica is not worked with us by large syndicates. The honest, industrious, patriotic people of the mountains dig out themselves, and with their own hands, the mica from the depths of the earth. There is no speculation in the business. There are no large profits in it; there are no monopolies in it. A duty of 20 per cent can not diminish or exclude importations. The work, I fear, can not stand a reduction of price.

Senators who are better acquainted with the subject than I am, will tell you that mica is brought into this country in large quantities, and of very inferior quality indeed as compared with our mica. I believe I tell the truth, and I think it is universally admitted, that the mica of North Carolina is the best in the world.

I do not care to have that industry destroyed. I do not care to have the duty upon it lost to the Treasury. I do not wish to injure the people who work in the mica beds; I do not wish to take from the Treasury this revenue, and if there is an article in the world on which revenue may with propriety be raised it is mica.

I am satisfied that if the Finance Committee would consider the subject with the liberal intelligence with which they have considered other subjects in the bill they would let mica have a duty of at least 20 per cent ad valorem.

No one in the country objects to this reasonable duty; no protests are here against it; no one is crying out against it. If you tax anything, if you tax iron, if you tax coal, if you tax woolen goods, if you tax cotton goods, and if you tax almost everything we import, why should not the low revenue duty of 20 per cent be laid upon mica?

I am sorry, Mr. President, I have detained the Senate so long.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. LODGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. But for that pair I should vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to state once for all to-day that my colleague [Mr. WILSON] is absent from the Chamber on account of illness, and is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON].

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—40.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Lodge,	Platt,
Allen,	Dubois,	McMillan,	Power,
Allison,	Frye,	Manderson,	Quay,
Brice,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Ransom,
Caffery,	Hale,	Morgan,	Shoup,
Carey,	Hansbrough,	Murphy,	Squire,

Cullom,	Higgins,	Patton,	Teller,
Davis,	Jarvis,	Perkins,	Vilas,
Dixon,	Jones, Nev.	Pettigrew,	Washburn.

NAYS—28.

Bate,	George,	Kyle,	Roach,
Berry,	Gibson,	Lindsay,	Smith,
Blackburn,	Gray,	McLaurin,	Turpie,
Camden,	Hill,	Mills,	Vest,
Coke,	Hunton,	Mitchell, Wis.	Voorhees,

Faulkner,	Jones, Ark.	Peffer,	White.

NOT VOTING—17.

Blanchard,	Gordon,	Martin,	Wilson,
Butler,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Call,	Harris,	Proctor,
Cameron,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	McPherson,	Sherman,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSOM. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me to complete this subject, I wish to have mica stricken from the free list. [Laughter.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, mica will be stricken from the free list. The Chair hears none. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN. Getting into a little more serious business, Mr. President, I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the bill, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following as additional sections:

SEC. 73. That every combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy, illegal, and void, when the same is made by or between two or more persons or corporations, either of whom is engaged in importing any article from any foreign country into the United States, and when such combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is intended to operate in restraint of lawful trade, or free competition in lawful trade or commerce, or to increase the market price in any part of the United States of any article or articles imported or intended to be imported into the United States, or of any manufacture into which such imported article enters or is intended to enter. Every person who is or shall hereafter be engaged in the importation of goods or any commodity from any foreign country in violation of this section of this act, or who shall combine or conspire with another to violate the same, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof in any court of the United States, such person shall be fined in a sum not less than $100 and not exceeding $5,000, and shall be further punished by imprisonment, in the discretion of the court, for a term not less than three months nor exceeding twelve months.

SEC. 74. That the several circuit courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of section 73 of this act; and it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to institute proceedings in equity to prevent and restrain such violations. Such proceedings may be by way of petitions setting forth the case and praying that such violations shall be enjoined or otherwise prohibited. When the parties complained of shall have been duly notified of such petition the court shall proceed, as soon as may be, to the hearing and determination of the case; and pending such petition and before final decree, the court may at any time make such temporary restraining order or prohibition as shall be deemed just in the premises.

SEC. 75. That whenever it shall appear to the court before which any proceeding under the 74th section of this act may be pending, that the ends of justice require that other parties should be brought before the court, the court may cause them to be summoned, whether they reside in the district in which the court is held or not; and subpœnas to that end may be served in any district by the marshal thereof.

SEC. 76. That any property owned under any contract or by any combination, or pursuant to any conspiracy (and being the subject thereof) mentioned in section 73 of this act, and being in the course of transportation from one State to another, or to or from a Territory, or the District of Columbia, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure, and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law.

SEC. 77. That any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act, may sue therefor in any circuit court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained, and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, that amendment consists of five sections, four of which are copied from the act of 1890, which was framed and passed by the Congress of the United States to reach trusts which were created under the interstate commerce features of the Constitution of the United States. Four of the sections to which I have just alluded are literal copies of the existing statutes; so that leaves but one section of the amendment to be explained.

The first section of the amendment has been framed an dexamined with the greatest possible care. I do not know how much confidence the Senate of the United States will be disposed to give to my judgment as a lawyer upon the question as to whether the first section of the measure is apt in its phraseology and provisions to reach the end that is desired—that is to say, the repression of trusts, as they are called, in respect of the importation of goods from foreign countries; but I have taken care to submit the language of this amendment to the inspection of various lawyers, some of them of the highest reputation in this body, and some of the lawyers of as great reputation as any in the United States; and there seems to be no doubt or hesitancy in saying that the language employed there under the Constitution is entirely apt and proper in all respects to define the crimes which are attempted to be repressed, and to distinguish them so that the prosecution of them and convictions under them shall be easy.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me to make an inquiry, I did not understand definitely whether his amendment applied entirely and exclusively to the collection of customs or to other outside transactions?

Mr. MORGAN. Exclusively to the collection of customs. I had it at first in contemplation to make the provision wider.

Mr. CULLOM. I thought so.

Mr. MORGAN. But I concluded that upon this bill it would not be proper to do so. I believe that the difficulties which have been found in the judicial decisions of Judge Jackson and some judges of inferior grade in regard to the language of the act of 1890, predicated upon the interstate-commerce features of the Constitution, have been obviated entirely by the provisions of this section.

I will say here that I do not wish to detain the Senate at all in the consideration of this important matter, and I therefore some months ago, perhaps as much as two months ago, had this amendment printed and referred to the Committee on Finance. I have conferred with the Senators in charge of this bill upon that subject, and while they do not take this as a committee amendment, I think I am authorized to say that at least the majority, perhaps almost all of the committee, concur in the language which is employed here and in the necessity of this provision.

A very few words, Mr. President, I think will demonstrate the necessity for having this provision in the bill. First of all, it has been frequently charged here in respect of the sugar trust, and perhaps of the lead trust and some other trusts which are existing in this country, that the provisions of this bill have been so framed as to give an advantage to these existing combinations. I do not understand that there has been any purpose of that kind on the part of the committee. I know that in voting for the provisions of the bill to which I allude, no purpose of that kind has actuated me. I do not know any of the membership of any trust in the United States upon any subject whatsoever; I do not know the presiding officers, the heads of the trust, or any person who belongs to them or has any interest in them, and therefore my conduct in this matter is strictly impartial; but I do not believe at all that the slightest indulgence has been given by a single provision in this bill to any existing trust or to any trust which could exist under its provisions.

Some possible support might be found in the sugar trust, in what is called the eighth differential tax, because it is already an existing monopoly—I will call it, and I have no doubt it is properly characterized by that language—but it has an enormous amount of capital, great surroundings, and great powers of reënforcement.

So, whatever tax we put upon sugar which would make the slightest discrimination in favor of its being refined here instead of its being refined abroad and imported here, would necessarily inure to that trust, provided we leave this statute barren of any enactment or provision whereby the abuse of power and right of importation under this law would enable the trust to thrive and prosper.

Under the bill as it is now perfected, I will say in the Senate, under the McKinley act, under every tariff which has ever existed in the United States, the Walker tariff not excepted by any means, opportunity exists in a great many instances for the creation of trusts; in fact, it is absolutely inseparable from tariff legislation that opportunity should be furnished for the creation of combinations to regulate importations, with a view to increase the price of certain commodities in the market or to affect them in some way.

Inasmuch as we are compelled to resort to tariff laws for the replenishing of our Treasury from year to year; inasmuch as that is the system of taxation which is really preferred in the Constitution of the United States; inasmuch as that system of taxation has prevailed since the very foundation of the Government and has always been a favorite over direct taxation, a taxation of incomes or any other species of excise, we are compelled to regulate the tariff of taxation upon all of the four or five thousand taxed articles here with reference to their revenue-yielding power and, in the minds of many patriotic and splendid men, with reference to the protection that they think would be given to American industries as contrasted with foreign industries. Upon that particular branch of tariff taxation there is great diversity of opinion, as has been indicated in the Senate of the United States by thousands and thousands of votes and almost as many speeches which have been given upon this subject now for a century.

We can not abandon the right to put a high tax upon any American product because that tax may be abused by the formation of a trust under its shelter; for it may turn out, Mr. President, that under certain conditions and exigencies in reference to the general commerce of the country, or in reference to commerce with some particular country which is disposed to discriminate against us, we must use the taxing power at a very high rate in order to save our country and our industries and our Treasury when emergencies of that kind arise and we find it necessary to resort to high rates of taxation, when immediately shelter is given to the formation of trusts, and that shelter is greater or less in every tariff bill in accordance with the amount simply of the protective duties which we impose upon imports.

So under the bill we are now considering is afforded distinct opportunity for the formation of thousands of trusts. You can not exclude them from this country except by means of direct and positive legislation which reaches the abuse of the importing right and prevents it from entering into such combinations with capital as will enable the importer or the person interested in imports to control the prices in the market; in other words, in common parlance, to monopolize the market.

Mr. MILLS. May I ask the Senator from Alabama if his amendment includes the product of trusts such as are mentioned, leaving the United States and being conveyed from State to State?

Mr. MORGAN. It does. It includes distinctly jurisdiction and the remedy for that.

I shall not now, Mr. President, go into an analytical examination of the decisions which have been made by Judge Jackson and Judge Bullock and other eminent judges upon the question as to the effect of these statutes.

We have enacted heretofore the act of 1890 in regard to interstate trusts, and to show that the theory of this amendment is different from the theory of that act, it goes upon the power of preventive justice, of that great power which is described by Blackstone in his Commentaries, a book to which I love to refer, in such language as I think the Senate will excuse me for just a moment in quoting. Says the author:

> We are now arrived at the fifth general branch, or head, under which I proposed to consider the subject of this book of our Commentaries, viz, the means of preventing the commission of crimes and misdemeanors. And really it is an honor, and almost a singular one, to our English laws, that they furnish a title of this sort; since preventive justice is, upon every principle of reason, of humanity, and of sound policy, preferable in all respects to punishing justice; the execution of which, though necessary and in its consequences a species of mercy to the commonwealth, is always attended with many harsh and disagreeable circumstances.

This amendment relates to preventive justice. It prevents men, by penalties imposed upon their transactions, from abusing the revenues of the United States, its dignity, its honor, its peace, and prevents them also from imposing heavy burdens upon those who must consume either imported articles or those which are made under the shelter of this law of taxation and of importation.

The theory of this amendment, as you will see by noticing carefully the language, as I will read it again—for in that way I can put the Senate better in possession of it than in any other—reaches to the contract, the combination, the conspiracy, the agreement, or engagement which is entered into by an importer with other importers or by an importer with any other person who may be his assistant in any form, and it declares that the contract or agreement shall be void and null and that the entering into it with a view of importing goods into the United States is a crime, and that that crime is made punishable as a misdemeanor by somewhat severe penalties. I will read it now in that connection:

> That every combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy, illegal, and void, when the same is made by or between two or more persons or corporations, either of whom is engaged in importing any article from any foreign country into the United States, and when such combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is intended to operate in restraint of lawful trade, or free competition in lawful trade or commerce, or to increase the market price in any part of the United States of any article or articles imported or intended to be imported into the United States, or of any manufacture into which such imported article enters or is intended to enter.

Every person thus engaged is made punishable. What is that, Mr. President? It is the punishment of the intent to abuse the importation laws of the United States when that intent takes the form of an agreement or conspiracy or combination between an importer and another person engaged to assist him, or between two or more importers.

First of all, I ought to remark that this leaves any individual in the United States, no matter what the extent and amount of his capital may be, his enterprise, his genius, his industry, or his mercantile skill, perfectly free to import any amount of goods he pleases from any country he wishes and sell them at any price that he can; but it prevents the combination of one person who may be importing with another person for the purpose of importing goods with the intent of affecting the market.

We have got to that era in our civilization, or rather we have returned to that era of English civilization, Mr. President, when attempts to commit crimes are getting to be somewhat important in this country, when combinations for the purpose of committing crimes are extremely dangerous to the welfare and peace of society. In the English law, and in the common law as it exists now in the various States, these were called misprisions of offenses. It was a misprision of treason to imagine even the death of the king.

It was the misprision of murder for two men to agree that they would kill another, although no murder was committed. And so on through a long category of felonies and even misdemeanors. The intent to commit an offense signified by an agreement between two persons that they would commit it, is something that is made punishable by the common law and very frequently made punishable by acts of Parliament, and also in the States by their legislative enactments.

Let me cite the Senate for a moment to one of these methods of preventing justice, we will call it, where the misprision of an offense is made a serious matter, and where the law exercises its authority upon the individual who enters into such an engagement to the extent of imprisoning him unless he shall give bond to keep the peace. It may not be generally known, but it is true that the system of arresting people who have made threats that they would commit offenses belongs to the English system which we have inherited.

A man goes and arms himself and threatens to kill another man. By the laws of Great Britain, the common law as well as the statute law, and the laws of every State in this Union, that man is liable to be arrested, although he may not get in sight of his victim, or may not have the possible means of reaching him. He may be arrested and put under bonds to keep the peace, and unless he does give bonds to keep the peace he is incarcerated in a prison. What offense has the man committed? Nothing but a misprision of the offense. That is to say, he has concluded that he would commit it; he has agreed with himself that he would commit it, and has proclaimed the crime in such form as that the law can take hold of it.

Here, as I will remark again, we find coming to light by the existence of the present situation in many respects the necessity for extending and making penal and criminal the misprision of offenses, which, if they are allowed to run along, will ripen into crime and the victim will receive the injury that was intended. I will illustrate it. Suppose there had been an agreement between a half dozen men in Europe to murder Carnot. There it appears that you can not arrest a man because he has proclaimed that he intends to devote his life to the murder of kings or a particular king.

Such a declaration as that in the United States against the humblest man in this whole country is made in every State of the Union what we call a misprision of offense, and it is in itself a breach of the peace. I refer to this merely for the sake of analogy. I refer to it to show that there is an intelligent foundation running through this proposed amendment which is entirely in keeping with our system of jurisprudence, and that if we adopt it we can not possibly harm anybody and it is no departure whatever from the existing state of public opinion in regard to what the law is as well as in regard to what it ought to be. Therefore I have ventured to bring the amendment forward.

I wish to remark in regard to the amendment that it can not possibly do any harm if we will take it for granted that no man is ever to be convicted under it, that it is such a sieve as that it will hold nothing in the way of judicial determination. Yet there it stands for two purposes. One is to threaten and alarm these men from entering into such combinations. The other is the expression of the view of the Congress of the United States that these trusts in all of their multiplied hideousness, I will say, are against our common conviction and meet our stern reprobation.

But, sir, it will not stop there. I think I may venture to say with absolute confidence that no trust will ever be formed of any important character in the United States, after we put the amendment I have offered in the bill, which will not be felt and punished, and that with severity.

Now, having said this much, Mr. President, I will yield the floor, first remarking, however, again that the four sections which conclude the amendment are all of them copied out of the existing statute? They have been passed upon by the Senate and by the Congress, and therefore it is unnecessary for me to descant upon them to any extent at all.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, the legislation that is proposed by this amendment is of an exceedingly important character. I confess that I appreciate the importance of it, and I appreciate the difficulties that exist in the way of attaching so important an amendment to this tariff bill at this time and in these hours, which we hope are the closing hours of this debate.

I shall go with my friend from Alabama, I think, to the full extent to which his learning and zeal and patriotism will lead him in devising legislation for the correction of the tendency which has grown up in this country to the formation of trusts. But for that very reason I feel that this unusual and abnormal method of introducing such important pumitive legislation is not at this time and in the heat and hurry of these hours to be considered wise on our part.

I hope the Senator from Alabama will agree with the suggestion I intend to make, that the amendment, or the subject-matter of the amendment, be referred to the Judiciary Committee of this body, that they may scrutinize it, give it the benefit of their study, and make it, if it needs amendment, what it ought to be in order to accomplish the objects which the Senator from Alabama has in view, and properly in view, and bring it back to us, so that it may be considered upon its merits and made a part of the law of the land.

If it is a proper motion, Mr. President, I will move that the amendment be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, just a word, in personal explanation.

I said in my opening remarks that two months ago I had submitted this amendment to the Committee on Finance. I explained to the committee personally, at least to the Democratic members of the committee, the examination under which the provisions had passed in the minds of some of the most eminent jurists in the United States, and that every word in the amendment had received their approbation.

I could not, under the agreement which existed on this side of the Chamber, take the floor earlier than I have done for the purpose of offering the amendment. Its value, its importance even to the reputation of the Senate, is perfectly obvious after all that has been said here in respect of the introduction on our part of opportunities if not of invitations to these trusts to avail themselves of the benefits of this proposed law.

I have done my best to get it before the Senate. I have done all that an honorable duty to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber permitted me to do. I have presented it to the gentlemen who have had the bill in charge, and I have not heard yet that one of them had an objection to make to the provision, or said it was unnecessary, or anything else than that they were afraid that it would consume a large amount of time.

Mr. President, I have not occupied the time of the Senate in the discussion of the pending bill. I have seen many places, many opportunities, where my convictions of duty almost forced me to take the floor, but I have not done so because I was entirely deferential to the desire on the part of the committee, which I think has been most admirably filled, of bringing forward a bill that would be satisfactory to at least one side of the Chamber.

I take occasion at this moment to say that I have not read a tariff bill on the statute books of the United States which so nearly comes up to my views of what is exactly right as the pending bill, and I have never seen one that I would vote for with greater pleasure.

I must also say that the most assiduous, and industrious, and learned attention has been bestowed by the gentlemen who have had charge of the bill upon every one of the vast enumeration of items. But the opportunity has not been afforded to me of putting into the bill the antidote for the poison that it is charged the bill carries.

This amendment, I will say to my honorable friend from Delaware, can not hurt anybody. No innocent person can possibly suffer under it. The only question in the case is whether the provision is strong enough and tight enough to hold the guilty. If it is found not to be, and that the theory of the provision is all right, as I think I have established that it is all right, then by amendment hereafter we can certainly improve it, if it can be improved.

The suggestion offered by the Senator from Delaware, it does not seem to me has very great weight, because the proposed punishment of these combinations does not affect any person whatsoever—it can not affect any person whatsoever—who is honestly engaged in free and fair competition in trade under the new revenue law.

Now, a word on that point. No man has the right to import anything into the United States except by permission of the statute. We have prohibitions here upon importations which may be relieved against by the proclamation of the President of the United States, as in cases where foreign governments discriminate against us, and for the purpose of preventing the introduction of diseases through neat cattle. There is quite a large list of this kind of absolute, positive prohibitions which may be relieved against by the proclamation of the President.

What does that all mean? On what basis does that theory of legislation proceed? It is that no man has the right to import anything into the United States unless he is permitted to do so by law. Then, if the man in making the importation abuses the law to the disadvantage of anybody in the United States, he of course violates his duty towards the Government of the United States, and the Congress which enacts the law to enforce the revenue and to tax importations has the unquestioned right to say how far, and under what circumstances, and under what conditions the importations shall be made.

I very much regret that I have not been able, although I frequently called the attention of the Senator from Delaware to it, to find him enough at leisure in the multiplicity of his duties, which have been so exacting upon his time, to get him to take the judicial view of this question which I felt it incumbent upon myself to try to take, and which he could have done so much better than I. But still the Senator does not urge an objection to the amendment. He only proposes to refer it to the Judiciary Committee. My honorable colleague on my left [Mr. PUGH] has examined this matter. I have heard no objection from him. He is the chairman of that committee. Certainly I would submit it to the Committee on the Judiciary without a moment's hesitation. I have also submitted it to other members of the Judiciary Committee, to two of the most distinguished members of that committee, whose names I suppose I might be at liberty to call, but it is probably not exactly in form to do it.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator from Alabama is not inconvenienced by yielding, I desire to say a few words.

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, this measure has my full approbation. The Senator from Alabama submitted it to me sometime ago and again still more recently. To my personal knowledge it has had the full examination of excellent lawyers. In that category I do not place myself, but it has had the examination of men learned in the law, and it is pronounced by them to be safe. In my judgment, for myself, I could vote for it with infinite pleasure.

The Committee on Finance has not as a committee taken any action in regard to the amendment. It is a matter not in the line of detail usually charged to a committee upon the subject of revenue, and yet in the light of present history, in the light of wholesale slander, lawless libel, I should be glad to see this measure become a law in connection with a revenue bill or any other bill to which it could be properly attached.

I know not a human being who belongs to any trust so far as I am cognizant of that fact. If I am acquainted with a man who is in the sugar trust I do not know it. If I am acquainted with a human being who belongs to a whisky trust I am not aware of it, and I do not know who he is. But I am aware of great combinations that overshadow certain mighty interests of the American people against whom this measure is aimed, and justly aimed, in my judgment.

I appreciate entirely the wisdom and patriotism of the Senator from Delaware. A reference of such a measure to the Judiciary Committee is apt and proper under ordinary circumstances, and in its very nature it goes to that committee properly. Yet if the Senate can come to the conclusion which I have reached, and which the Senator from Alabama and others who have carefully examined this measure have reached, and can pass upon it and adopt it now, I believe it would be a measure of great wisdom and of great safety to the American people.

I do not believe that we should take it up if it is to lead to protracted discussion, and yet I can hardly imagine how time could be better employed than in legislating against the great dominating trusts and syndicates. But it did occur to me (and I so said to the Senator from Alabama) that I thought it would not lead to protracted discussion. There is no one here so far as I know who desires to protect those at whom this proposed legislation is aimed. They have no defenders here so far as I know. I feel that in closing the work of the last three months an enactment of the kind proposed by the Senator from Alabama would be hailed by the American people as a guaranty of integrity in the execution of the law we are about to pass.

I have thought proper, contrary to the course I have pursued for sometime past, to say this much. I do not speak for the Committee on Finance, and yet at the same time I do not know of a single member of that hard-working and much-abused committee who has any objection to the provisions of the amendment. There are variances of opinion in that committee as to whether it ought to be brought forward now or in some other shape and at some other time. As to the provisions themselves, I know no difference of opinion in the committee over which I have the honor to preside. This much, I think, it is due to the occasion to say.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to inquire of the chairman if this is an amendment recommended by the committee. I have agreed for my part (I will say in explanation of the vote which I may cast and all other votes) to follow our committee, and so I understood that other gentlemen here had agreed, including the chairman who has just spoken. Of course he has no further liberty than I or anyone else. If I were not bound by that agreement I would rescind many votes which I have cast. I should like to have it understood, so that there may be no mistake in giving a vote, whether that agreement is to be pursued or not.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me a moment? Before I offered the amendment, as I have stated, I submitted it to the committee on frequent occasions and even to-day. I asked whether it would be any violation of our agreement under our rules to offer it, and I was assured by the committee that I had a perfect privilege to offer it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will say to the Senator from Virginia, that as far as I can recall the events of the last three months, all the understanding of which I was cognizant among ourselves on this side of the Chamber was to the effect that we would stand together on committee amendments and propositions.

Mr. DANIEL. And not vote for other amendments that were not offered by the committee——

Mr. VOORHEES. But after the work of the committee was finished I never understood that I was not at liberty to vote for other amendments if they were brought forward. I say that I felt bound to stand by the committee. I have done it to the bitter end. After the committee work is over I do not understand and I never have understood that I am not at liberty to vote for any amendment I choose that is consistent with the bill. I do not mean by this that I would vote against the bill. I do not suppose I need explain that I would not violate my own record.

Mr. DANIEL. Of course there is an understanding or there is not an understanding. The statement of the Senator who has just spoken does not agree with my understanding. It was clear and specific, as I understand it (not of course casting any reflection upon him), that we would not offer and support amendments of our own, and solely by reason of that understanding I have declined to offer amendments or to vote for any amendment unless it had the sanction of our committee. If I am at liberty to vote for the pending amendment with fairness to my colleagues I shall vote for it. If I am not at liberty I shall not vote for it. Certainly we ought to have understood each other before we reached the very close of the bill, in the consideration of which it was the part of patriotism for every man to give up his own opinion in order that the best collective judgment could be gathered so as to give relief speedily to the American people.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois has been recognized.

Mr. PALMER. If I have the floor——

Mr. ALDRICH. I was about to ask a question of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. PALMER. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. DANIEL. Before I take my seat I should like to have an understanding between the Senator from Alabama and the committee. He tells us that he consulted the committee before he offered the amendment, and was encouraged to do it.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I did not say that.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg pardon, sir; I am trying ——

Mr. MORGAN. I said the committee had no objection to it, and I did not consider it any breach of the agreement that I should offer it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DANIEL. I am not here to be interrogated. I have stated what I had to say, and I am done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, I beg to say that so far as I understand the amendment of the Senator from Alabama I favor it; but I can not forget the fact that this is a proposition to add a most important chapter to the criminal code of the United States. I have followed the Committee on Finance faithfully, sometimes surrendering my own judgment; but for that they are not to blame. In all that I walk by faith. But I do hesitate to add to the criminal code of the United States provisions which I have not carefully examined with a view to their perfection. Of course, being an old lawyer, I am exceedingly scrupulous in regard to legislation which affects the rights of citizens. I am exceedingly scrupulous in the preparation of a law which imposes pains and penalties and fines, as this proposes. While I have the most implicit confidence in the Senator from Alabama, I would a little rather look over this measure myself and see that it meets the approval of my own judgment. I do not think that this provision is an essential part of a tariff bill. I think it deserves more consideration than we can give it now.

I have thought for two or three months past about duties and protection and all the subjects that present themselves in this discussion, but I have not considered the law of trusts. While I shall still walk by faith, if I am so advised I will accept it, though with the utmost reluctance. I should greatly prefer, if it meets the views of the Senator from Alabama, that the measure shall be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Above all, while I respect the Judiciary Committee, I respect my own judgment on such subjects, and I really should be glad to have an opportunity in some formal way not only to consider the amendment, but to discuss it in a manner entirely disconnected from this purely revenue measure.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very sorry that I did not take this amendment to the Senator from Illinois in person and ask his judgment upon it. It has been printed and placed on the tables here three or four different times. I supposed every Senator would take enough interest in the progress of this bill to know what amendments were being proposed by Senators as well as those which came from the committee.

Now, I do not want to disturb the Senate or impose any burden upon anyone's conscience or make it very hard for anyone to put his foot down on trusts. I do not wish to do anything of that kind; and if it is considered to be necessary to have the weight of the Judiciary Committee settle upon the amendment before we can do anything else about it, let it go to the Judiciary Committee. My skirts are clear. I have done all I could do. No man has yet found objection to one word in the amendment for the purpose of repressing these trusts. If the Senate of the United States is not ready to do it, let the amendment go to the committee.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to vote to put this amendment on the bill. I shall vote against its reference to the Judiciary Committee. I am afraid it will not accomplish very much if enacted into a law, but it is a move in the right direction. As has been said, it can not hurt any innocent man.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the pending question?

Mr. LODGE. What is the question before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. GRAY. Has the Chair decided that the motion made by myself is not a parliamentary motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so decides. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer the amendment to paragraph 356, page 90, of which I gave notice. Matting and mats made of cocoa fiber or rattan stand now in the bill at 20 per cent ad valorem. I move to amend the paragraph so as to make it read:

356. Cocoa matting, 40 per cent ad valorem; cocoa mats, 35 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall say only a word in regard to the amendment. I discussed it when the bill was in Committee of the Whole. This is a small industry comparatively, involving no large capital. It is carried on principally by the workingmen who are themselves engaged in it. The duty as proposed by the bill means the absolute destruction of the industry. It employs men in New York, in Ohio, and in my own State. The amendment I move proposes a much lower rate of duty than the McKinley rates, and gives the industry merely a chance to survive. I hope that the Senate will accept this proposed modification. It is a great reduction over the McKinley rates, and it gives the workmen employed in the small industry of mat-making a chance to go on and develop it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I should vote "nay" if the Senator from Ohio were present.

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAREY (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL] has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. CAREY. I desire to withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. McMILLAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. I find that he has not voted and I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Manderson,	Quay,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Chandler,	Hale,	Patton,	Squire,
Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Peffer,	Teller,
Davis,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Washburn.
Dixon,	Higgins,	Platt,
Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Power,
Dubois,	Lodge,	Proctor,

NAYS—37.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Roach,
Bate,	George,	Lindsay,	Smith,
Berry,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Martin,	Vest,
Brice,	Gray,	Mills,	Voorhees,
Caffery,	Hill,	Morgan,	Walsh,
Call,	Hunton,	Murphy,	White.
Cockrell,	Irby,	Palmer,
Coke,	Jarvis,	Pasco,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,

NOT VOTING—19.

Blanchard,	Gordon,	Mitchell, Wis.	Stewart,
Butler,	Harris,	Morrill,	Vilas,
Camden,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	Wilson.
Cameron,	McMillan,	Pugh,	Wolcott.
Carey,	McPherson,	Sherman,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. According to previous notice I move to amend paragraph 199, page 46, line 11, by striking out "two" and inserting "three" before the word "dollars;" so as to read:

199. Hay, $3 per ton.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, when this matter was in Committee of the Whole I had occasion to make certain statements concerning the hay crop which I shall not take the time to repeat further than to say that last year the product of hay in this country was 65,766,158 tons, of a value of $570,882,870. The present duty on hay is $4 per ton, and under that duty there were imported last year 104,181 tons of a value of nearly $962,221.

The amendment I then offered, which was the same I offer now, was defeated by a very close vote. I regret very much that it is probable the amendment will in the Senate meet with the same fate it did in Committee of the Whole.

A good many Senators upon the other side have privately expressed to me their opinion that this amendment ought to be adopted, but unfortunately the committee have not seen their way clear to agree that it shall be adopted. So I presume it is to be voted down. And yet, Mr. President, in the interest of this great industry, largely in the Northern States, much of it in New York and the New England States bordering on Canada, where we shall meet with a loss incalculable in amount if the duty is reduced 50 per cent as is proposed, I desire to have a vote in the Senate, and I ask that it shall be by yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PUGH. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Power,
Allison,	Frye,	McMillan,	Proctor,
Carey,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Shoup,
Chandler,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Squire,
Cullom,	Hansbrough,	Patton,	Teller,
Davis,	Hawley,	Peffer,	Washburn.
Dixon,	Higgins,	Perkins,
Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Platt,

NAYS—38.

Allen,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Ransom,
Bate,	George,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Berry,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Martin,	Turpie,

NOT VOTING—17.

Brice,	Harris,	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Butler,	Hoar,	Quay,	Wolcott.
Camden,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Gordon,	Morrill,	Walsh,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to add to paragraph 182 the proviso which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add to paragraph 182, on page 42, the following:

Provided, however, That the bounty provided in said act shall stand unrepealed to the extent that there shall be paid to the producer of sugar, from beets, sorghum, or sugar cane, grown in the United States in the year 1894, or from maple sap produced in the United States during the year 1894, under license for 1894, and subject to the limitations now imposed by law, on all sugars testing not less than 90° by the polariscope, nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound, and upon sugar testing less than 90° by the polariscope and not less than 80°, eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer this proviso because I believe it to be just, if the bill takes effect immediately or the 1st of August, that the producers of domestic sugar who have made their contracts for the year 1894 on the basis now allowed by law shall be granted something in the form of a diminished bounty to protect them from the injury arising from the operation of the bill.

Mr. HILL. I desire to have the amendment read again.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from New York wish to address the Senate on this question?

Mr. HILL. I do desire to speak at length if——

Mr. HARRIS. I rose for the purpose of moving to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. If this side of the Chamber is disposed to follow the view of the committee I do not desire to inflict any remarks upon the Senate; but if there is a disposition to put the proviso upon the bill at this stage after the vote of yesterday, I then desire to address the Senate at considerable length.

Mr. HARRIS. I have not consulted the committee, but as a member of the committee I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HILL. All right.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is not debatable.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent to appeal to t

he Senator from Tennessee to permit me to address myself to this amendment. Certainly it can not be charged that I have wasted any time in this debate. I desire to address myself to it, because I think it a matter of very great importance and one that should be understood by the Senate before the vote is taken.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not know how to resist such an appeal as the Senator from Nebraska makes, and yet I regret that he makes it. However, I withdraw the motion, and give notice that I shall renew it if I can get the floor when the Senator from Nebraska has been heard.

Mr. ALLEN. If my colleague will yield to me when he concludes, I desire to be heard before the motion is finally put.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate at any great length, for I certainly have no desire to prolong this debate. Yet, I can not let this amendment go without at least an attempt to show its entire fairness and its honesty. Unfortunately, perhaps for myself rather than for my colleague, I do not always find myself in accord with him, but in the proposition to thus amend paragraph 182 he and I are in entire accord.

Now, why should this be done? Let me recall for a moment the condition of the law and the action had under the inducement of the law. By the act of 1890, commonly known as the McKinley law, there was offered to those who should produce sugar from cane, sorghum, or beets, 2 cents per pound. I shall not take the time to refer to the particular essentials of that law. One essential was that at the beginning of the year those who proposed to produce sugar and obtain for themselves the benefit of this bounty should make an application to the Treasury Department for license.

The beet and the cane producers of the country in the beginning of 1894 made their application for license, and such licenses were issued to them. They proceeded, at least so far as the beet sugar manufacturers of the country are concerned, to make those contracts which are absolutely essential for the conduct of their business.

You can not run a beet-sugar factory without the sugar beets from which the saccharine matter shall be produced. You can not obtain the sugar beets by the usual processes of going into a market after the articles are produced. For the very existence of these factories it is necessary to do what they did this year, and what they did every year since 1890. They go to the farmers of their vicinity and make contracts to take from them the entire superproduct of their farms for the current year.

In the spring of 1894, having obtained the licenses to which I have referred, the owners of the sugar factories made their contracts with the farmers in the vicinity by which they agreed to pay $5 per ton for every ton of sugar beets produced and delivered at their factories. It takes about 5,000 acres to grow the sugar beets necessary to run a factory. Take the two factories in the State of Nebraska at Norfolk and at Grand Island. Their contracts are for over 10,000 acres of product of beets, producing about 15 tons to the acre. Because of the provisions of the McKinley law, under which they have been fostered and under which they have grown, they made the contracts at $5 per ton of beets.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. When are the contracts made?

Mr. MANDERSON. The contracts are made early in the spring, before seeding, and as a rule the seed is transmitted to the farms and distributed among them by the owners of the beet-sugar factories. That was the case this year. The contract at $5 a ton for sugar beets thus produced was made, I say, because of the McKinley act. That contract which existed between the Government of the United States and those who should produce sugar, we, as I think dishonestly, as the representatives of the people of the United States, have torn from the statute books by the action upon this bill; but under that contract and under that law these men have agreed to pay $5 per ton for sugar beets. Under this proposed act beets will be worth but $4 a ton. Beet sugar can not be produced except at a loss to the producer if he pays a penny over $4 per ton.

I have no question, Mr. President, but that the six beet-sugar factories in California, Nebraska, and Utah have probably contracted for 5,000 acres of sugar beets each, making 30,000 acres of sugar beets, which at 15 tons to the acre would be 450,000 tons of sugar beets, and contracted to pay, because of the McKinley law and the contract within it, $1 per ton more than those beets are worth if this proposed act goes into effect on the 1st day of August, 1894.

Mark it, Mr. President, the sugar-beet product goes to the factories, at least in the State of Nebraska, during the months of August and September.

The sugar-making begins in the month of October and extends through November and December. Yet it is proposed that these parties shall be left out in the cold and that there shall be no compensating or equivalent payment which shall at least in part equalize their losses by reason of their action under the McKinley law.

Now, this nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound to be paid for sugar produced from beets or cane where the sugar beets or the sugar cane had been grown within the year 1894, I say is simple, plain honesty on the part of this Government. It would be an outrageous thing to leave these men in the position in which they they will be left if the bill shall be passed without the amendment proposed by my colleague.

I am not familiar with the condition as to sugar cane, but I am told that in Louisiana also contracts are made in advance of the crop for the delivery of sugar cane at a particular time, and it applies with equal force to those who propose to produce sugar from sugar cane. But be that as it may (as to that matter, the Senators more directly interested in that industry can give light to the Senate), I say that this——

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. MANDERSON. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. I will state that in Louisiana the sugar cane has already been purchased. Not only have contracts been made in my State predicated upon the giving of the bounty for this year as foreshadowed and stated in the report of the Senate Finance Committee, which proposition of the committee was stricken out by a vote yesterday, but in order to prepare for the changed conditions resulting from a large decrease of the tariff the planters of that State have invested twice the amount they had done in any year heretofore for such machinery as will bring about the best results in extraction and evaporation.

Mr. MANDERSON. I can vouch for the truth of that statement, if such vouching were needed. During the present session of Congress I visited the State of Louisiana and I went along that beautiful country known as the Bayou Teche, where the large sugar plantations are located. I was amazed to see the immense strides which had been made in the direction of improved machinery and larger works during the present year and the year 1893. There is no question about it.

Vast as the investment was in Louisiana in amount in machinery, in mills, in stock of all description necessary for the growing of cane and the making of sugar, I have no question but that during the years 1893 and 1894 there has been an increase of from 25 to 30 per cent in value in investments, largely made because of the provisions of the McKinley law. As to the beet-sugar factories, they have grown from nothing to the proportions I depicted in my remarks a few weeks ago when this matter was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. President, the Senate has struck a staggering blow to the beet-sugar industry of this country by the provisions of the present bill. By the maintenance, as I believe, of the bounty of the McKinley law, even a diminishing bounty which I submit is not full fair treatment—but even under a diminishing bounty such as was contained in one or two of the amendments I proposed in the Senate as well as in Committee of the Whole, this industry might be sustained. But with this low duty on sugar, with this deprivation of bounty, with this taking from these factors anything that is remunerative, anything that is in the shape of partial repayment for the contracts they have made because of the provisions of the McKinley law, I believe the last blow will be struck at the effort to produce sugar from beets in this country.

Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate further. Lengthy argument might be made; reasons much stronger than I have produced might be brought forward in favor of this amendment. I earnestly hope that the Senate will adopt the amendment proposed by my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. HILL. What has become of the motion of the Senator from Tennessee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I desire to say something upon the amendment. I have not occupied the time of the Senate in the discussion of the sugar schedule or any other schedule, nor do I intend at this time to weary the Senate with any extended remarks of mine on this question.

I made a suggestion to the Senator from Nebraska which presents to my mind an equitable consideration why the Senate should vote for this amendment. There has been a very considerable struggle in regard to the sugar question. It has been repeatedly stated on the floor of the Senate that there was a kind of compulsion on the part of certain Senators in sustaining any duty whatever upon sugar.

A number of Senators have stated that if they had their own choice about the matter they would vote against any tariff whatever upon sugar. With those opinions I have no sort of quarrel. With the independent views of any Senator upon this floor in regard to any principle of political economy or any question affecting the tariff, I have no kind of criticism.

But after this contest had continued for a long time the Senate Finance Committee brought in a report which placed a tariff of 40 per cent ad valorem upon sugar, with an additional eighth of a cent on refined sugar and with an additional tenth to compensate for the bounty paid by the exporting countries, and with an extension of the time for the repeal of the McKinley act to the 1st of January, 1895. That was done in order that the planters who had gone on under a belief and just expectation that the bounty would be continued should not be cut off without a shilling, because their crops and all their expenses and engagements were predicated upon the continuance of the bounty for at least the present year. Now, I understand, under objection that the planter would get the tariff and the bounty too, it was proposed to add to the tariff just such an amount as would come up to the bounty under the McKinley act.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator from Louisiana a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. Were not the expenses incurred predicated upon the continuance of the bounty to 1905, and has not the Senator already voted to repeal the bounty?

Mr. CAFFERY. I have voted to repeal the bounty, and if that question comes up again I shall vote to repeal the bounty another time. I do not believe in bounties, nor did I ever believe in bounties. But there is a principle beyond bounties——

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me?

Mr. CAFFERY. There is a principle higher than bounties. It is a principle perhaps with which the Senator from New Hampshire has very little acquaintance. It is the principle of justice and the principle of equity.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. I pass over the Senator's sugar-plantation manners and ask him if the principle is that of a contract, why the contract should not be fulfilled to the letter, and why it should be partially repealed and partially observed?

Mr. CAFFERY. I have never had the hardihood, and I hope I never shall have the hardihood, to assert that a bounty given by a government to any pursuit followed by the citizens of that government, whether it be a direct bounty or an indirect bounty, in the way of a tariff upon imports, forms a contract. There is no contract about it. It has none of the features of a contract. It is a mere gratuity of the government, revocable at any period when the government may choose to revoke it.

I desire to attract the attention of the Senate, however, not to a contract which never existed, but to certain principles of justice and equity, and especially to the fact that after the committee had reported the bill the planters of my State, and the beet-growers throughout the United States, relying upon the promise implied in that report, arranged their whole business with reference to the tariff proposed in that report and to the continuance of the bounty until 1895. This is simply a question of justice. The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is founded upon that principle, and that principle ought to obtain. It is not a principle of tariff; it is not a principle of bounty; but it is the fact that the proposed action of the Senate lately induced people to undertake certain expenses and certain engagements, and now it is intended to destroy them.

Mr. President, I have stated my position upon the question of bounty. I do not wish to restate it. It would not be inconsistent in me to ask for a maintenance of the bounty during the whole period. It would not imply that I indorsed the principle of giving that bounty. Neither the Senator from New Hampshire nor anybody else could draw that conclusion. So the Committee on Ways and Means of the other House, in the original draft of the bill, proposed a continuation of the bounty, and I suppose the members of that committee have as much conception of the bearing of contracts and the operation of bounty laws as anyone else. With my view of the exceeding equity and good faith which ought to be observed toward those who have undertaken large expenses on account of the promise held forth by the Senate committee, I believe that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska ought to prevail.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. Would not the argument the Senator has just made so ably, based as it is upon principles of common justice, lead him and every other man who believes in the argument to vote to the bitter end to sustain the bounty for the time fixed in the law?

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not quite agree with that opinion. We have the terms of a diminishing bounty before us.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senate ought to understand, and every Senator ought to understand, that whatever disposition is to be made of the sugar question will require the concurrence of the two Houses. As the schedule stands in the bill to-day it is as open as any amendment can possibly make it. Both Houses of Congress will sit in judgment and determine what its fate is to be in the future. Inasmuch as we have had very voluminous and exhaustive discussion on the sugar question, and in view of the great anxiety of nine-tenths of the Senate to dispose of the matter, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent to make just as long a speech on the merits of the proposition as the Senator from Tennessee has made as a prelude to moving to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from New Hampshire will limit himself to the same number of seconds, I will withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will proceed, the motion being withdrawn.

Mr. CHANDLER. The last time I heard the Senator from Louisiana speak he was denouncing a bounty. The last time I heard his colleague speak he was denouncing a bounty. They denounced it as a wicked invention of the Republican party. Now, the senior Senator from Louisiana gets up and demands a continuance of the bounty and says it is a contract. The Senator says, not that it is a contract of Congress——

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from New Hampshire pardon me?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; if it does not come out of my time. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAFFERY. The Senator appears to get himself somewhat mixed in regard to what I stated. I have never upheld the principle of a bounty.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is what I said.

Mr. HALE. But its application.

Mr. CAFFERY. I have always denounced the principle of the bounty. I have maintained as a principle of equity and justice that the bounty should not be cut off all at once. If that is not making a clear distinction between a fact and an abstract principle, I am incapable of making one.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Louisiana only makes his case worse the longer he talks. He is now speaking for a bounty. He was then denouncing a bounty. He says that a bounty promised by a solemn act of Congress to last until 1905 can be blotted out at a moment's notice and nobody has a right to find fault.

But when a Democratic committee comes in here with a proposition, he says that is a contract. He says the planters of Louisiana have adapted themselves to the report of the Democratic members of the Finance Committee, and therefore it is a great wrong, inequitable, and an outrage not to carry out the promise of the Democratic Finance Committee. Mr. President, that is a contract. A solemn act of Congress is not a contract. If the Senator thinks he can justify that distinction I will leave him to the Senator from Tennessee to elucidate it.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall elucidate it by renewing my motion to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. MANDERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 50, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—50.

Bate,	Frye,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,
Berry,	Gallinger,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Blackburn,	George,	Lodge,	Smith,

NOT VOTING—13.

Butler,	Hoar,	Pugh,	Wolcott.
Camden,	McPherson,	Shoup,
Cameron,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Gordon.	Pettigrew,	Wilson.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to strike out paragraph 555, on page 109, and insert:

Paintings, in oil or water colors, and statuary, not otherwise provided for in this act, 15 per cent ad valorem; but the term "statuary" as herein used shall be understood to include only such statuary as is cut, carved, or otherwise wrought by hand from a solid block or mass of marble, stone, or alabaster, or from metal, and as is the professional production of a statuary or sculptor only.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN. In 1883, in the House of Representatives, a petition was presented asking that this style of art be put on the free list. A speech was made by Mr. Perry Belmont, of New York, at that time, and is found on page 133, Appendix of the RECORD, following the proceedings from February 20 to March 3, 1883, Forty-seventh Congress, second session, and contained in the same volume. The petition was signed very numerously by a certain class of people in New York, who are in the habit of buying pictures and paintings by the hundreds and thousands and even millions of dollars' worth, and asked that all foreign paintings of every kind and all foreign statuary should be admitted to this country free.

I hold in my hand the original petition, which was presented by Mr. Belmont to the House of Representatives at that time, and I desire to say that all of the names which are signed to the petition are not to be found in the RECORD. I shall not consume the time of the Senate at this late hour by reading all of the names, but I wish to read two or three which do not appear in the RECORD. I find attached to the petition one name which does not appear as it is printed in the RECORD. It is that of Cornelius Vanderbilt. I find another, the name of Russell Sage; and still another, Jay Gould. The petition is signed by a great many other names of people of like publicity, praying that the higher class of imported statuary and art be placed upon the free list. Congress yielded to that request; the articles were placed on the free list.

In 1890, in the McKinley act, it was provided that all this kind of art and statuary which is brought into this country for the purpose of being used in schools, academies, and public places shall be admitted free, but if it is brought here for the purpose of being placed in a private residence, and the poor excluded from observing and enjoying it, then it is to be taxed 15 per cent ad valorem, as I recall the act.

I desire to say that all the cheaper lithographs and chromos which enter the poor man's home in this country are required to pay a tax of 25 per cent ad valorem. The cheap picture that hangs upon the wall of the home of the laboring man or the poor man or the man in common life pays a tax, while the pictures owned by the rich men which hang in private parlors where the public are excluded and which the public never see are suffered to come in absolutely free.

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me a question right there?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. KYLE. Have not some of these paintings, imported by the rich people of New York and Boston, cost in the neighborhood of $100,000? The duties remitted by placing these articles upon the free list will amount to $15,000 or $20,000 in the case of certain paintings.

Mr. ALLEN. The revenue derived last year was three hundred and thirty odd thousand dollars at the low rate put on such articles by the McKinley act.

Mr. KYLE. I mean to say that an individual in New York City will save $15,000 or $20,000 in duties on a single picture.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly. I have no objection to any man upon the face of the earth enjoying a good picture. The other day the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] gave us a wonderful description of the effect of art upon the people. He said it is a great educator. I admit that; but I want every American citizen to be able to enjoy the same privileges that any other citizen enjoys.

Mr. GRAY. I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether the amendment he proposes exempts from duty pictures and statuary of the kind described which are imported for the use of public institutions.

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all.

Mr. GRAY. Does not the Senator think those ought to be exempted?

Mr. ALLEN. I think every piece of statuary and every painting that is brought into this country to be put upon public exhibition in our schools, our museums, or other places of public resort ought to be admitted free, and it ought to be free simply because the people have an opportunity to enjoy the education that is to be derived from it. But when they are taken and closed up in the private parlors of the extremely rich, where the great mass of the people can not see them, equity and justice declare that they shall bear their proportion of taxation.

Mr. President, I presented this question in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and I present it here. As a disinterested neighbor, I offered the Democratic party another opportunity to save its political life. I offer it here again. I tell you when the masses of the voters of this country understand that pictures worth a hundred thousand, or two hundred thousand, or three hundred thousand dollars are hanging by the millions of dollars' worth in private parlors in New York and Boston and Philadelphia, where the public will never see them either for money or for love, and that on the cheap picture of the Virgin Mary, which hangs upon the wall of the humble man, there is a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem, they will turn out of power a party which permits anything of that kind, and they ought to do it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN and Mr. KYLE called for the yeas and nays, and they were orderd.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). If I were not paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHOUP. I am paired with the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allen,	Dubois,	Kyle,	Perkins,
Bate,	Gallinger,	McLaurin,	Power,
Berry,	George,	Martin,	Proctor,
Carey,	Gray,	Mitchell, Oregon	Teller,
Cockrell,	Irby,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Coke,	Jarvis,	Peffer,	Walsh.

NAYS—41.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Lindsay,	Ransom,
Allison,	Faulkner,	Lodge,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Frye,	McMillan,	Smith,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Squire,
Caffery,	Hale,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Call,	Hansbrough,	Murphy,	Vilas,
Chandler,	Harris,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Pasco,	Washburn.
Daniel,	Higgins,	Patton,
Davis,	Hunton,	Platt,
Dixon,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,

NOT VOTING—20.

Brice,	Gorman,	Mills,	Shoup,
Butler,	Hill,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Camden,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,	White,
Cameron,	Jones, Nev.	Pugh,	Wilson.
Gordon,	McPherson,	Sherman,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer as paragraph 683½ what I send to the desk.

The Secretary read as follows:

683½. All fencing wire, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to state that I am informed a small tax on wire, much less than half the present tax, will be entirely satisfactory to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to suggest to the Senator that to number the paragraph 683½ would place it in the free list. The Senator must place his amendment somewhere else, if he proposes to place a duty upon wire.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggest that it be inserted as paragraph 124½.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] to insert as paragraph 124½ what has been read.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I now offer the same amendment, changing the rate to 15 per cent; so as to read:

All fencing wire, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HILL. What is the House rate?

Mr. CULLOM. The House rate is, I think, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to suggest that if it be supposed that the wire is made from imported rods, the duty fixed upon them by the other House was 25 per cent, and now on rods valued at 4 cents or less per pound the rate is four-tenths of a cent per pound, which I suppose approximates the 25 per cent ad valorem. So we are putting a heavier duty upon the rod of which the wire is made than we put upon the wire itself. Under those circumstances the foreigner would ordinarly export to us the wire.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. ALLEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to insert the following:

124½. All fencing wire, one-quarter of 1 cent per pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to insert the following:

124½. All fencing wire, one-half of 1 cent per pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the senior Senator from Illinois whether the rate I now propose is not satisfactory to him.

Mr. CULLOM. I am unwilling to accept the amendment, so far as I am concerned. I do not think it is enough. It would not give the protection necessary to enable this industry to carry on its business. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. ALLEN. In view of the fact that the opposition to this measure is particularly the work of the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], I should like to know whether he thinks it is enough.

Mr. PALMER. I will answer the question of the Senator from Nebraska in a moment. This question is one eminently proper for adjustment by a conference committee. It applies to the whole class of wires, and I have no doubt that it will be properly adjusted in conference. This single proposition, which goes to fence wire alone, is likely to disturb the whole arrangement in regard to wires, and therefore, in my judgment, my friend from Nebraska will find his interest entirely safe in the hands of the committee of conference.

Mr. ALLEN. So far as I am concerned I do not propose to trust my interests to the conference committee, if I can avoid it. The other day, before the bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate, I asked the Finance Committee in charge of the measure if, after the bill was reported to the Senate, they would report an amendment placing barbed wire upon the free list. The Senator from Arkansas told me he would do it. I supposed at that time that the amendment would come with the force of a committee amendment and that Senators upon this side, whose consciences have been bound so tightly by the Democratic caucus, would feel under obligations to follow their committee as they have followed it upon everything else. But in the simplicity of my soul I myself offered the amendment.

The committee did not offer it, and therefore these gentlemen, who have been following the Finance Committee as sheep follow a bellwether, broke away immediately upon the offering of the amendment by myself, and were no longer bound by it because it was not a committee amendment, although it was the mere difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. I do not know whether the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] was instrumental in sowing the seeds of dissatisfaction and discontent upon this side and destroying the interests of the farmers of my State and of the Missouri Valley, but some person seems to have done the work very effectually.

I am not willing to trust my interests or the interests of my people in the hands of the conference committee. If the conference committee look after the interests of the Missouri Valley no better than the Finance Committee have looked after them, then God save the people of the Missouri Valley country. Almost every interest that they have in the bill has been ruthlessly stricken down at the demand and request of some person in some other section of the country. The farmers' interest in the bill has not been cared for. They have been the victim of so-called reform legislation in the bill. Every weight and every burden that could be placed upon them has been placed upon them. Now, the Senator from Illinois says to me, "Let this matter go to the conference committee." I presume it will go there, however, in spite of me. He says let it go to the conference committee, and that the conference committee will take care of our interests. If they take care of my interest no better than the Finance Committee have done, I shall have no interest taken care of when the conference committee get through with it.

I say that I have reason to believe that the Senators from Illinois have expressed themselves to the effect that a tax of half a cent a pound is all they want upon barbed wire to protect the industry.

Mr. PALMER. Will my friend from Nebraska allow me? Whenever I have an opinion which it is desirable that any gentleman shall know, he will ask me what I have said. I do not consent to this second hand method of reporting my wishes. I am not seeking great protection; but I prefer, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me to do so, to speak for myself.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Illinois does not deny that one-half of a cent would be ample protection. He says he simply desires to speak for himself. If it be true that one-half of a cent is ample protection, the farmers of the West must be taxed to support Illinois industries, and the Senate proposes to put upon the backs of the farmers of Nebraska and Kansas and the Dakotas a tax that you may build up Springfield and Chicago at their expense, and you have built it up. Every dollar you have in Chicago you raid out of the Western country.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Nebraska allow me to make one remark? I desire to say to the Senator that the proprietor of one establishment in my State, in a letter which I have somewhere (I do not think I have it here with me), stated to me that in order to keep his establishment in operation and his men employed during the last year he has had to lose $22,000 in the manufacture of barbed wire. Probably the Senator's State has received the benefit of most of it.

Mr. ALLEN. I suppose if that is true, then the million and a half people in the State of Nebraska must pay. You want to put this tax upon my people to fill the pockets of your people; and the Committee on Finance are assisting you in doing it.

Mr. CULLOM. The people of Nebraska are getting barbed wire cheaper at present than if the law giving this protection were not in force.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not believe that. The Senator advocates the doctrine of a protective tariff. Protection against what? Protection against the importation of barbed wire, which will force down the price of barbed wire. That is the argument the Senator has been using in the Senate for the last four or five months. He asks protection so that the manufacturers can keep up their prices. That is what they want it for; that is what both the senior Senator from Illinois and the junior Senator from Illinois have said. I say that by some kind of missionary work with the Finance Committee and upon this side of the Chamber they propose to permit the manufacturers to put their hands into the pockets of the people of my State and take their money out and build up the private fortunes of those manufacturers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have listened with a good deal of interest to the eloquence of the Senator from Nebraska in his advocacy of the interests of the farmers. I wish to ask him if he thinks he voted in the interest of the farmers when, a few minutes ago, he voted against my motion to increase the duty on hay, the largest agricultural product of the United States?

Mr. ALLEN. You can buy hay for 50 per cent less than the amount of the tax the Senator from New Hampshire offered here. I can buy as good hay as the Senator has in the State of New Hampshire for less than the tax he proposed to put upon hay.

Mr. GALLINGER. Everyone knows that is not true.

Mr. ALLEN. I can go into the State of Nebraska and the State of Kansas and in those States buy good hay for $2 a ton, and the Senator's proposed tax was $3. Of course the farmer needs protection against the pauper hay of Canada when hay only brings him $2 a ton!

Mr. GALLINGER. Inasmuch as under a duty of $4 a ton, $1,000,000 worth of hay was imported into the United States last year, I can not for the life of me understand the philosophy of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. It is a matter of indifference how I voted upon the question of hay; it has no pertinency to the question of a tax upon wire. The worst corporation in the United States and the corporation that did the farmers of this country more injury than any other was the Washburn & Moen Manufacturing Company, a company which, through monopoly and through patents, held its hands upon the throats of the farmers of this country for years and took millions and millions of dollars from them unlawfully. The Chicago and Springfield enterprises are a part and parcel of a trust which undertakes to fix the price of this commodity to the farmers.

When the Senators from Illinois stand here and ask for protection upon barbed wire, they simply ask the Senate to become particeps criminis to the scheme of the trust. You want to continue your power and take money from the people of my State for the purpose of building up your own people and your own private enterprises, and the committee has assisted you in doing it.

Mr. VEST. I wish to say a word in regard to the very unpleasant statement made by the Senator from Nebraska as to a matter with which I had no personal connection.

When the amendment in regard to barbed wire was adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, my colleague upon the committee, the Senator from Arkansas, stated, as the RECORD will show, that he had the amendment in his charge and would offer it in the Senate, but that he did not propose to put it into the Senate until after other amendments had been disposed of. The Senator from Arkansas states to me that he afterwards went to the Senator from Nebraska and spoke to him in regard to the amendment, as he was specially interested in it, and it was concluded that the Senator from Nebraska should offer it instead of its coming from a member of the Finance Committee. Of this conversation I knew nothing until afterwards. The Senator from Nebraska offered the amendment. It excited considerable opposition, and was defeated. I voted with him to put barbed wire on the free list, and have voted three times to that effect.

Now the Senator from Nebraska, smarting under this defeat, to which I was not a party, attacks the Finance Committee and denounces them because they have done nothing for the agriculturists of the Northwest and especially of Nebraska.

Mr. President, I represent a larger agricultural State than Nebraska, with larger agricultural products in every direction. A barbed-wire factory, even larger than that in Joliet, Ill., is located in St. Louis. Now, in the face of my action here in voting to put barbed wire on the free list, the Senator from Nebraska without discrimination denounces the whole Finance Committee as attacking the interests of his people.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator could not have voted for it unless the committee regarded it with favor.

Mr. VEST. I voted for it because it had been adopted by my vote, partially, as in Committee of the Whole, and I so voted for it in the Senate. It was not a committee amendment because——

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I think he may state that certainly a majority, and I am inclined to think every Democratic member of the Finance Committee, voted for the Senator's amendment. I know I did.

Mr. VEST. So did the Senator from Indiana, the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Arkansas, and I.

Mr. VOORHEES. Every one of us.

Mr. VEST. All of them voted for it. The amendment putting barbed wire on the free list was not a committee amendment, because it was adopted after the bill was reported. After the bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole, and was under debate in the Senate, the amendment putting all fence wire on the free list was offered by the Senator from Nebraska, not coming from the committee. What he complains of now, I understand, is something that occurred between him and the Senator from Arkansas, which led him to believe, as he supposed, that, although he offered the amendment in the Senate, it would be considered as a committee amendment.

This is all I desire to state in regard to the matter. The Senator from Nebraska acts upon his own responsibility, and I shall act upon mine. The RECORD will show whether we have honestly and fairly discharged our duty. I shall not be deterred from doing what I believe to be right, I shall not be induced to do what I believe to be wrong, by anything he says.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, on Friday last, just before the Senate adjourned and before the bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate, the Senator from Arkansas, who had the committee amendments in charge, after presenting a certain number of them and saying that he would withhold certain others, was asked by me in regard to the amendment. My statement and his reply appear in the RECORD of the 30th of June. I said:

> I hope the Senator from Arkansas will withhold for a moment. A week or possibly ten days ago all kinds of fence wire were stricken from the taxable list. I have waited up to this time to see whether the committee intend to report to place fence wire upon the free list. I have heard nothing from the committee upon the subject, and I rise to ask them why that amendment is not proposed?
> Mr. JONES of Arkansas. When I asked the Senate to consider the paragraphs which had been passed over, I stated to the Senate that there were a number of amendments which were immaterial in themselves, about which there could be no division, and I asked unanimous consent that the amendments might be considered by the Senate now. That amendment would not be in order regularly and fairly——
> Mr. ALLEN. Is the fence wire amendment among the number?
> Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That amendment I hold in my hand in connection with other amendments which I propose to present in the Senate. It is not proper to present them as in Committee of the Whole; it would have been a violation of what I asked of the Senate to have presented an important amendment for the consideration of the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. I move that the bill be reported to the Senate.

Mr. President, this is what occurred in the Senate in the presence of every person here, and it is the only thing which has occurred between the Senate Finance Committee and myself. It was my understanding, and the record is plain, that the Finance Committee was to report this amendment as a committee amendment, and therefore have the united strength of the Democratic party in support of its committee, according to its caucus determination. I have every reason to believe, if that committee had presented the amendment just as it was stated by the Senator from Arkansas it would be presented, that Senators who refused to vote for the amendment to-day would have felt compelled, under their caucus rule, to have supported it.

What I complain of, and the only thing I complain of—and I do not know but that it is perfectly justifiable treatment—is the committee taking advantage of my ignorance of the rules of the Senate, and passing the amendment over to me, to be introduced as an amendment offered by me as an individual Senator, and by that means releasing the Democrats from their caucus obligations to follow their committee. I have every reason to believe that if the committee had stood up and offered that amendment, not passed it over to me to offer, but had offered it just exactly as the Senator from Arkansas stated on Friday it should be offered, every Democrat who was bound by a caucus pledge would have supported it, and it would have become a part of the law of the country. That is the complaint I make, and the only complaint.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I feel great distress of mind over the perturbed condition of my colleague, and I have such a degree of personal liking for him that I would do anything in my power to make him feel better and in happier frame. I do not think, however, that I can administer any consolation or comfort to him as to the manner of treatment he has received at the hands of his Democratic brethren. That is a matter which it is beyond my power to control. All I can do is simply to sympathize with him in his distress of mind as to the manner in which he has been treated by the committee and by the Democratic side of the Chamber.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to say to my colleague that I am really not entitled to any sympathy. I ought to have known better. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANDERSON. I think so. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN. If my colleague will withdraw his sympathy I will withdraw my claim to sympathy.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, "a burnt child dreads the fire," it is said, and I hope that my colleague having received this severe treatment at the hands of his colleagues on the other side of the aisle, will dread coalition or association with them hereafter. It is certainly well to keep clear of all entangling alliances with an enemy, and I really believe that a man who is at the head of a great party, as my colleague is, towering head and shoulders above his fellows of that party organization, should be the last man to enter into entangling alliances with the common enemy.

I think, however, I can administer a little consolation to my colleague on the subject of barbed wire and hay. If I believed with him that the constituents he and I have the honor to represent, a constituency which is of the noblest character and deserving of the very best treatment it can receive at the hands of its representatives in the Senate, were to be robbed for the purpose of pouring money into the coffers of the inhabitants of our sister State of Illinois, I should go with him in support of this amendment; but I think he exaggerates the trouble.

The duty on barbed wire is 1¼ cents per pound under the present law, and it sells for 1¼ cents per pound in the State of Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. One and one-half cents.

Mr. MANDERSON. One and one-half cents, I am told by the Senator from Illinois. So it sells at a fourth of a cent per pound less than the duty at the place of its manufacture. A short time ago I know that there was a barbed-wire factory in the city of Omaha. I understand because of some pecuniary troubles the managers got into outside of their business, that that establishment closed its doors some time ago, and I think it does not now exist; but I think if barbed wire can be made in the State of Illinois it can be made with profit in the State of Nebraska, and I see no reason why, under a protective duty, we should not bring into that State the strands of wire that can be twisted, and make barbed wire to fence our farms.

In the State of Nebraska, however, the infliction upon the people in the way of price is not so very grievous. With a duty of 1¼ cents per pound barbed wire sells at from 2 to 2½ cents per pound in the city of Omaha. There is not, it seems to me, a very great infliction in that.

My colleague suggested to-day that wealthy men like the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY]—I hope he is a wealthy man; though I have never heard him referred to as being a millionaire—could buy barbed wire cheaply by the carload and get it at an enormous reduction.

The difference in the retail and the wholesale price of iron and the products of iron is infinitesimal. A man pays for a carload of nails within the slightest fraction proportionately as much as he would for nails by the keg. No farmer buys a pound of barbed wire or 5 or 10 pounds of barbed wire. When my farmer constituent and my colleague's farmer constituent wants barbed wire he buys it by many rolls, in a great number of pounds, and frequently by the ton, for as a rule the farmer in Nebraska desires to fence in large tracts of land, for we in Nebraska are not small farmers; we fence in large fields; we fence in sections of land at times; and great quantities of wire are usually purchased, not small amounts.

Another consoling thought that I would give my colleague, for I do not like his distress of mind over what will result from this bill. Hay under the present law, the McKinley law, is $4 a ton, and yet my colleague says it sells for $2 a ton in the State of Nebraska. Certainly we are in a very blest condition when we can buy hay for half the amount of the tax upon hay, and yet we are told that the consumer pays the tax.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no desire whatever to interrupt my colleague——

Mr. MANDERSON. I am very glad always to have my colleague interrupt me.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no desire to criticise anything he says or to be funny at his expense, but I want to say to my colleague that in the interior of Nebraska he can buy hay for the price I stated. The difference between my colleague and me is that he lives in the city and I live in the country, where the hay is made.

Mr. MANDERSON. There is as much difference in hay as there is in men. [Laughter.] We have some very good hay in the State of Nebraska, and we have some very poor hay. No good hay can be bought in Nebraska at $2 a ton. Hay, such as is grown in the river valleys, that is of very coarse quality, can be bought probably at certain seasons for $2 a ton. Prairie hay that is of good quality, grown upon the uplands, can be bought at $2 a ton when the purchaser is stalwart like my colleague and can swing the necessary scythe or take the mower, drive it, cut the hay himself, cure it, and haul it to his place; but prairie hay of good quality is worth more than $2 a ton.

I have bought many a ton of it in the thirty years I have lived in the State of Nebraska, and I never bought prairie hay at less than $6 a ton in the city of Omaha. When you come to the cultivated hays—timothy, clover, and the mixed hays which are grown at times, you have to pay even a larger price than that.

Mr. President, I thought it well to make these suggestions that the whole truth might be known. I think much damage results from partial truths, and I feared that one of the damaging results might be that, if it were understood that hay of the best quality could be bought in Nebraska at $2 a ton, we should have an overplus of population there within a year or two which we could not take care of. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I understand that during my absence for a few minutes from the Senate Chamber the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] has indulged in some criticism of my connection with the matter under discussion. I have tried to remain in the Senate Chamber at all times and on all occasions during the consideration of this bill. I have been out of it as rarely as possible. I was below getting something to eat, and I regret very much that the Senator saw fit to indulge in his criticisms in my absence, rather than when I was here. I do not know what he said; but I propose to state to the Senate plainly and distinctly what the facts were in connection with this matter, and if anything has been stated to the contrary it will be contradicted. If not, of course no harm will be done.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me there?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. I read from the debate which appeared in the RECORD of Saturday last, which occurred on Friday, where the Senator said to me that the amendment I offered some time ago as paragraph 683½ would be reported to the Senate after the bill came back to the Senate from the Committee of the Whole. I read the Senator's language, and I then said that the Senator from Arkansas or the committee—I do not know but I used the word "committee"—gave me this amendment, that I introduced it, that it was defeated, and that the blame I laid to the Finance Committee I said was this, and I now say it again, that knowing that the Democratic caucus would not be bound by an amendment offered by me, the committee ought to have taken that amendment and offered it, so that the amendment would have secured the whole force and benefit of the entire Democratic strength on this side of the Chamber under its caucus rule. That is the substance of what I said.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I have only to say in reply that the plain statement of the facts is this: When certain amendments had been offered here, the Senator from Nebraska rose in his place, as every Senator will remember, and asked what had become of the proposition to put barbed wire on the free list. I stated that the proposed amendment to put barbed wire on the free list I had in my hand, in connection with a number of other amendments, and at the proper time it would be offered in the Senate. I did that just as I did every other thing in connection with this matter.

After I sat down I walked over to the Senator's seat and suggested to him that, in view of the fact that he had offered in the first place the proposition to put barbed wire on the free list, perhaps he would prefer to offer the amendment himself in the Senate. I did that just in the same spirit that I did to the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE], after the agreement to put grain bags on the free list, and suggested to him that he make that motion because his people were largely interested in that subject, and as he had been connected with it at the time the amendment was adopted I supposed he would like to offer the amendment.

For the same reason I went to the Senator from Nebraska, thinking perhaps that he would like to make the motion to carry out what he himself had begun, and I did not propose to take from him the credit, if there was any credit in it, of offering the amendment.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] had taken some interest in this matter and had called upon and had a conversation with the Secretary of the Treasury about putting the amendment in such form as that there would be no difficulty about its administration. He had given me the memorandum that I had.

After I had given it to the Senator from Nebraska, and he had taken it, it occurred to me on account of the connection the Senator from Wisconsin had had with the matter, that possibly he ought to have been spoken to in reference to it. I mentioned to him that perhaps he would prefer to move the amendment, and I made the suggestion to the Senator from Nebraska, and he was willing that the Senator from Wisconsin should make the proposition. I took the memorandum to the Senator from Wisconsin, and he said that he did not care about it and would prefer that the Senator from Nebraska should do it, if that Senator so desired. I then took the amendment back to the Senator from Nebraska, making a plain statement of the facts that I did it out of kindness to him, just as I had done with two or three other Senators in relation to other amendments, and just as I would have done with forty others under the same circumstances, where the amendments had not come from the committee. I suggested that the Senators who had offered the amendments as in Committee of the Whole should move them again in the Senate. I have done that with every Senator who has offered an amendment when any matter has arisen in connection with it; and that was also done with the Senator from New York to-day [Mr. HILL].

In acting as I did in the case of the Senator from Nebraska, I was simply treating him as I have treated all other Senators. When I understood there would be an effort made to defeat what was done in Committee of the Whole, I told the Senator I understood such would be the case.

When the proposition in controversy came up in the Senate, every member of the Finance Committee voted for the proposition to put fencing wire on the free list when the motion was made by the Senator.

When the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] asked me the question as to whether it was a committee amendment, I stood up at this desk and stated that it had not been proposed by the Committee on Finance, but had been adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The Senator from Nebraska was in his seat and heard every word of that statement and not one solitary syllable of challenge fell from his lips as to the exact facts as stated by me at the time.

I have done nothing in this matter but what a straightforward, honest, upright man would do. I have not attempted by any indirection to accomplish any purpose. I believed that the amendment would be adopted; I supposed it would be; but whether I believed it or not, I should have taken exactly the same course towards the Senator that I did take, and the same course that I have taken towards all other Senators here.

This much I have stated in defense of myself and to state the facts aright. The Senator has no just ground of complaint against me. I have done nothing but what was right and proper.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, my feeling for the Senator from Arkansas is perfectly kind, and I do not think I misrepresented him at all. I think I stated the facts just exactly as they were, but I was a little bit surprised that on Friday last, when the bill was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the Senate suddenly stopped transacting business before this amendment was reached. Possibly the Senator from Arkansas will explain why the Finance Committee sought to take the bill out of Committee of the Whole before all these amendments were considered.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not understand the Senator's proposition.

Mr. ALLEN. I say the Senator took the bill out of Committee of the Whole and had it reported to the Senate before this amendment was offered. Why was not this amendment offered as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment was adopted as in Committee of the Whole and was printed in the bill, as were all the balance of the amendments which were agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, and the Senator proposed to offer an additional amendment putting this article on the free list. Such amendments could only come up after the bill went into the Senate, they could not come up as in Committee of the Whole, and had no place in Committe of the Whole.

When, in the regular reading of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, the amendment in question was reached, it was passed over on the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], if I remember aright, on account of the absence of the other Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], and the statement was made that one or both of the Senators from Illinois would have something to say about it when the question came up. Then the other reserved amendments were read in regular order until completed, and when that was done we went back to the first amendment on page 1 in point of time, and went through the whole of them, reaching this amendment in its regular order.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator does not answer my question.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I do not understand it. Let the Senator state it once more, and I will try it again.

Mr. ALLEN. I will try it again.

The proviso that was stricken out to-day on the motion of the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] is found on page 28 of the bill in the following language:

Provided further, That barbed wire, commonly used for fencing, shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. President, when that question was reached in the Senate yesterday the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] asked that it be passed over on account of the absence of his colleague [Mr. PALMER], who would be here to-day, but I think he came here probably yesterday afternoon.

Mr. CULLOM. I said that my colleague had not got to the Senate at that time, but I supposed he would be here during the day.

Mr. ALLEN. That was after the bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate. The amendment which was offered by me to-day, and of which the Senator from Arkansas has spoken, was in the possession of the Finance Committee for days and weeks before this bill was reported back to the Senate on Friday last. My question is, when the bill was in Committee of the Whole, why did the Finance Committee stop short when it reached this amendment and not report it and have it considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska was never adopted by the Finance Committee. The amendment to which the Senator has alluded was an amendment proposed by him and adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. There was no action by the Finance Committee upon it. After the amendment was adopted as in Committee of the Whole, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], as I have said, after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, made up this memorandum, and I kept it with other papers connected with the matter to be presented when the subject was taken up and considered; and as soon as it was regularly reached the Senator from Nebraska took the memorandum and offered the amendment, and made no complaint, and made no request in connection with the matter. I would myself have offered the amendment if the Senator had asked me to do so. I had no objection to doing it, but I turned it over to him, because I thought he would prefer to offer it on account of his connection with the matter.

Mr. ALLEN. That does not answer the question. I am going to read from the RECORD.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then I do not think it can be answered.

Mr. ALLEN. I think it can be.

This is what occurred on Friday last, as found in the RECORD of Saturday:

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will withhold for a moment.

The Senator from Arkansas was then making a proposition to report this bill from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate when I interrupted him and made this remark:

A week or possibly ten days ago all kinds of fence wire were stricken from the taxable list. I have waited up to this time to see whether the committee intend to report to place fence wire upon the free list.

I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to this language:

I have heard nothing from the committee upon the subject, and I rise to ask them why that amendment is not proposed.

Here is what the Senator from Arkansas said at that time:

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. When I asked the Senate to consider the paragraphs which had been passed over, I stated to the Senate that there were a number of amendments which were immaterial in themselves, about which there could be no division—

I suppose no division of sentiment among the committee or the Senate—and I asked unanimous consent that the amendments might be considered by the Senate now. That amendment would not be in order regularly and fairly——

Mr. ALLEN. Is the fence wire amendment among the number?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That amendment I hold in my hand in connection with other amendments which I propose to present in the Senate. It is not proper to present them as in Committee of the Whole; it would have been a violation of what I asked of the Senate to have presented an important amendment for the consideration of the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

I do not know why it was not proper to present them as in Committee of the Whole. I see the President of the Senate shakes his head. I do not know what he means by that, but that amendment was in the hands of the Finance Committee for at least two weeks before the Senator from Arkansas made that expression on Friday last. What I want to know is this—and I am impugning no man with bad motives at all—why the Finance Committee, when the bill was in Committee of the Whole, did not offer that amendment and have it considered? Why was not that put in with the other amendments by the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator permit me a minute?

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The amendment was not offered because I was not willing to act in bad faith toward the Senate. No amendments which I proposed that day were regularly in order to be offered to the bill as in Committee of the Whole, but I suggested to the Senate that I had a number of amendments which were immaterial, mere verbal changes, amounting to nothing, and to which I presumed there would be no opposition, and I asked unanimous consent, out of order, to offer such immaterial amendments as would not be objected to. Those were the amendments that I offered. It was because no material amendment would have been in order then that the amendment to which the Senator from Nebraska refers was not offered. I have endeavored to make that plain to the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. That may be true. I do not say it is not.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is true.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know anything about the rules of the Senate; but once in a while we have a rule which is enforced here and a great many times we have rules which are not enforced. I know of no rule or parliamentary usage which would prevent the Senator from Arkansas or the Finance Committee from introducing that amendment in the Committee of the Whole and having it considered; and I do not believe there is any.

Why was that not done? If it was an oversight upon the part of the Finance Committee—and I am willing to concede it was possibly or probably—then, when the Finance Committee realized that the Democratic caucus was only bound to follow amendments which were offered by that committee, why did not that committee assume the responsibility and offer the amendment in accordance with the promise of Friday last?

Mr. President, so far as the remarks of my colleague [Mr. MANDERSON] are concerned, I do not feel it my duty to answer everything he may say. I have but a word to say upon the subject of hay. My colleague seems to think it was remarkable that I did not vote for a tariff on hay. I simply desire to say that when I stated that hay could be purchased in the State of Nebraska for $2 a ton, I put it above rather than below the truth; for at this time of the year, or a little later, possibly a month later, a man can go into the State of Nebraska where the hay is cut and stacked, and can buy it for $1.50 a ton, and good hay at that.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I rise to call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee to the fact that it is quarter to 9 o'clock, that the Senate has been in session to-day almost eleven hours, that we are getting along very slowly, and to express the hope, if the Senator expects to have this bill passed to-night, that we shall reach a final vote before 12 o'clock, or if not that he will consent that we adjourn over to-morrow, because I should hate to see our national day desecrated by the passage of such a measure as this.

Mr. HARRIS. Nothing could be so painful to me as to give the slightest shadow of pain to the Senator from Oregon; but I think this bill ought to be disposed of finally before the Senate adjourns.

Mr. CULLOM. Or before 12 o'clock to-night.

Mr. HARRIS. And I hope every Senator will stay here until it is finally disposed of, whether it be before or after 12 o'clock.

With regard to the pending question, it seems not to be a question of policy so much as an arraignment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and the Finance Committee. I do not care to go into that further than to say that the arraignment is absolutely absurd and unjust.

I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POWER. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted at the end of paragraph 685, in relation to wool.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of paragraph 685:

Provided, That this paragraph shall take effect on and after June 30, 1895.

Mr. POWER. Mr. President, this country's wool clip is now en route to market. If this amendment is adopted it will assist the wool-producers to the extent of several million dollars. The Senators on this side will not object to the amendment. It will assist the farmers in getting a better price for their wool clip of this season. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be adopted. I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PALMER (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], with whom I am paired is not present, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SMITH (after having voted in the negative). I desire to withdraw my vote, as the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], with whom I am paired, is temporarily absent from the Chamber.

Mr. DANIEL (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], and withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Allison,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Quay,
Carey,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Patton,	Shoup,
Cullom,	Higgins,	Peffer,	Stewart,
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Perkins,	Teller,
Dixon,	Kyle,	Platt,	Washburn.
Dolph,	Lodge,	Power,
Frye,	McMillan,	Proctor,

NAYS—35.

Bate,	George,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,
Berry,	Gibson,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	McLaurin,	Turpie,
Blanchard,	Gray,	Martin,	Vest,
Caffery,	Harris,	Mills,	Vilas,
Call,	Hill,	Mitchell, Wis.	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Hunton,	Morgan,	Walsh,
Coke,	Irby,	Murphy,	White.
Faulkner,	Jarvis,	Pasco,

NOT VOTING—20.

Aldrich,	Cameron,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Allen,	Daniel,	McPherson,	Smith,
Brice,	Dubois,	Morrill,	Squire,
Butler,	Gordon,	Palmer,	Wilson.
Camden,	Hansbrough,	Pettigrew,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] to paragraph 193, on page 45, relating to rice.

It will be remembered that the Senate Committee on Finance made quite a number of amendments to that paragraph, and in the course of procedure after debate in Committee of the Whole all those amendments were disagreed to. Therefore paragraph 193 stands as it came to us from the House of Representatives.

If I felt justified in taking time enough at this late hour, I am sure I could convince the Senate that the arrangement in the bill as it came from the House is an unjust one, so far as it affects those who clean rice in San Francisco and in New York City, where all imported rice practically is cleaned if imported in the uncleaned state. It has been shown that unless there is a differential of three-quarters of a cent per pound, all the uncleaned rice now imported will come in as cleaned rice, and that it will not interfere with the importations except as to their character. It has been further shown that unless a change is made in this paragraph those who are engaged in this productive industry, in those two great cities of our country, which productive industry does not interfere with any industry in the Southern States where rice is produced, will be greatly injured, if indeed their business will not be entirely destroyed.

What I ask is that an amendment of the most trivial character as to its effect upon this industry may be introduced into this paragraph, in order that it may be still further considered by the two Houses.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. What amendment does the Senator suggest?

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest in line 13, paragraph 193, the insertion of the words "eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound," instead of 1 cent per pound for uncleaned rice. I hope that will be satisfactory to those in charge of the bill. I will add that when the bill goes into conference, if upon further investigation and examination the amendment shall seem not wise, I shall not press it.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We accept that amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I move, then, the amendment I have stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated at the desk.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 193, line 13, before the words "1 cent," it is proposed to insert "eight-tenths of;" so as to read:

193. Rice, cleaned, 1¼ cents per pound; uncleaned rice, or rice free of outer hull and still having the inner cuticle on, eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have two amendments to which I think the committee will agree. One is on page 38, paragraph 171, where, after the words "type metal," I move to insert "three-fourths of 1 cent per pound for the lead contained therein."

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Rhode Island and I disagree in regard to the facts about this matter, but I am very willing, and the committee is very willing, to accept this amendment and consider it afterwards in conference. The Senator may be right about it; I am not certain. His information is different from mine.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "metal," in line 20, paragraph 171, on page 30, it is proposed to insert "three-fourths of 1 cent per pound for the lead contained therein;" so as to read:

171. Type metal, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound for the lead contained therein, and new types, 15 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. On page 32, paragraph 141, line 22, the original committee amendment was 50 cents a dozen on the class of files there referred to. I move to make the rate "thirty-five" instead of "thirty cents," and I think the Senator from Missouri will find upon investigation that even that rate is too low. In any event, I should like to have it go to conference that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, in paragraph 141, line 22, before the word "cents," it is proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to read:

141. Files, file blanks, rasps, and floats, of all cuts and kinds, 4 inches in length and under, 35 cents per dozen.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, on the 16th of June, when I had the honor of last addressing the Senate on the pending measure, my remarks were interrupted when I was about to address myself to the subject of petroleum. At this stage of the bill of course I do not desire to occupy the time of the Senate in debate, and unless the managers of the bill on behalf of the majority seriously object, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to print the remarks I had intended to deliver as though delivered on that day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HARRIS. I did not hear one word of the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from Pennsylvania requests unanimous consent to print in the RECORD certain remarks which he intended to deliver.

Mr. HARRIS. Let him do it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

Mr. VILAS. I desire to propose an amendment simply to rewrite one of the sections of the pending bill on pages 192 and 193 in the form which I send to the Secretary's desk to be read, which has had the approval of Senators on both sides of the Chamber. I suppose it will lead to no discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 192 it is proposed to strike out, beginning in line 20, down to and including line 7, on page 193, as follows:

SEC. 3167. That if any collector or deputy collector or other officer or internal-revenue agent acting under the authority of any revenue law of the United States, divulges to any party or makes known in any other manner than may be provided by law, the operations, style of work, or apparatus of any manufacturer or producer visited by him in the discharge of his official duties, or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any information obtained by him in the discharge of such duties, he shall be subject to a fine of not exceeding $1,000 or to be imprisoned for not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court, and shall be dismissed from office and be forever thereafter incapable of holding any office under the Government.

And in lieu thereof insert:

SEC. 3167. That it shall be unlawful for any collector, deputy collector, agent, clerk, or other officer or employé of the United States to divulge or to make known in any manner whatever not provided by law to any person the operations, style of work, or apparatus of any manufacturer or producer visited by him in the discharge of his official duties, or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particular thereof, set forth or disclosed in any income return by any person or corporation, or to permit any income return or copy thereof or any book containing any abstract or particulars thereof, to be seen or examined by any person except as provided by law; and it shall be unlawful for any person to print or publish in any manner whatever not provided by law any income return, or any part thereof, or the amount or source of income profits, losses, or expenditures appearing in any income return; and any offense against the foregoing provision shall be a misdemeanor, and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court; and if the offender be an officer or employé of the United States he shall be dismissed from office and be incapable thereafter of holding any office under the Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CHANDLER. When the Senator from Nebraska who sits upon the opposite side of the Chamber [Mr. ALLEN] was speaking a few minutes ago, he alluded to what he termed the "caucus committee." I think those were the words he used. I heard the expression "caucus" very distinctly. I should be very unwilling at this late hour, when we hope to dispose of this bill so that we may enjoy the day of national independence without carrying the details of the bill in our minds, to have any items slip into the bill without the approval of the caucus committee.

If the Senator from Wisconsin is authorized to make this motion—fully, completely, and totally authorized to make it, so that there is not likely to be at some time during the evening an angry discussion upon the other side of the Chamber as to whether the caucus committee fully approve of it—if the Senator will take that responsibility and say that he does not think the caucus committee will at a later stage in this debate object to this clause, then, of course, with the desire to assist the Senator——

Mr. VILAS. If the committee disapprove of it I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not yielded the floor yet. If the Senator from Wisconsin will guarantee us against a lengthy debate at a later hour on this amendment, I shall make no objection; otherwise I shall ask for a full explanation of it at this time, so that when we have once settled it it shall be settled forever.

Mr. VILAS. As I have said, if the committee disapprove of it, I will withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POWER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 193, on page 45, after the word "cleaned," in line 11, it is proposed to strike out "1½ cents per pound," and insert "50 per cent ad valorem;" so as to read:

Rice, cleaned, 50 per cent ad valorem, etc.

Mr. POWER. By the imposition of a duty of 1½ cents a pound on rice it costs the people of the United States 3½ cents a pound, while in Montreal, in the Dominion of Canada, where there is no duty, rice can be bought for 2 cents a pound; and the same is the case in Liverpool. I offer the amendment to allow 50 per cent ad valorem, although yesterday an amendment proposing a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem on barley was voted down. I hope my amendment will be agreed to, and I ask for the yeas and nays on it.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following as new sections:

SEC. —. That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the customs commission, to be composed of five disinterested persons to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The commissioners appointed under this act shall continue in office six years, respectively, from the date of their respective appointments and until their successors, respectively, are appointed and qualified by the President for terms of six years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. No more than three of the commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party. No vacancy in the commission shall impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission. The salary of such commissioners shall be at the rate of $7,000 per annum. They shall be entitled, in addition, to compensation for actual traveling and other necessary expenses in the discharge of their duties. They shall choose one of their own number to be president of the commission. They shall have power to employ a clerk, a stenographer, and a messenger, and, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, such other clerical assistants as shall be necessary to the performance of their duties, and at such rates of compensation as they may establish, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Their salaries, expenses, and the compensation of the clerk, stenographer, messenger, and such additional clerical force as may thus be employed shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon the auditing of the same, according to the usual course in the Treasury Department.

SEC. —. That the commission shall establish its permanent office at the city of Washington, where it shall be at all times in the usual course of business, ready to hear or receive oral or written testimony upon all the specific subjects mentioned in this act, and generally upon everything relating directly or indirectly to customs duties and revenue.

SEC. —. That it shall be the duty of the said commission to examine into and ascertain the average price of commodities imported into the United States, both at wholesale and retail in the United States, and both in the United States and in the foreign places of production, sale, or shipment, for the period of twelve months preceding and twelve months following any change in the rate of customs duties imposed upon such commodities, and this inquiry shall be carried back for a period of twenty-five years, and more, if deemed advisable by such commission, and shall extend to all facts relating to demand and supply, domestic and foreign, which tend to influence prices of such commodities, foreign and domestic, and to aid in determining the true effect of the import duty, or of the change therein in the several cases upon domestic and foreign prices, and upon productions of the same or of other commodities, upon revenue, upon immigration, upon profits of capital, rates of wages, and the general welfare.

Second. To ascertain the amounts in quantity and value of the importation of the principal commodities during each of said periods of twelve months preceding and succeeding any such change in customs duties.

Third. To ascertain, as far as practicable, the quantity and value of the same or similar commodities produced in the United States during the same respective periods.

Fourth. To ascertain whether in any and what instances the particular rates of customs duties have operated to increase or diminish production in the United States and to cause a reduction of the first cost of articles produced for consumption, and what other causes, if any, have operated similarly.

Fifth. To ascertain in what particular rates of customs duties existing from time to time operate injuriously or favorably to the development and increase of American manufactures and productions, or operate injuriously or favorably to the consumers of such manufactured articles and productions in respect of causing or contributing to the payment of unreasonable prices by consumers, or the removal or reduction of the same.

Sixth. To ascertain the effect of the customs duties upon the price of agricultural productions of the country and their sale in United States markets and their consumption in the United States.

Seventh. To ascertain the effect of such customs duties, both actual and relative, in respect of the employment and the payment of remunerative wages, both actual and relative, to labor in the United States, and a comparison of the same with the labor and wages in other countries.

Eighth. To consider the effect of customs duties, or the absence of them, upon the agricultural, commercial, manufacturing, mining, and other industrial interests of the people of the United States.

Ninth. To ascertain and compare the actual cost and the selling price, both at wholesale and retail, of similar manufactured commodities reduced to American weights, measures, and money in the United States and elsewhere.

Tenth. To ascertain the growth and development of the principal manufacturing industries affected by the tariff schedules in England, France, Germany, Belgium, and the United States for the last twenty-five years; and to ascertain the relative cost of transportation in those countries and the United States.

Eleventh. To ascertain the trade relations of the United States with other nations and ascertain the countries where advantageous treaties can be made to advance the commercial interests of the people of the United States.

SEC. —. That for the purpose of such inquiries and investigations the commission may visit any part of the United States, and by public notice or otherwise invite testimony and information from all persons interested. They may from time to time also delegate one of their number to visit foreign countries to make investigation respecting the labor and industries of those countries whenever such investigation may be necessary to promote the objects of the commission, and they may require information concerning the labor and industries of foreign countries from consular or other agents of the United States in those countries, and such agents shall furnish the information so required promptly and without charge.

SEC. —. That the commission shall report its proceedings in respect of the matters hereinbefore in this act mentioned, together with the statistics and evidence upon which its report is based, together with recommendations for changes in customs dues which they may deem advisable and necessary.

and the ground upon which its conclusions concerning such changes have been reached, to Congress, in the month of December in each year, and at all times furnish such information as may be required to the Department of State. It shall cause the testimony and statistics taken and obtained in respect of the matters in this act mentioned to be printed from time to time and distributed to members of Congress by the Public Printer, and also shall cause to be printed for the use of Congress 2,000 copies of its annual report, together with statistics and testimony hereinbefore mentioned. It is hereby made the duty of the Public Printer to execute the printing provided for in this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. PETTIGREW. This amendment proposes a tariff commission to investigate the question of protection, and that it shall be a permanent bureau to report to Congress at the opening of every session. I do not care to discuss the amendment, but I desire the yeas and nays on agreeing to it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Manderson,	Quay,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,
Carey,	Hale,	Patton,	Shoup,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Peffer,	Squire,
Davis,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Teller,
Dixon,	Higgins,	Platt,	Washburn.
Dolph,	Lodge,	Power,
Dubois,	McMillan,	Proctor,

NAYS—38.

Bate,	George,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Berry,	Gibson,	Martin,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Mills,	Turpie,
Blanchard,	Harris,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Caffery,	Hill,	Morgan,	Vilas.
Call,	Hunton,	Murphy,	Walsh,
Cockrell,	Irby,	Palmer,	White.
Coke,	Jarvis,	Pasco,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,

NOT VOTING—17.

Brice,	Gordon,	McPherson,	Wilson,
Butler,	Gray,	Morrill,	Wolcott.
Camden,	Hoar,	Pettigrew,
Cameron,	Jones, Nev.	Pugh,
Cullom,	Kyle,	Voorhees,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, early in the present session I gave notice that I should offer an amendment, in the nature of a substitute for the present tariff bill, providing for the appointment of a commission, whose duty should be prescribed by the statute, to ascertain by statistics and facts the exact difference between the cost of labor in this country and in foreign countries upon all articles coming in competition with American manufacturers.

I intended latterly to offer that as an amendment to the pending bill. The vote upon the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], just defeated, shows that there is no disposition now to adopt any commission proposition, and I have determined not to offer the amendment which I have prepared. I desire to say, however, that later in the session I shall introduce such a bill and shall ask the consideration of the Finance Committee to it, believing as I do that the sooner the Congress of the United States gets upon a specific basis of determination as to what the duties upon importations shall be, the better it will be for the business of the country.

I hope the Finance Committee will hereafter give serious attention to the question whether we can not arrive at a mode of determination as to what shall be the amount and character of our duties, so that the tariff will not go first to one extreme and then to another, as one party or the other has control of the Government.

Mr. MANDERSON. Yesterday by the Calendar, but to-day legislatively, after the bill had been reported from the Committee of the Whole and when it was in the Senate, I offered an amendment to strike out paragraph 182, which is the first paragraph of the sugar schedule, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the bounties authorized to be paid to producers of sugar by section 231 of the act entitled "An act to reduce revenue, equalize duties, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, shall be reduced one-tenth part of their respective amounts, as prescribed in said act, each year, beginning with July 1, 1895, and extending to July 1, 1905, inclusive, and shall thereafter cease and determine, and with this modification paragraphs 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, and 236 of said act shall continue in full force and effect.

The vote being had upon this amendment by way of striking out and substituting, it stood yeas 34, nays 37. Having first voted in the affirmative, I changed my vote to the negative and gave notice that I should move a reconsideration of the vote by which the Senate rejected the amendment. I now move that the vote of the Senate by which that amendment was rejected be reconsidered.

Of course the result of a vote to reconsider will be another vote upon a diminishing bounty, dropping one-tenth of the bounty each year during the ten years that yet remain to 1905 and the substitution of a diminishing bounty for the duty provided in the bill. I call for a vote upon the motion to reconsider.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOLPH. Does the motion include the striking out of the paragraph?

Mr. MANDERSON. It will after we reconsider. The motion now is to reconsider.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

Mr. HILL. That question is debatable and will lead to debate. The bill is expected to be passed to-night.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from New York will yield to me I will put it in a shape in which it will not be debatable.

Mr. HILL. All right.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. MANDERSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRICE (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Bate,	Gorman,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Berry,	Gray,	Martin,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Hansbrough,	Mills,	Vest,
Call,	Harris,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas,
Cockrell,	Hill,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hunton,	Murphy,	Walsh,
Daniel,	Irby,	Palmer,	White.
Faulkner,	Jarvis,	Pasco,
George,	Jones, Ark.	Ransom,
Gibson,	Lindsay,	Roach,

NAYS—32.

Aldrich,	Davis,	Kyle,	Platt,
Allen,	Dixon,	Lodge,	Power,
Allison,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Proctor,
Blanchard,	Dubois,	Manderson,	Quay,
Caffery,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Sherman,
Carey,	Hawley,	Patton,	Shoup,

NOT VOTING—16.

Brice,	Frye,	McPherson,	Stewart,
Butler,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Washburn,
Camden,	Hale,	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Cameron,	Hoar,	Pugh,	Wolcott.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. HILL. I offered the other day an amendment relating to taxes connected with the income feature of the bill. The Senator from Missouri has modified the amendment somewhat, and I think expects to offer it. I will await the pleasure of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. There is no objection to the object of the amendment of the Senator from New York, that the operating and business expenses of corporations shall be included in making up their exemption from the income tax. I have no doubt that it would include insurance, which is a part of the business expenses of any corporation. I have modified the amendment. I took the liberty of drawing a substitute, which I ask to have read, and which the committee will accept.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of section 59:

That all State, county, municipal, and town taxes paid by corporations, companies, or associations, shall be included in the operating and business expenses of such corporations, companies, or associations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POWER. I offer an amendment to increase the duty on pig lead.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 166, page 37, after the word "cent," in line 21, insert the words "and one-half;" so as to make the paragraph read:

166. Lead in pigs and bars, molten and old refuse lead run into blocks and bars, and old scrap lead fit only to be remanufactured, one cent and one-half per pound.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. POWER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Aldrich,	Dubois,	Lodge,	Proctor,
Allison,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Carey,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Patton,	Squire,
Davis,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Stewart,

Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Power,	Washburn.

NAYS—37.

Bate,	Gibson,	McLaurin,	Smith,
Berry,	Gorman,	Martin,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Mills,	Vest,
Blanchard,	Harris,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vilas,
Caffery,	Hill,	Morgan,	Voorhees,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHOUP. I desire to offer an amendment to paragraph 249.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all of section 249, page 57, after the word "all," where it appears first, in line 15, and insert:

Natural mineral waters, all imitation of natural mineral waters, and all artificial mineral waters, in green or colored glass bottles containing not more than 1 pint, 24 cents per dozen bottles. If containing more than 1 pint pint and not more than 1 quart, 48 cents per dozen bottles. In bottles containing more than 1 quart, 25 cents per gallon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP].

Mr. SHOUP. Mr. President, I desire to detain the Senate for a few minutes upon this amendment. Our country abounds in mineral springs. They are to be found in nearly every State and Territory in the Union. Many of them, however, are far distant from the populous centers of the nation. This is notable in Colorado, Montano, Idaho, and other intermountain Western States and Territories. While we have in Idaho many mineral springs of both hot and cold water distinguished as health resorts, we have but one group of springs where bottling works have been established.

The springs to which I refer are in Southeastern Idaho, near the village of Soda Springs, on the Oregon Short Line Railroad. Before Idaho was organized as a Territory these springs were patronized as a health resort by the early colonists of Utah.

Twenty-nine years ago I, with a party of gentlemen, visited these wonderful springs, now widely known from ocean to ocean as a health resort. The water of these springs contains an excess of free carbonic acid gas; no artificial gas being required.

I submit the report of Prof. William J. Ireland, judge of mineral waters at the World's Columbian Exposition, where the water from these springs was exhibited:

IDANHA WATER.

Consists of samples of natural mineral water representing Soda Springs, Bannocks County, Idaho.

The springs were mentioned in the early geological examination under Gen. John C. Frémont, and the locality has been known as a health resort for the past thirty years.

The bottling and sale of this water has become one of the chief industries of this county. The water possesses the happy quality of blending with wine and liquors without giving discoloration or precipitation. It is pleasing to the taste, healthful, and exercises a mild, beneficial medicinal effect.

Sworn statements duly acknowledged accompanying the exhibit show that the water is bottled just as it flows from the springs with its own excess of natural carbonic acid gas.

The accompanying is an analysis made under the supervision of Prof. C. F. Chandler, M. D., the well known analyst:

This water also contains an excess of free carbonic acid gas.

I recommend an award for palatability, natural effervescence, purity, large amount of free natural carbonic acid gas, healthfulness, and the unusual blending properties which constitute "Idanha" an unsurpassed, sparklingly delicious table water.

PROF. WM. J. IRELAN, Judge.

Mr. President, the Idanha mineral water is, in my opinion, the best natural table water in the world, and is far superior to any imported mineral water. It is pure and is bottled with the natural gas, while I suspect that all imported waters are artificially charged, and are therefore unhealthy. The company controlling these springs have an investment of $100,000 in their plant. The president of the company, Mr. Fred J. Keisel, informs me that on account of the general depression throughout the West last year, caused by the suspension of work on many of the silver-lead mines, owing to the low price of silver and lead, that the bottling works were operated on half time.

A market for the product of these springs is found in adjacent States and Territories, extending west to the Pacific coast and eastward to the Mississippi River.

An effort has been made by the company to place the water in Eastern cities, but they find it impossible to do so with imported waters on the free list and the imitation natural waters paying but a small duty. Railway freight charges from Idaho to the populous cities of the East are much greater than from foreign countries to the same cities.

We pay in Idaho more than three times the wages paid in Germany for similar work; and for bottles, corks, wire, and wrappers we pay 100 per cent more than they do in that country.

Mr. President, to enable this country to place our pure mineral waters within the reach of consumers, as against the imitation mineral waters imported from other countries, there should be a duty of 2 cents per bottle on pints, and 4 cents per bottle on quarts. Many States are interested, and the whole country would be benefited by the adoption of this amendment. Why not protect our own springs? We have the best and purest waters in the world.

Large sums of money have been expended in their development and in the erection of buildings. All we ask in the way of protection is the difference in cost of bottling, wages, and freight. I submit as a part of my remarks the following statement, taken from the bulletin reports of the Finance Committee:

Reply of Natural Mineral Water Company, of Soda Springs, Idaho, bottlers of mineral water.

[Established in 1885. Capital invested, $100,000.]

The annual amount of production is 500,000 quart bottles of the "Idanha" mineral water, or 10,000 cases; value at the works about $35,000.

We have been running about half time the last two years, owing to the hard times in our immediate section, caused especially by the fall in the price of silver.

We desire a specific duty of 4 cents per quart bottle and 2 cents per pint bottle, for the reason that we have to pay at an average of $2 per day to the workman, while similar labor in Germany is paid about 37½ cents per day, and for the additional reason that the glass, cork, wire, boxes, and wrappers are 100 per cent cheaper in that country than in ours; and still another reason is the fact that the freight rate down the Rhine to Rotterdam, thence to New York, is nominal, goods being partly carried as ballast, while our average rate of freight from Soda Springs to the centers of trade is at least $1 per case of 50 bottles.

I understand there is no rate of duty on the imported article, say Apollinaris, analogous to the "Idan-ha," though we claiming and can furnish undoubted proof of the Idan-ha being a natural water, while it is suspected strongly that the Apollinaris is charged with artificial carbonic-acid gas.

The wholesale price delivered at Missouri River points is $5 per case of 50 quarts; at Chicago, $5.25; at New York, Boston, New Orleans, and Memphis, $5.50; and at Soda Springs, $4 per case.

The competition has largely increased, especially in artificial or carbonated waters. We claim to have no competition as a natural mineral water.

I desire a specific duty to avoid the doctoring of invoices.

Our output is not so great as in 1892.

Wages remain the same as one year ago.

Heavy freight rates render living necessarily high at a point so far in the interior as is Soda Springs, Idaho, and $2 per day will not permit any extravagance; it will just support a man and his family; they should have more.

The price of living has slightly decreased the last four years, should say, about 10 per cent.

The scarcity of circulating medium, in our opinion, is cause of the present depression; the first great cause is the demonetization of the silver. My remedy is an international agreement to restore silver to its ancient place. Concurrent with this, if feasible, governmental control of all silver mines should be established, so as to limit the output.

"Glass, bottles, wires, corks, wrappers, and labels are our raw materials. Our goods are both luxuries and necessities—luxuries on account of their purity and exhilarating effects, necessities on account of their healthfulness.

"We pay an average of 10 per cent per annum on loans.

"Immigration causes increased consumption.

"Fifty per cent of our force is skilled labor.

"Reduction of duty on goods must be met either by going out of business or by having Congress enact such a law as I have alluded to.

"We employ 4 men and 4 boys, paying the men $75 per month and the boys from $25 to $45 per month. They work sixty hours per week.

"Foreign competing articles, called natural mineral waters, are imported in large quantities, on which the United States should collect revenue, as the article is produced in this country.

"There are none of our goods exported.

"The cost of manufacture remains about the same since 1883. It could be decreased by large output and the exclusion of foreign waters.

"Selling price has decreased since 1890.

"Directly at least one-half of agricultural products is consumed in our manufactures.

"We pay duty on corks, but I am not posted on the duty and I have no data at hand.

"Free raw material would assist to remove duty on bottles and corks.

"Wholesale price for 1890 was about $5 at the springs; and 1892, $4.

"We recommend a specific duty of 4 cents per quart and 2 cents per pint on all imported water.

I would recommend, in any event, that a law be enacted requiring artificial water to be labeled "artificially carbonated," for sanitary reasons. Artificial carbonic-acid gas is the result of a combination of sulphuric acid, marble dust, and bicarbonate of soda; hence, unhealthy and destructive to the lining of the stomach, as well as causing a deposit, resulting in gravel and kindred evils.

Such a law I would alone consider a protection to our "Idanha" water.

The annual consumption in this country of foreign mineral water is at least 50,000,000 quart bottles. Four cents per bottle would yield a revenue to the United States of $2,000,000.

Now, this mineral water is artificially charged, but is placed on the market as natural mineral water. It is bottled on the other side by little girls and boys, in bottles there manufactured, and cheaper than our bottles. After this it is landed on our shores at a nominal charge for freight, it being carried as ballast.

We bottle at Soda Springs, Idaho, from pure springs, carrying its own carbonic-acid gas, a water called the "Idanha," but we labor under this disadvantage: We pay white men's wages, and being so far in the interior, are paying to the railroads heavy freight charges to reach a market. We also pay heavy freight charges for the empty bottles which we fill, for the cases, for the corks, for the wire, for the machinery, and for the wrappers.

Now, sirs, how can we, under all the disadvantages here enumerated, make headway unless you afford us some protection. Nor must it be forgotten that the capital we employ is worth 8 to 10 per cent per annum, while money on the other side is worth but 4 to 5 per cent for industrial enterprises. It would therefore appear that ours is an industry to be fostered by imposing a duty on the imported article, thus benefiting the Treasury of the United States on one hand and a struggling domestic industry on the other.

I trust that the amendment I have offered will be accepted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 33, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Allen,	Frye,	McMillan,	Quay,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Carey,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oregon	Shoup,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Patton,	Squire,

NOT VOTING—16.

Aldrich,	Cameron,	McPherson,	Ransom,
Brice,	Gordon,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Butler,	Hale,	Pettigrew,	Wilson.
Camden,	Hoar,	Pugh,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHOUP. I desire to offer another amendment to paragraph 249. I trust the committee will accept it. I move to insert after the word "all," where it first appears in line 15, "natural mineral waters and all;" so as to read:

All natural mineral waters and all imitations of natural mineral waters, and all artificial mineral waters, 20 per cent ad valorem.

This does not change the rate at all, but merely inserts "natural mineral waters." I trust the Senator from Missouri will accept the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Paragraph 249, page 57, line 15, after the word "all," insert "natural mineral waters and all;" so as to read:

All natural mineral waters and all imitations of natural mineral waters and all artificial mineral waters, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to page 187, section 32, line 15. After "business expenses," I move to insert:

Including expenditures for materials used in manufacture, or bought for resale.

The amendment is substantially the same as that moved by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that, as the paragraph now stands, the words "actual operating and business expenses" are made to carry too heavy a burden. This is a very important and a very heavy tax. The closing clause at line 20 includes "all other corporations, companies, or associations doing business for profit in the United States," and sweeps in all the manufacturing companies and all the trading companies of the United States.

It is a great stretch of language in an important statute of this kind to make operating or business expenses include the expenditures for materials purchased by a manufacturing company and the goods purchased for resale by a trading company. Therefore, I think the Senator will see the wisdom of making deductions too plain to be disputed.

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest doubt that the language of the bill, as it now stands, would include the amounst expended for materials. I can not conceive how one could arrive at the profits of a manufacturing establishment unless he would take into account what they expend for materials. I have not any objection, however, to the amendment, because, as it stands, it means what the Senator from New Hampshire has put in additional words.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "expenses," in line 15, section 32, page 187, insert:

Including expenses for materials purchased for manufacture or bought for resale.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments to be proposed in the Senate, the question is on ordering the amendments to be engrossed, and the bill be read a third time.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in the course of previous remarks which I made upon this question I pledged to my constituents my utmost endeavors to "eliminate the socialistic income tax," to "readjust the schedules to conform with the doctrine of a tariff for revenue," to "grant to our industries sufficient protection to guarantee their maintenance on the basis of American wages," and finally to fulfill "the distinct obligation of the Democratic party to confer the boon of tariff reform upon the American people."

That pledge, sir, I have kept to the full limit of my ability and opportunity. My only regret at this time is that the small minority of Senators on this side of the Chamber who oppose the income tax have been unable to convince our colleagues of the public and party wisdom of striking it out altogether from the bill. Even then, if Republican Senators had not voted for this scheme it would have been blotted out of existence. But I can not deny that Democratic Senators who favor the idea have met us in a spirit of fairness and reason.

They have consented to the exemption of building and loan associations, mutual life insurance associations, savings banks, and other organizations of like character in which are invested the savings of the poor. They have eliminated the hateful inquisitorial features. And finally and most important of all they have agreed to the passage of this amendment in such shape that it shall be submitted to the people upon its practical operations, not as a settled policy of the Government, but as an experiment to be tried for a short time and then renewed or rejected as the country shall elect.

Mr. President, of all methods of taxation I consider this the most detestable. I expressed before and repeat now with double emphasis my earnest conviction that it is unnecessary, unjust, unsuccessful, unpopular, un-Democratic, un-American, and unwise. I never could conscientiously and never would for any reason whatsoever vote to incorporate it into our system for an indefinite period of time. I did and shall at every opportunity in the future vote against it as a separate proposition.

But, sir, the astonishing strength and persistence shown by the advocates of the idea make it certain to my mind that there is only one way of escape, and that is by a trial. The sole practical question now before us who oppose this scheme is whether it shall be submitted to the judgment of the people in its greatly modified condition, as it now stands, or whether it shall be foisted upon us at a very early day in a far more offensive form and without limit to its time of operation.

That, sir, is the situation which we are obliged to face, and of the two evils I am constrained to choose the lesser. I will go yet further, and say that, if there were no party considerations, I should welcome the test. I can not insult the intelligence of the American people by even suspecting that they will endure this odious infliction one moment longer than shall be required to demonstrate its manifold iniquities.

For all except this portion of the measure before us I shall vote, not simply without reluctance, but with genuine satisfaction. I have the honor, Mr. President, to be one of those Senators who have been accused of demanding fair treatment of American industries. I have been urged over and over again to deny the truth of this charge. But, sir, I do not deny it. I admit it frankly and squarely. Of whatever crime may be involved in the defense and reasonable protection under a revenue tariff of the industries of this country, I am guilty. I said before and I repeat now that the Democratic party never was a free-trade party, is not to-day, and in my judgment never will be.

I grant that under other circumstances greater reductions might and probably would be advisable. But I am unable to see the wisdom or justice of such action at this time. The great industries of this country have just passed through one of the most trying periods since they sprang into existence. I shall not enter into a discussion of the causes of the lamentable depression of business which has continued now for more than a year. Only partisan purpose can be served by attributing it to either the baneful effect of McKinley duties or the uncertainty regarding the future undoubtedly felt by all manufactures.

It is sufficient to know that distrust and apprehension still prevail, that thousands of factories are closed, and that hundreds of thousands of workingmen are deprived of employment necessary to their subsistence. Under such circumstances I can conceive of no legislative action more illiberal, more untimely, or more cruel than that which would hinder for a day resumption of prosperity. In any event, right or wrong, Democratic or un-Democratic, as a representative of one of the chief manufacturing States of the Union I say plainly that I will not vote for any bill or amendment that will make it impossible for a single industry to continue or resume operations.

It was for that reason—and I make the admission without hesitation, and with full appreciation of the criticism which it will evoke—that in conference with my colleagues I opposed the provisions of both the House bill and the measure first substituted by the Finance Committee. The revised bill now before us I consider just and fair to all. It is Democratic, because it is based upon the principle of a tariff for revenue with incidental protection, and it is wise and patriotic, because, instead of adding to the burdens inflicted upon our industries by the financial difficulties of the past year, it helps and strengthens them, and can have no other effect than the quick revival of business universally desired, and the consequent employment, prosperity, and happiness of the great army of men now idle, discontented, and discouraged.

I shall vote for this measure, Mr. President, because, in the words of the distinguished Senator from New York, I am a Democrat. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I propose to vote for the passage of this bill, not because I approve of its sugar schedule, but because I think it is due to the country that it should be placed in the hands of a conference committee, composed of Senators and Representatives, who, I hope, will trim it of its evil and retain its beneficial features.

The bill as a whole is more equitable and just than the McKinley act. It lessens the burden of taxation on the poor people of this country, on their woolen clothing, on their lumber, and on other necessary articles of daily consumption, and places it, in a large measure, upon the enormous incomes of those who have escaped taxation and bearing their portion of the public burden for many years.

The sugar schedule of this bill is its vicious feature, although it is not so vicious as the sugar schedule of the McKinley act. Under the McKinley act the sugar trust obtains 60 cents protection on every hundred pounds of refined sugar and by that means controls the American market. By the bill in question the sugar trust has a protection of 25 cents per hundred pounds of sugar, 35 cents less than under the McKinley act. The sugar schedule of this bill is better than that of the McKinley act in the ratio of 25 to 60.

I do not believe that it is my duty to vote against this bill at this time, but as a patriotic citizen and a conscientious officer, I believe that I should vote for its passage in the Senate now, so that it may be sent back to the House of Representatives, where it originated, and placed by the Senate and House jointly in a conference committee, where there may be one more opportunity afforded of eliminating its evil features and fashioning it into proper shape to become a law of the land.

The people want reform in taxation. They are demanding it. They have a right to it, and it is my duty to place this bill, by my vote if I can, in a committee where its evil features may be taken out, and from which it may be returned to the respective Houses of Congress for final passage after it has been properly fashioned.

Two courses are open to us. First, either to destroy the entire bill at this time and place, and by that means defeat reform legislation in our system of national taxation entirely, and then begin anew where we began seven months ago on the subject of the tariff, and thus delay needed reform; or, second, to vote for the passage of the bill now and by that means place it in the hands of a conference committee where one more, and possibly a successful, attempt may be made to eliminate its vicious features and hasten the hour of relief to the country.

These are the two courses open to us. I believe the latter to be the wiser and more patriotic course to be pursued, and although I enter my protest against the sugar schedule, I at the same time assert that it is better than the sugar schedule of the McKinley act.

No one desires to see this bill destroyed entirely more than the sugar trust. They would rejoice at its complete destruction, because under the present law they are enabled to make more money by many millions of dollars yearly than they will be under this bill if it shall become a law.

There are those in my own party who will not approve of my vote, who will think that I ought by my vote to assist in the complete destruction of this measure at this time; but time and a more intimate knowledge of the facts will convince them of the correctness of my position. Singular as it may appear, they and the sugar trust desire the same result.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, as explanations seem to be the order——

Mr. FRYE. They are obituary speeches, not explanations.

Mr. HILL. I accept the amendment.

Mr. President, the majority of the Democratic Senators of this body (of which thirty-one are from the South), allied with the three Populists and with six Republicans, have insisted upon the retention of an income tax in the pending measure.

I have earnestly appealed to my party friends to eliminate this objectionable feature, but my appeals have been in vain.

I have warned them of the dangers to which in my judgment they were unnecessarily subjecting the Democratic party; but they have chosen to disregard them, as was their privilege.

They have preferred the retention of an odious income tax in a tariff bill, regardless of what the consequences may be.

Mr. President, the course which has thus been marked out is unwise, inexcusable, and unnecessary.

It resembles the greater folly of thirty-three years ago, when the Democratic party was rent in twain and Republicanism triumphed for twenty-four years thereafter.

In my opinion, it imperils the possibility of permanent Democratic success in any Northern State for many years to come.

You array against us in almost solid front the entire business men of the country. You foist upon the party a principle of taxation never sanctioned by any Democratic national convention. You do not seem to realize that you have no jurisdiction to add to or change the principles of our party, but you disregard precedent in your mad haste to adopt a Populistic principle. You have purposely and obstinately insisted upon retaining an income tax in this bill, so as to compel Democratic Senators either to vote for the income tax or to vote against the whole bill. You have left them no other alternative.

This was unfair, unjust, impolitic.

This course was adopted, not thoughtlessly, but designedly; not that you loved tariff reform less, but you loved an income tax more. Mr. President, as between a Populistic income tax on the one hand and a Republican tariff law on the other, I choose the latter as the lesser of two evils.

As between pernicious class legislation fraught with dangerous consequences to the country on the one hand, and simply high tariff taxation on the other, I prefer to endure the latter—at least for a brief period, if I am compelled to choose between them. I do this, not without some reluctance, because I always regret to differ with party friends, but the consciousness of right and my own self-respect forbid any other course. Besides, you have made my path of duty an easy one.

The Senate bill—the Gorman compromise bill, as it is now generally known in the press and throughout the country—I mean the bill in its present shape, is neither satisfactory to the Democratic party nor to the country. There is no mistaking public sentiment upon this point.

The true principles of tariff reform have been sacrificed in the effort to insure the retention of an income tax. This the country believes—this the country understands. We promised the people bread and we are giving them a stone. We promised them free raw materials, and we are giving them taxed coal, taxed iron ore, taxed coke, taxed lead ore, and other taxed raw materials.

They expected free sugar, but we are taxing not only that article, but other necessaries of life.

We do not need both a sugar tax and an income tax, but it seems that considerations other than those of revenues to the Treasury have dictated and retained both.

The provisions of the bill are not consistent; they violate well-established Democratic principles; they are unfair in their discriminations, and their enactment will place the party in a false and untenable position.

It is clear that the bill in its present form should be changed, modified, and improved. This can easily be done, and it is our duty to do it now before it is too late. As it now stands it puts our party on the defensive, it repudiates our pledges, it exposes us to just criticism and ridicule, which ought to be avoided. Eliminate the income tax and there is no difficulty in framing an honest, consistent, and genuine tariff bill upon strict revenue lines, with all raw materials free, which can be passed by the vote of every Democratic Senator without the aid of a single Populist vote, and which the country would welcome and approve.

This is not even pretended to be such a measure. Numerous Senators around the Democratic side of this Chamber must feel as though Democratic principles have been surrendered or bartered away to secure the triumph of this botched compromise measure, which is really acceptable to no one. I am sure that if they expressed their honest sentiments they do not approve this bill any more than I do. The issue of tariff reform had better be postponed and preserved intact, rather than emasculated, disfigured, and despoiled in the manner now proposed.

Let there be a genuine, sincere, and essential triumph for the cause of revenue revision or none at all.

If Republican protection was a fraud and a robbery, as we declared in the Chicago platform, is Democratic protection any the less so?

If we are to have an income tax and a sugar tax both, then—unless the other provisions of the bill prove utterly impotent—we shall be met with an enormous surplus, against which we protested so vigorously a few years ago; and is it now to be said that a Democratic surplus is less objectionable than a Republican surplus?

This is not a Democratic bill, I am sure; it is not a distinctly Republican bill; it is not a Populist bill entire, but it is a mixture of all—it is a rag-bag production—it is a crazy-quilt combination—it is a splendid nothing.

I believe the income tax feature as a whole and in many of its details to be unconstitutional.

But why detain the Senate?

My objections to the bill have been stated over and over again and it is useless to repeat them.

Each Senator must be the judge of his own duty to his country and his party in a crisis like this. I cast no reflections upon those who differ with me.

This bill does not meet the public expectations, but at best is an empty and beggarly fulfillment of Democratic pledges.

It does those things which it ought not to do, and leaves undone those things which it ought to do.

Mr. President, I do not fail to appreciate the gravity of the situation, but the course which duty and consistency require me to pursue at this hour is as clear to me as the noonday sun.

"Sink or swim, live or die, survive or perish," I can not and will not support this bill in its present shape.

[Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that the rules of the Senate are enforced in regard to demonstrations in the galleries.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, no Senator sitting upon this side of the aisle has any apology to make for voting against the pending bill. The country will note that no Senator upon the other side has risen in defense of the measure as a wise and patriotic enactment. It will note the kind of excuses which have been made in two or three instances for the support of the measure.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, there is no excuse for the passage of the pending bill. The only reason which I have heard assigned for its passage has been the desire to reduce taxation in order that the people might be benefited by the reduction of taxation. There is no way in which the people can be benefited by the reduction of duties upon imports unless that reduction results in lower prices to the consumers of the necessaries of life.

In connection with the passage of the bill, I wish to make only two predictions. One is that the price of the necessaries of life will not be reduced. Let a list be made of the prices of the necessaries of life in this country on the date of the passage of the bill, and I predict that they will go no lower as the result of the passage of the bill, and two years from now they will be no lower.

I predict also that the result of the passage of the bill will be the reduction of the wages of American workingmen. Let a list be made upon the date of the passage of the bill of the wages of American workingmen in all the walks of life, and two years from now those wages will be lower than they are at the date of the passage of the bill.

So, Mr. President, because the bill will not reduce the cost of the necessaries of life to any citizen, and because it will reduce the wages of labor to the American workingmen, I repeat, there is no excuse whatever for its passage.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, I have prepared a written speech, in fact it is in print, and it is fully explanatory of the vote I shall cast on the pending bill. It is to be found in this document, House bill 4864. It will shortly be illustrated copiously, and with pictures that will be in the nature of object lessons to the American people.

This written speech, which has been upon our desks for many days, contains within it abundant argument to justify the vote which I shall cast against the bill. It is neither fish, flesh, nor fowl as a tariff bill, foul as it is in many of its features. It is a blow at some of the best and most valuable interests of this country. It is a record of dishonesty and breach of faith on the part of the Government of the United States. It will be pictured by the closing of factories and mills.

One of the object lessons that will stand out prominently before the people of the West will be the closing of the sugar factories which have promised so much to the American people, the creation of no more, and a distress to which the present distressed condition is as nothing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PLATT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. QUAY (when Mr. CAMERON'S name was called). I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when Mr. HOAR'S name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. HOAR] was called from the Senate early to-day by illness. He stands paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PETTIGREW (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). As has been announced, I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAFFERY (after having voted in the negative). Mr. President, I desire to say only a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order except by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Louisiana will proceed.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, I cast the vote I did to enter a protest against what I conceive has been an injustice to my people and to my State. I cast that vote as a protest against what I consider to be the unjustifiable action of my own side of the Chamber in going back upon a plan of action which they had deliberately adopted. Having made the protest, I change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, I ask permission for one moment of debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. TELLER. I object to any debate pending the roll call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, under the circumstances I vote "nay." [Laughter.]

Mr. TELLER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE]. If my colleague had been present he would have voted "nay."

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. WILSON] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRICE. I expected the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to add that the junior Senator from Ohio would have voted "yea" if the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] had been present. I make that statement.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GORDON] is paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. I desire to announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If the Senator from South Carolina were present he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 34; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask a conference with the House of Representatives upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair appoint seven managers of the conference on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to make my protest against asking for a committee of conference when there are no disagreeing votes. I know it has been the custom to call for such conferences, and at times the other House has agreed to them; but the bill was passed by the other House, and has now been amended and passed by the Senate, and no Senator can know at this moment whether the other House may not agree to every amendment we have made.

I do not expect that my protest will be of avail, but I think it is a vicious practice, which ought not to be adopted on a bill of such great detail and of such great importance.

Mr. HARRIS. Some ten years ago this precise question was presented to the Senate. I did not, as the Senator from Iowa has done to-night, make my protest, but I raised the question of order. I was overruled by the Chair, when the then Senator from Vermont, Mr. Edmunds, was President pro tempore of the Senate, and being overruled, I appealed to the Senate.

The Senate sustained the ruling of the Chair, and since that time it has been the uniform custom of the Senate. I adhere to the motion notwithstanding the protest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, the Chair appoints as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. VOORHEES, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. VEST, Mr. JONES of Arkansas, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m., Tuesday, July 3, 1894) the Senate adjourned until Friday, July 6, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 5, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last was read and approved.

BRAZILIAN CONGRATULATIONS ON NATIONAL ANNIVERSARY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following:

RIO, July 4, 1894.

To American Chamber of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Brazilian Chamber of Deputies congratulates the American National Congress on this memorable and glorious day, expressing their feelings of deep sympathy towards the great and patriotic people they represent northwards the democratic continent.

ROSA E. SILVA, Speaker.
THOMAS DELFINO, Secretary.

[Loud applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. EVERETT, for one week, on account of health.

To Mr. BANKHEAD, indefinitely.

To Mr. BUNN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a personal statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia desires to make a personal statement. The House will be in order.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in one of the morning papers it is stated——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I suggest whether the machinery operating these electric fans should not be stopped. We can not hear what the gentleman from Georgia says.

The SPEAKER. The fans have been put in by order of the House. If it is found that they interfere with the transaction of business, some action will have to be taken on that subject.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Is the noise of the machinery a part of the order of the House?

The SPEAKER. The House adopted a resolution directing the Architect to put electric fans in the Hall.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the gentleman from Illinois ought not to complain. I presume this is the "hum of industry" following the passage of the tariff bill in the Senate.

Mr. REED. It is the only "industry" that is prosperous in this country.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. We can not hear the remarks of the gentleman on account of the noise.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. I wish gentlemen would allow me to proceed.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I suggest that an order be issued to stop the movement of these fans for the present. We can not hear anything that is going on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia will suspend his remarks for a moment.

[A pause, during which the electric fans were stopped.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] rises to make a personal statement. The House will please be in order.

Mr. TURNER of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in one of the morning papers it is stated that I have recently made a speech in Georgia in which I am reported to have said to my audience that "the tariff bill as amended in the Senate is practically the same as the Wilson bill 'with some immaterial changes.'" As I value the good opinion of those who know me on this floor, I wish to say that I not only never made that statement, but I never entertained that opinion; and on the occasion mentioned, I stated just the opposite. [Applause.]

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PENDLETON of Texas. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the desk. Before it is read, I wish to say that it is a bill to grant right of way for a railroad through the Indian Territory. It has been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is in the usual form, and contains all the ordinary limitations for the protection of the Indians. I have compared it with twelve or fifteen bills of similar character.

The bill (H. R. 7335) to grant to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was read.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed for the third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PENDLETON of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EMPLOYÉS OF NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 201) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to continue the employment of certain mechanics and laborers.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to continue, until the 31st day of July, 1894, the employment of mechanics and laborers paid from the appropriation "Increase of the Navy: Construction and machinery," whose services are required upon work in progress; and a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for this purpose, such sum to be immediately available: Provided, That the amount which may be expended by the Secretary of the Navy under the authority herein conferred shall be deducted from the amount which may be appropriated for "Increase of the Navy: Construction and machinery," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief statement to the House in reference to this resolution.

When the joint resolution which I was instructed to present to the House some ten or fifteen days ago was passed, it was considered broad enough to cover every Department of the Government and every branch of the service in its entirety; in fact, it was but a duplicate of all resolutions for a similar purpose that have been passed by Congress during the last ten or fifteen years.

But it seems that a question has arisen in the Navy Department as to the construction of the resolution itself, with reference to the increase of the Navy; and we are informed that the Secretary of the Navy has thought otherwise, and has consequently ordered the discharge of several hundred workmen at the different navy-yards of the Government. I have offered the pending resolution after consultation with several gentlemen, and ask its passage.

I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] if he desires to occupy the floor.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I should like to have the attention of the House for a few moments, and thank the gentleman for yielding.

But before I proceed, I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas if he has any communication from the Secretary of the Navy on this subject?

Mr. SAYERS. The only communication which I have from the Secretary of the Navy I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT Washington, July 3, 1894.

SIR: I learned from Senator MCPHERSON this morning that the question of including in the thirty-day resolution the expenditures for carrying on the work of the new Navy was discussed in your committee yesterday, and that your committee thought the resolution broad enough to cover these expenditures. I desire to inform you before issuing the order suspending the laborers and mechanics employed under "Increase of the Navy," I consulted with the Attorney-General, and he concurred in the construction I put upon the resolution. To save all question in the case, I hope the House will pass a resolution covering these expenditures. I communicated with the Committee on Naval Affairs, because it has charge of naval appropriations.

Respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced this resolution, having been informed that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs was absent in New York and would probably not return before this evening. It is important that the resolution should pass to-day.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman from Texas before proceeding a question with reference to the resolution which was reported to the House by him which continued the appropriations for the present fiscal year to the new fiscal year. He has already stated that it was similar in form and substance——

Mr. SAYERS. Almost word for word.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois (continuing). To the resolutions that have been passed year by year for the same purpose?

Mr. SAYERS. That is so.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman if it is also true that the matter was submitted to the Treasury Department?

Mr. SAYERS. It was. The resolution was sent to the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Sent to the Treasury, and submitted to the proper officials, the chief of warrants and estimates and the Comptroller?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And it was believed to be sufficient there to accomplish the purpose that it was designed to accomplish?

Mr. SAYERS. It was.

I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that no one was more surprised than myself at the construction put upon it by the Navy Department.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, I want to say—having had the statement we have from the gentleman from Texas—that I shall vote for the proposed resolution introduced by him. But, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House for just a moment——

Mr. LOUD. And the country.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes; the gentleman from California says and the country, for a portion of it at least is interested in a correct construction of the act, and especially those persons who have been dropped on account of the alleged failure of Congress to appropriate, and the public service is presumably suffering somewhat from a cessation of the labor in the construction of the new Navy by the discharge of mechanics and others—I say in this connection I want to call attention to the joint resolution itself, which I hold in my hand:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives——

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman from Illinois refers now to the former resolution?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes; the one passed a few days ago, and enacted—

That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government, under existing laws are hereby continued and made available for a period of thirty days, and a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated, etc.

It will be seen that this specifies "all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under existing laws." The laws have been passed authorizing the construction of the new Navy, upon which these thousands of workmen have been engaged and ought still to be engaged.

I suppose it is a "necessary operation of the Government" to continue that work. It has been always so held in similar appropriations. Now, then, it may be replied that an appropriation for the construction of the Navy is a continuing appropriation. That is true. That is to say, while in terms it is an appropriation for, say, the fiscal year 1894 or 1895, as the case may be, yet if there is anything left of it at the close of 1894 it would continue over without further action of Congress until expended. But that is true of the pay of the Navy. That is a continuing appropriation. I undertake to say, therefore, that under this construction of the law by the Secretary of the Navy, there is not an officer of the Navy that can receive pay for July under the joint resolution.

Mr. COOMBS. Will the gentleman give way for a moment?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will for a question.

Mr. COOMBS. I simply wish to make the statement to you that the Secretary of the Navy gave me—that is to say, that before taking this step he had laid the resolution before the Attorney-General, and he concurred in his doubts as to whether the resolution as passed would meet the present requirements.

It was undoubtedly, as the gentleman of course understands, the intention of the House and Congress to continue the work of construction at the different navy-yards, and nobody contemplated or supposed for a moment that it would not be covered by the resolution. The Secretary had some doubt on that point, however, and laid it before the Attorney-General, and on receiving confirmation from him, he thought it would be a safer course to ask Congress to amend the resolution in this respect. I believe myself, as the gentleman does, that the former resolution was sufficient.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am merely calling attention to the fact that if this law that we passed extending the appropriations is not sufficient to continue this work without the enactment of this resolution, then in many cases where the appropriations are construed to be continuing appropriations there is no authority in law to continue the public service. You can not pay an official of the Navy under this general act if the construction of the Secretary is correct; and if you are to disregard the construction of laws similar to this that have been enacted for twenty years at least, that you may meet a new-born doubt of a Secretary of the Navy, then you will find this trouble all along the line, and the gentleman's resolution is not broad enough.

All I wanted to do was to call attention to the existing conditions. I will state again that it seems to me, in the light of constructions heretofore made for the last twenty years and upon reading this act itself, that there can be no well-grounded doubt to a sound constructionist but that the resolution is ample to cover the case. Yet these thousands of men have been discharged and the work has come to a standstill.

Now, I want to suggest that if there was one-tenth part as much liberality in construing this appropriation that we made by this general act extending the appropriations as there is in the liberal construction that has been given in the Treasury Department to important legislation, these thousands of men would not have been dropped from the rolls, and the delay of the work in the construction of the new Navy would not have taken place.

Mr. REED. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I have not control of the time, but no doubt the gentleman from Texas will yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. SAYERS. I will yield, of course. I wish the gentleman from Illinois would please have that original resolution published in connection with his remarks.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to seem to differ with my friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], because his judgment and good sense are such that it makes a difference with him rather bad for the person who differs. And yet I feel that he has omitted one consideration of a general and very penetrating nature. What is called the policy of an Administration is pretty sure to permeate in time through all the officials. Whatever the Administration desires in some way or other gets possession of official minds, and therefore I think that these persons who have had these doubts which have resulted in the discharge of thousands of workingmen have really been penetrated with the policy of the Administration.

Insensibly to them the feeling has got among them that every doubt should be resolved in favor of the policy of the Administration. Well, now, what more natural construction could be made than that men should be discharged and industries destroyed? All private industries have been stopped by the policy of the Administration. Why should not the public industries be stopped? Workingmen have been thrown out of employment everywhere else; why not in the Government employ? I must say that I think those gentlemen who have construed the policy of the Administration have acted up to the spirit of it, and I am quite sure my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] would not think of blaming them for acting in a manner so entirely consistent with the whole principle of the party, the policy of which they very naturally represent.

For my part I am very desirous of overturning that policy, and I am very glad to begin right here and now, and to resolve all doubt in favor of the employment of men, hoping that the Administration may have received a sufficient lesson, so that they will not take advantage of the doubts suggested by my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and stop some other industry. And yet there is grave danger that they may. So that this resolution, while it may restore to employment thousands of men, may enable the Administration to carry out this magnificent policy in other fields of ceasing effort. It is a great spectacle when the Government of the United States adds to the army of the unemployed, already sufficient in this country! [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, asking for the passage of the resolution, would seem to me to be a sufficient answer to the gentleman from Maine, and to show that there is no disposition on the part of the Administration to unnecessarily and improperly discharge workmen from the service of the Government.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. While that is true, if my friend will allow me——

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. We all will vote for the resolution the gentleman offers, because if the Executive should find a fly-speck on a resolution, and say that that created a doubt, if it stopped the wheels of the Government, however foolish that construction might be, I would come in and vote with my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] to solemnly remove the fly-speck.

Mr. REED. Why not put in a proviso that nothing in this resolution shall be construed to close any other public works? Perhaps that might curb the Administration in its policy. I suggest that to the gentleman from Texas, whom I know does not sympathize with the Administration in the destruction of industries.

Mr. SAYERS. I call for a vote on the resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SAYERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I call for the regular order.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (S. 578) granting an increase of pension to Wells Johnson; when the Speaker signed the same.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SOMERS, for ten days, on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports. The Clerk will call the committees.

NICARAGUA CANAL.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported the bill H. R. 7639 as a substitute for the bills H. R. 6058, 6682, 6853, and 7108, respectively, to amend the act entitled, "An act to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," approved February 20, 1889; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The original bills will lie on the table.

No further reports were submitted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of committees for reports. The morning hour begins at fifteen minutes to 1 o'clock, and the call rests with the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. The Clerk will report the title of the bill which was under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7020) to readjust the salaries and allowances of the postmasters at Guthrie, Oklahoma City, and Kingfisher in Oklahoma Territory.

The SPEAKER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee in the chair.

SALARIES AND ALLOWANCES OF POSTMASTERS AT GUTHRIE, OKLAHOMA CITY, AND KINGFISHER.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The title of the bill was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. When this bill was last under consideration an amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] was pending, that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out, and upon that motion the committee was dividing. The Chair had appointed the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] as tellers. These gentlemen will again take their places as tellers. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The committee divided; and tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 122.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion made by the gentleman from North Carolina, that the bill be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7020, and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the yeas and nays on that, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON].

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 61, answered "present," 1, not voting 156; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. GROUT.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. MORSE.

Mr. TURPIN with Mr. DRAPER.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois with Mr. CURTIS of New York.

Mr. RAYNER with Mr. GROW.

Mr. BUNN with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. BANKHEAD with Mr. MILLIKEN.

Mr. LAWSON with Mr. WILSON of Washington.

Mr. ENLOE with Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts with Mr. COGSWELL.

Mr. WHITING with Mr. LACEY.

Mr. MONTGOMERY with Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois.

Mr. SOMERS with Mr. MARVIN of New York.

Mr. ELLIS of Kentucky with Mr. SCRANTON.

Mr. NEILL of Arkansas with Mr. CHILDS.

Mr. SCHERMERHORN with Mr. BELDEN.

Mr. FORMAN with Mr. WHEELER of Illinois.

Mr. HAINES with Mr. HARTMAN.

Mr. SICKLES with Mr. DANIELS.

Mr. OATES with Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. COOPER of Texas with Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts.

Mr. BARNES with Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota.

Mr. STRAUS with Mr. QUIGG.

Mr. STOCKDALE with Mr. AVERY.

Mr. GOODNIGHT with Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMPBELL with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER with Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania.

The following for this day:

Mr. MADDOX with Mr. MARVIN of New York.

Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia with Mr. STORER.

Mr. LIVINGSTON with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.

Mr. IKIRT with Mr. HULL.

Mr. MCETTRICK with Mr. POST.

Mr. BRANCH with Mr. ALDRICH.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia with Mr. LUCAS.

Mr. SIPE with Mr. WALKER.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama with Mr. PHILLIPS.

Mr. MUTCHLER with Mr. WADSWORTH.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I have voted, but as I understand that a quorum has voted, and, being paired, I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, since voting I remember that I am paired, and I prefer to answer "present."

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I observe that I am still paired with my colleague, Mr. STRAUS. Having voted inadvertently, I now withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the morning hour be now considered as closed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. COX, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. VOORHEES, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. VEST, Mr. JONES of Arkansas, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. ALDRICH. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

TAXATION OF UNITED STATES LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

Mr. HALL of Missouri, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 4326) to permit taxation of United States legal-tender notes, and called up the bill for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, under the privilege of the Committee on Banking and Currency, calls up this bill for consideration.

The bill was read, as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That no United States legal-tender notes circulating as currency shall be exempt from taxation under the authority of any State or Territory: Provided, That any such taxation shall be exercised in the same manner and at the same rate that any such State or Territory shall tax other money within its jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall not be deemed or held to change existing laws in respect of the taxation of national banking associations.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. I call for the reading of the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. That can be read only by unanimous consent as a part of some gentleman's remarks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, can the question of consideration be raised upon this bill at this time?

The SPEAKER. It can.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Then I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is not the bill in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. No; it has just been reported. The gentleman from Ohio raises the question of consideration on this bill, and the question is, Will the House proceed to consider the bill?

The question being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I will state to the House the nature of this bill——

Mr. BROSIUS. One moment. Mr. Speaker, is this bill to be considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I do not understand——

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, this bill authorizes the States and Territories to tax Federal obligations. I wish to make the parliamentary inquiry whether our rules do not require that such a bill should be considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not looked into the question. He will ask the gentleman whether there is any rule applicable to the point?

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I make the point that this is not a question of Federal taxation. The proposition is simply to permit the States and Territories to tax, not national obligations, but Treasury notes.

Mr. McMILLIN. In response to the point of order of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I suggest that the discussion of the bill had already begun and it was too late to make the point of order.

Mr. BROSIUS. I do not think so.

Mr. COOMBS. The point had been raised before.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see that the rule covers this case. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania looked into the question?

Mr. BROSIUS. I have not examined it carefully; but it occurred to me that if an act imposing a tax by Federal authority would have to be considered in Committee of the Whole an act delegating that power of taxation to any other body should likewise be considered in Committee of the Whole. This bill delegates the taxing power in this respect to States and Territories. I confess this is a new inquiry to me; and I do not feel sure on the point.

The SPEAKER (after examining the rule). The Chair does not think that the rule requires the consideration of this bill in Committee of the Whole. The Chair does not understand that the bill is one which within the meaning of the rule imposes a tax or charge upon the people.

Mr. BROSIUS. Well, I am not clear that it does.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] will proceed.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. The question involved in this bill is not a question of the taxation of a national obligation within the general meaning of that term. As we understand, national obligations, such as the States are inhibited from taxing, are those which are in the nature of investments——

Mr. HOLMAN. Public securities.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Public securities bearing interest, in which men make their investments, as they would in any other kind or class of property, for profit.

In the law creating greenbacks or Treasury notes there was an express provision that they should not be subject to State or municipal taxation. In my view it was unnecessary that such an inhibition should have been inserted, for the reason that the States have no power to tax the money issued by the Federal Government in the form of promises to pay unless with the express consent of the National Government. But although that clause inhibiting the taxation of Treasury notes by States or municipalities was really unnecessary, it was inserted. The reason, however, which influenced the insertion has long since ceased to exist.

When the act was passed creating the national banks and imposing 10 per cent upon the State bank circulation, thereby abolishing State circulation, there was a feeling in Congress, as the debates of that time show, that the States would in consequence of the national legislation indulge a feeling of bitterness against the greenbacks, which would induce them to try to tax those notes out of existence. Hence out of extraordinary caution, without any necessity for such action, a provision was adopted exempting the greenbacks from taxation.

Now, I make this statement, that the Treasury note is the only form of money circulating in the United States to-day that is not taxed by States and municipalities.

Mr. BROSIUS. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I make an inquiry at this point?

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Not at all.

Mr. BROSIUS. I would like to know whether the gentleman can refer me to a case in which the point just stated by him has been ruled.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. It has been decided by every court that has passed on the question, save the supreme court of Mississippi, that the States and municipalities have the right to tax national-bank notes and all other forms of money except Treasury notes.

Mr. BROSIUS. Well, that information is very general. Can my friend cite a case in which the question has been ruled?

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I can not cite special cases while on this floor, but I will state that in all the States that tax money it is the custom to tax national-bank notes and other forms of money. There is no question about the existence of the power. But I do not know of any case in the Supreme Court of the United States where the question has been passed upon.

Mr. BROSIUS. May I just add at this point that I have been unable to find anybody, on inquiry, who is aware of the existence of any case that he can point to as a ruling on this point?

But now I wish to make another inquiry of the gentleman, if he will permit me, whether the Treasury notes under the Sherman act are taxed by any State?

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Most certainly, yes. The words "Treasury note" are used in this bill, let me say to the gentleman, for the purpose of covering that point. I have just said a few moments ago that that is the only form of money that is not taxable; that is to say, the Treasury note.

Mr. BROSIUS. Does the bill apply to Treasury notes—I mean issued under the act of 1890?

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Yes, sir. The bill is intended to cover that point.

I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, what I have already said in the beginning of my remarks, that this is the only form of money that is not taxable by States or municipalities; that if a man invests in national-bank notes, or in gold or silver, or any other form of property, such investments are subject to assessment for State and municipal taxes.

Now, I desire to say to gentlemen on the other side that this question did not assume in committee, and I do not think it will assume here, a partisan aspect.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman permit me a moment to call his attention to the reported bill? The whole question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is solved by the report which refers to—

All circulating notes of national banking associations and all United States legal-tender notes, etc.

So the whole case is covered by that.

Mr. HOLMAN The first class was always subject to taxation.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. The question, Mr. Speaker, as I was st ting, has nothing of partisan politics about it. It is merely a business question. The sole question is whether the United States Government is to act the part of a partial parent and take up and designate one particular class of property in the shape of money and say it is not to be subject to State or municipal taxation, but that all other property is to be.

Now, what is the effect of it? While nominally there are three hundred and forty-six millions of greenbacks in existence—or probably three hundred and thirty millions—nearly two hundred millions of that sum is held by the national banks as a reserve fund. It is not in circulation. It is driven out of circulation. Instead of helping to form a part of the circulating medium of the country, it is hoarded, locked up, and driven out of circulation.

It has been stated that these are national obligations, issued by the Government of the United States and under the constitutional authority of the Government, which Constitution inhibits the States from impairing the obligations of the contract. I wish to state in response that there is no clause in the Constitution of the United States which inhibits the United States Government from impairing the obligation of its own contracts; but in that connection let me say, that I would never vote for such a measure, for we have a higher and a broader ground on which to base our action, and that is the good faith of the National Government.

But many seem to have the idea in regard to this question that there is something in the Constitution that prevents the National Government from taxing to-day money or other obligations that it did not tax at another time. There is no such provision in the Constitution of the United States. That, however, is not the question here, but simply whether the National Government shall permit the States to tax this form of money as they tax all other forms, or whether the Government of the United States is, as I said before, to act the part of a partial parent to permit certain privileges to be extended to one form of money that is not extended to all other forms.

Now, what is the effect of the present condition? You can find the effect in every county, State, and municipal assessment made throughout the whole United States, and even the Supreme Court of the United States has examined the case, in 91 United States Reports in the Leavenworth case, where we find this state of facts: A man with a little over $19,000 in currency in one of the banks the day before the assessor came made his check out for his $19,000, and asks that it be paid him in greenbacks. It is handed to him, and he puts it in an envelope and makes a special deposit of the same. The assessor comes the next day and the holder of the $19,000 of greenbacks says, "I have no money that is subject to State or municipal taxation." This is simply used as a cloak, a stalking horse, a shield, to cover the men who desire to make fraudulent returns of their property for assessment purposes; and the Government of the United States, by letting this law remain on the statute books, becomes particeps criminis to that proceeding.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Before asking the question, let me suggest that I am not prepared to say that I antagonize the purposes of this bill. But the gentleman has made an illustration in the case of a man having $19,000 in the bank, as I understand it, who comes to the bank, as he had the right do, and handed in his check for that money. He took his money in Treasury notes, put them in an envelope and made a special deposit of the amount, say on April 1, or whatever day it was, and when the assessor came he answered that he had $19,000 in greenbacks not subject to taxation. Then, I suppose—the gentleman did not say, but I suppose—he did not keep the greenbacks for a year, but went on and reconverted them.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. He reconverted them the second day afterward.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And in that way escaped taxation for a whole year. Yet I will ask my friend if it is not true that that is the fault of the law of the State of Kansas, if it took place in Kansas? In other words, the State of Kansas can tax that property on an average. If a man has it for 363 days in the year in the shape of credits, he can not avoid taxation, under a well-devised State law, by holding Treasury notes two days in the year. Does not the trouble come from the fact that the State has not properly legislated?

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the State law of Kansas is similar to the State laws of a great many of the States of this Union, and that this exemption clause relative to Treasury notes is used just to cloak such men as that from taxation. And I wish the gentleman to understand that under a law proceeding that man was not liable for that tax on his $19,000, and would escape taxation on that in any law proceeding. Now, I take a further step and say that any cashier of a bank with $300,000 of deposits can take $5,000 of greenbacks and exempt every dollar of those deposits from taxation—not legally, but that he does it.

Mr. HEARD. In the case just now put by my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was not the return of the taxpayer conclusive in that case? He made return that he had no money subject to taxation. Now, how could the State go to work and by making the average to which my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] alludes, or in any other way, tax him on the $19,000 which was by law exempted from taxation?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the State law of Kansas had provided that a man should be taxed upon the average of his credits for the year, the whole three hundred and sixty-five days, then, if he owned greenbacks two days out of the three hundred and sixty-five, he would escape taxation on the $19,000 for two three-hundred-and-sixty-fifths of the year, and pay taxes for the balance of the year.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I must answer the gentleman by saying that that is not the method of taxation in any of the States that I know anything about.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. My object in asking is to get information, and not to antagonize the bill; because, so far as I know, I am not now prepared to say that I will vote against it, but I will ask the gentleman whether nine-tenths of the trouble does not come from the fact that people in the States have been content to talk about this, and still they have continued to allow men to make fraudulent or imperfect returns, which they were enabled to do under imperfect State legislation? And if I was criticising the bill I would ask: Do you not march up and say that you will subject the credit of the Government to taxation which, if it was unfriendly, would mean destruction, for the purpose of relieving the various States that seek to tax the moneys and credits of their citizens, from fraud that they might protect themselves against by proper legislation?

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I shall object to having a speech thrown into the middle of my remarks.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will withdraw what I have said if the gentleman desires.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Let it go for what it is worth.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I am asking the question in good faith, to get some light on this bill. I do not want to commit myself about this matter one way or the other. I am seeking in good faith for information. I had just as soon vote for this bill as any other, if it ought to pass, and I am trying to find out.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Now, I want to conclude the few remarks I have to make in the beginning of this discussion, by stating that the Supreme Court of the United States has passed upon a question similar to this, in passing upon the question of the right of a State to tax the shares of national banks. I have a decision here by the Supreme Court in 9 Wallace, the opinion delivered by Justice Miller, and I believed concurred in by an unanimous court.

I desire now to strike the kernel of this whole situation with this sentence—not that I get this from the law book, but it strikes me as the general sense of the legal authorities on this question—that if money, or whatever a man puts his money into just before the assessor comes around, is in the nature of an investment, in the nature of an obligation of the Federal Government, that can not be subject to State or municipal taxation, but where it performs more the function of money or currency than it does of obligation, then the State or municipality can have leave by Congress to tax it—that, of course, being uniform. Here I read from Judge Cooley in his work upon taxation, page 69 of the second edition of the work, in which he uses this language:

> It is perfectly well settled, however, that an exemption granted from motives of State policy merely, and where the State and the citizen do not meet on a basis of bargain and consideration, is to be deemed expressive only of the present will of the State on the subject; and the law granting it, like laws in general, is subject to modification or repeal in the legislative discretion, and it is immaterial that while it continued in force parties have acted in reliance upon it.

Now, a great many cases are cited here by Judge Cooley:

> An exemption from taxation of the property of members of the National Guard may be repealed even as to one who enlists while it is in force, and who is in service at the time of repeal. (People vs. Assessors of Brooklyn, 81 N. Y., 610.)
> A statute imposed a certain rate of taxation on insurance companies then in existence or thereafter to be chartered. Held that the rate may be increased as to the subsequently formed companies.

And he cited a number of cases in that line.

Now, I desire to make the point here that the question is not the impairment of the national obligations. No man has the right to cloak or shield fraud under a national promise. These Treasury notes are now used by the trust companies of the United States, and are used by unscrupulous men of all kinds and classes to shield themselves from taxation by making a return similar to the Leavenworth man to whom I have referred. We can not afford to lay down such precedents.

If there be any merit in the greenback system, or if there be demerit in it, that many on the other side and some upon this maintain, then let greenbacks stand upon their merits, and not with special favors and privileges extended to them, but let them stand or fall by their merits, and pass this bill affecting this $330,000,000 of Treasury notes that are driven out of circulation because the trust companies and national banks hold them in reserve because they know they can not be touched by State or municipal taxation. For this reason I am in favor of this measure.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

[Mr. BROSIUS withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. One moment. Does this come out of the time of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes; I yield it from my time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I can not yield my consent to the argument made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] in opposition to this measure. I reserve, however, to myself the right to vote for, and possibly advocate, an amendment which would relieve the bill of what seems to me to be a most serious question—that is, whether the language of the provision as now worded does not have the effect of compelling the States to levy this tax. That question I reserve.

In a State where money and credits can be taxed by law, I can well understand the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to any measure that would discriminate for or against one species of money of the country. But in the State which I have the honor in part to represent here, and I think it is the condition of most of the Western and Middle States, there is a condition wholly different and one which I desire briefly to point out in the time allotted to me.

In the constitution of the State of Ohio, in the second paragraph of the twelfth article, this provision is found:

> Law shall be passed taxing, by uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks of joint stock companies or otherwise, and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money.

Now, that was the provision of the constitution of 1851, and from that day to this the effort has been made by the Legislature of Ohio, and it has been substantially successful except as interfered with in this particular, to levy uniform rates of taxation on all property of the State according to its true value in money. But under the prohibition of the statute of the United States forbidding the taxation of what we call greenbacks, we have just this condition in that State: A has in his pocket on taxation day $100, which happens to be in gold coin; B has in his pocket on the same day $100 in legal-tender United States notes—greenbacks. The sums are each of equal value; they are each money; they are money within the meaning of the constitution of the State. And yet this provision of our constitution is inoperative and ineffectual and can not be carried into execution because of that provision that denies to the State government the right to tax the greenbacks in the pocket of B and puts the entire burden on the gold coin in the pocket of A. I can not bring myself to believe that there is any justness in that condition.

The "fraud" that the gentleman from Pennsylvania speaks of, or seems to have heard something of, is different from that involved in a failure to make a just tax return ordinarily. The scheme worked in Ohio, and I presume in other States as well, is this: Money on deposit in the bank is taxable under the law. On the day perhaps previous to the taxing day, which is the second Monday in April in our State, a person wishing to avoid taxation goes to a bank and by his check, on a previously agreed arrangement, draws out the amount to his credit in greenbacks and carries it away. He then makes oath that he has no money or credit taxable under the law.

The day following that, he goes and re-establishes his credit in that bank by the deposit of the greenbacks. Sometimes it has been discovered that this process was going on, and I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that such a fraud as that can be obviated by State legislation. It has been done by the judgment of the courts in Ohio. For two or three occasions these frauds were detected, a case made in court, and the court of last resort in Ohio held that it was a fraudulent evasion of the taxing law, and compelled taxation to be assessed upon that money, not as greenbacks, but as a credit in the bank.

Now, why should there be this inequality? The full illustration of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], which he forcibly made to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS], would be this: His reply, as I understood it, was that it was a question for State legislation to prevent discrimination. But suppose that we could pass a law in Congress that all bay horses in all the States of the Union should not be taxed, leaving it to the States to levy their taxation upon all other animals of that species. That would be an exact illustration of this trouble.

It will not do to say that State legislation may prescribe what property shall be taxed. That is not any answer. The difficulty which we complain of is that United States legislation undertakes to say that certain property shall not be taxed. Now, it is entirely competent for the State Legislature to say that no tax shall be levied upon money and credits, provided the constitution of the State did not compel it thereto, but it is not competent for a State Legislature, under such a provision as I have here, to levy taxes upon one species of money and not upon another. And so if it would be unfair and unjust in the State Legislature, it is equally unjust and inequitable that the United States statutes shall work out the same result as though the State Legislature had attempted to say that a horse of one color should be taxed, and that a horse of another color should not be taxed.

In these days, Mr. Speaker, when we are looking about us in our State governments for sources of revenue other than the farms and the houses and the personal property of the people, it is high time that the General Government should relieve the State governments from this inhibition. The art of statesmanship at home in the States to-day is directed to securing immunity for the farms and tangible and immovable property from the burden of taxation which is already unendurable in many of the States of the Union. So if this equalization can be perfected by the simple repeal of this provision of our national legislation, I am in favor of the passage or this bill.

I desire to point out where I was deficient for the moment in stating the objection which I make to the form of the bill. I fear that the fair construction of this measure in the form in which it is now reported will be to compel State Legislatures to tax the greenbacks in circulation. This is the language as it appears as amended by the report of the committee:

That no United States legal-tender notes circulating as currency shall be exempt from taxation under the authority of any State or Territory.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. In States where money is taxed.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But that seems to be a mandatory provision, which ought to be changed so as simply to make it within the power of a State, and not a duty imposed upon a State.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I think there will be a substantial agreement to the effect that the original text of the bill shall stand, and if the gentleman will read the text of the bill as originally introduced, he will find that it leaves it to the discretion of the State to tax all circulating notes of national banks and other obligations of the Government circulating as money.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think that would do it, but my colleague from Ohio [Mr. STRONG] will at the proper time offer an amendment which will perhaps be more satisfactory to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of my remarks I omitted to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, to incorporate into my remarks some decisions the notes of which I have, but which I did not take time to read, and also a statement which has been compiled with a great deal of care and research, containing in very brief form a table of the form of taxation, the mode of taxation, and the property taxed in each of the States of the Union. It occurred to me that it would be a matter of very considerable information to all the members of the House, and if I have unanimous consent I will insert it in my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] is recognized.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] is a member of the committee, and he will take the floor in his own right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana reserve his time?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I reserve my time.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the proposition involved in this legislation, when we come to understand it, is plain and distinct. It is not, as suggested, for the purpose of compelling States to levy a tax upon greenbacks. It is for the purpose of permitting States to assess a tax upon greenbacks if they think proper to do so. Now, the right and equity of it lies in this: Greenbacks are a legal tender in the payment of debts. That is all gold and silver can do in the discharge of debts. Now, if a greenback answers the purpose as a discharge of debts and is a legal tender, and gold and silver are taxed by the States without complaint, what is the reason why greenbacks should not be taxed by the same process, if the States shall desire to do so?

Now, that is the principle involved. The Supreme Court of the United States decided that the greenback was a legal tender for the payment of debts; and that is all that gold can do. What reason is there why a man who holds greenbacks in his pocket shall be exempt from taxation, and the man who holds gold and silver in his pocket shall be subjected to State taxation? Can any man give a good reason for that? That is all there is in it. I see my friend over there, who serves on the committee with me, shake his head; because there is no answer to the proposition at all.

Now, when you come to the argument, the fact that greenbacks are redeemable in gold is a question that does not affect this matter at all. Let us try it with a practical question, for my judgment is always running to something practical. Say my friend from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], who is sitting before me, has a thousand dollars in gold, and my friend from Texas [Mr. COCKRELL] has a thousand dollars in silver or in the bank, for that is not material, and I have a thousand dollars in greenbacks. I can get the gold of my friend from Indiana with the greenbacks, and I can get the silver of my friend from Texas with the greenbacks.

Now, the tax assessor of the State taxes you upon your silver, and you pay it; and the tax assessor taxes my friend from Indiana upon his gold, and he pays it; but when the tax assessor comes to me I say, "My money is exempt from State taxation." Now, can any member of the House say that is right? I do not care anything about theorists working out things; but the very moment it was settled that the greenback was a legal tender in the payment of debts, that very moment, so far as its legal-tender quality was concerned, it put it on the same basis as gold and silver; and the only thing I can see about the matter is that if I was inclined—which I am not—I think the tax on the greenback, if anything, ought to be more than on the gold and silver; but I am willing to treat it exactly the same way.

Now, one further remark. Some gentlemen have got it in their minds that Congress was going to compel the States to assess a tax. I do not think any man will bother himself about Congress compelling the States to tax anything. Why is there now a tax on gold and why is there a tax on silver? The policy of the law is that a man who has gold or silver, which is a circulating medium for the purpose of trade and of commerce, shall not be allowed to lock it up in his pocket or shut it up and thereby deprive commerce of the means of exchange. When you come to the greenback, it is a legal reserve in your banks. It is the equivalent of gold; it is carried as gold; and yet you say that the States may tax gold and tax silver, but must exempt the greenbacks.

Now, then, I can see very readily how that will lead to fraud; and just allow me to say right here that there was a provision in the original bill that subjected national-bank notes to taxation. That was taken out for the simplest of reasons. There is but one State in the Union that holds that they are not subject to taxation. That is the State of Mississippi. Now, you come to the question of detail, and it is astonishing to me that there should be any question about it. A man who has $1,000, or $100,000, or $200,000 of greenbacks to-day, or the day the tax assessor comes around in his State, can say to the tax collector, "My money is exempt;" but the man who has $100,000 or $200,000 in silver, or the man who has the same amount in gold, has to pay the State tax on it.

Now, what kind of a discrimination is that? It does seem to me that the simple statement of the proposition carries conviction in the matter. Admit that greenbacks were nothing more than the promise of the Government to pay money. If it stopped there, and in order to increase their circulation and maintain them it was necessary to exempt them from taxation just like United States bonds, there would be some argument; but the very moment you say they are a legal tender in the payment of debts, why greenbacks are money. Whenever a thing pays debt it is money. It may circulate as currency and not be money, but when it is a legal tender it is money.

Now, one more word and I am done, for I do not think that this is a question on which we should spend much time. It is said that these greenbacks circulate all over the United States, and my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] is always exceedingly nice, courteous, and affable and all that sort of thing. Well, my friend, does not gold and silver also circulate all over the United States? Is not that subject to taxation? And I can not see for my life how any man can vote to protect a hundred thousand dollars in the pockets of one man in greenbacks, while he taxes another hundred thousand dollars in another form of legal tender money, of no more legal efficacy, letting the one go free and compelling the other to be taxed.

Mr. WISE. I understand the gentleman to say that the object of this bill is to give the States the right to tax United States legal-tender notes just as they have the right now to tax gold and silver.

Mr. COX of Tennessee. That is it.

Mr. WISE. Now, instead of doing that, your bill simply forbids the State from exempting United States legal-tender notes from taxation. I agree with you that they ought to be subject to taxation as gold and silver are, but your bill does not accomplish the object you have in view. It provides that no United States legal-tender note shall be exempt from taxation under the authority of any State. Now, I leave it to any lawyer in this House to say if that is not simply a prohibition upon the States from exempting these notes from taxation. That is all it is, and I advise the gentleman, if he wishes to accomplish the object he has in view, to change the language of his bill.

Mr. COX. Oh, well, when the phraseology of a bill is the only point in question, I am not much troubled about it. You have a law which puts a 10 per cent tax upon State bank issues, which provides that the State banks shall pay a tax of 10 per cent upon their issues. Now, if you repeal that law and say that State bank issues shall be exempt from that tax, you have accomplished your object. So with this law, if you say that these greenbacks shall not be exempt from State taxation, you leave it discretionary with the State. The phraseology of the bill is a matter that I do not care to spend many moments upon. I am willing to yield to the gentleman on that point.

Mr. WISE. The bill, it appears, stood originally as the gentleman says it ought to be, but he has changed it, and made it so that it simply prohibits the States from exempting these notes from taxation.

Mr. COX. The gentleman's idea, then, is that the bill goes too far and makes it imperative on the States to assess this tax?

Mr. WISE. Not exactly that. It simply says that they shall not exempt these notes from taxation.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What the gentleman from Tennessee wants to do is to authorize the States to levy this tax if they see proper.

Mr. COX. That is all. What I want is that if the States desire to assess this tax they shall have liberty to do so without restraint from Congress. That is all I desire. I now ask this House to say whether it is proper and just that a man who has one kind of money shall pay a tax upon it, while another man who has another kind of money equally legal tender shall not pay a tax upon it? The proposition seems too plain to require further discussion. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BAILEY). The gentleman has forty minutes remaining.

Mr. COX. I yield that to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I reserve it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the question involved in the pending measure is one of much more importance than it appears to be upon a casual examination. I want to see it decided upon the high ground upon which it ought to be determined, and with this motive in view I may find it necessary to refer during the course of my remarks to some elementary principles relating to constitutional law. It may be that in the first instance these principles may not seem to be applicable, but I am confident that their pertinency will appear as I progress.

The Federal Government is, of course, Mr. Speaker, a Government of delegated and limited powers. Its authority is to be sought for and found in the Constitution; such powers as are there conferred upon it and none others it may exercise. These powers, as is well known, are divided into expressed and implied; the expressed powers being such as are specifically enumerated and conferred by the very language of the Constitution, and the implied powers being such as are not specifically enumerated, but which flow from and are incident to the expressed powers and are necessary in order to carry them into effect.

It was, of course, not necessary that there should have been any allusion in the organic law to implied powers, since from the very nature of things they would have existed without such allusion; but it is nevertheless true that the Constitution in so many words provides that Congress shall have power to pass all laws which may be proper and necessary in order to carry the expressed powers into execution. While the Federal Government is thus circumscribed and limited in its authority, it is nevertheless a well-established principle of constitutional law that within its proper sphere it is absolute, sovereign, and supreme.

It is also another well-recognized principle that wherever the General Government has the constitutional power to do an act all the agencies and instrumentalities of which it makes use in order to perform this act are entirely beyond the control of the States which compose the Federal Union. No State has the right to impede, hinder, or in anywise obstruct any of these agencies. If any State were permitted to do so, the prerogative of the General Government would be encroached upon, its independence would be impaired, and its sovereignty, aye, its very existence, would be imperiled.

It would exist and exert its authority, not of its own volition and of its own inherent strength, but merely by the sufferance of the States, to whose whims and caprices it would be invariably subjected. Indeed, sir, the exemption from State interference of the agencies whereby the Federal Government executes its constitutional authority, is as essential to the nation's life as are the powers which are expressly conferred upon it by the very language of the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, this principle is not a novel one in the history of the country. It is as old as the Constitution itself. It has been several times decided by the highest judicial tribunal of the land. In 1819 the State of Maryland undertook to tax the notes issued by one of the branch banks of the Bank of the United States, which had been previously established by Congress; and the courts of that State, including the court of highest resort, held that the State possessed this power.

But the question was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. It was there argued with great learning and ability by Mr. Webster, Mr. Pinckney, and Mr. Wirt; and the opinion of the court in the case, the celebrated case of McCulloch against the State of Maryland and others, reported in 4th Wheaton, was rendered by the Chief Justice, John Marshall. The opinion, sir, is luminous in thought and convincing in logic. The distinguished jurist, after a full consideration of the question, held that the decision of the lower court was erroneous, and that the notes of the branch bank of the United States, being the agencies of the Federal Government for the purpose of carrying into execution its constitutional power, were beyond the taxing power of the State of Maryland, and the decision of the supreme court of the State was reversed.

In the course of a few more years, in the year 1829, the question again came before the Supreme Court of the United States. In this instance the city council of Charleston, S. C., assuming to act under and by virtue of authority conferred upon it by the Legislature of that State, sought to impose a tax upon the stock of the United States, issued as security for money loaned to the General Government. In this instance, as in the case originating in the State of Maryland, the various State courts, including the supreme court of South Carolina, held that the common council possessed the authority to impose this tax.

The case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. It was carefully considered by this high tribunal, and in the celebrated case of Weston and others against the city council of Charleston, which will be found reported in 2d Peters, the Supreme Court again held, Chief Justice Marshall once more voicing the views of the tribunal, that the State possessed no right to tax this stock of the United States or in anywise to impede the agencies or instrumentalities through which the General Government sought to carry out any of the powers conferred upon it by the organic law.

In 1861-'62, Mr. Speaker, when the greenback was issued, Congress passed a statute expressly providing that all bonds, securities, and obligations of the General Government should be exempt from taxation at the hands of the States. This statute, sir, was not at all necessary. The agencies of the General Government were already exempt from State taxation under this principle of constitutional law to which I have referred. The exemption existed anterior to this statute. The adjudications I have spoken of establish this proposition. This statute so enacted by Congress was simply a declaratory statute. It was nothing more than a declaration of this constitutional exemption as it then existed.

But in the case of the Bank against the Supervisors, which was appealed, I believe, from the courts of the State of New York, and which is to be found on page 26 of 7th Wallace, the effect of this statute as applied to the greenback was the question directly involved. In this case, the opinion being pronounced by Chief Justice Chase, the Supreme Court of the United States held that the Treasury notes of the United States were not subject to taxation by any State of the Union; and put the decision on the same ground upon which the previous decisions had been put, that these notes being an instrumentality employed by the General Government to carry into effect its constitutional powers, no State had the right to tax or otherwise impede or weigh them down.

No one can logically contend, sir, that the greenback is not an instrumentality employed by the Government in the execution of its constitutional powers. The declaring of war and the raising of an army and navy are among the very powers enumerated and conferred in the Constitution. The Government exercised those powers from 1861 to 1865. The greenback was one of the most direct and powerful agencies employed by it for their execution. It was issued by the United States, made in part a legal tender for debts, and with it the Government obtained, among other things, the services of men to suppress the rebellion, and food, clothing and munitions of war for their support.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a singular confusion of thought upon the part of gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber with respect to this question of taxation of money. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BRYAN], and possibly the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] have each suggested that inasmuch as gold and silver and national-bank notes are a proper subject of taxation, therefore the greenback ought to be placed in the same category.

But these gentlemen who, when they carefully examine a question, are always likely to arrive at a correct conclusion, have evidently not studied this question profoundly nor exercised their usually sound judgment upon it. The distinction between the greenback upon the one hand and gold and silver and national-bank notes upon the other hand, is apparent to any man who will stop a moment and inquire into the matter. The Constitution of the United States provides that Congress may "coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin;" and under that constitutional provision the laws of the United States have established a mint; and the people of this country who own bullion, either gold or silver, have been permitted to bring this bullion to the mint and have it coined into money free of charge.

But when this money is coined, it belongs to the people who brought the bullion there, as much as their houses or their lands belong to them. It does not belong to the Government. The Government can only obtain coin by collecting it through the channels of taxation, or by issuing bonds and selling them for it, and thus putting it into the Treasury. Gold and silver coin is not an obligation of the Government. It is money—money of ultimate redemption. But the greenback is entirely different. It is the promise or obligation of the Government to pay money. It is nothing more than a security of the Government. It is in the nature of a forced loan. It belongs to and is issued by the Government. It is not money—not the money of ultimate redemption. It is more closely allied in its nature to the bonds of the Government than it is to coin. It is an instrumentality through which the Government pledges its credit.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If I have in my possession a ten-dollar gold piece issued by the United States Government, and also a ten-dollar greenback issued by the United States Government, is there any process by which the Government can get possession of the greenback other than a process by which it might get possession of the ten-dollar gold piece? In other words, is not the greenback in my pocket my property absolutely, just as much as the ten-dollar gold piece; and may I not hold it against every demand of the Government for its surrender?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Suppose that is true; the distinction I am attempting to point out nevertheless exists. The one is property, a means of redemption; the other is nothing more nor less than a promise to pay, a security of the Government, a pledge of the credit of the Government.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But one is money as well as the other. The gold is money.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Oh, they are each "money" in the common and popular acceptation of the term, I admit. But under the constitutional principle I am seeking to apply there is, as you will observe, a broad and clear distinction between them.

Money, whether it be gold or silver, may be taxed by the States, without interfering with the obligations of the General Government. But the greenback, which, while it answers the purpose of money, is nevertheless but a governmental promise and a governmental agency for carrying out constitutional powers, can not be taxed by the State without sacrificing one of the attributes of sovereignty which resides in the Government. And so with reference to this question of taxation by the States there is also a broad distinction between the greenback and the national-bank note. The national-bank note is primarily the obligation of the banking association which issues it. The bank itself is looked to in the first instance to redeem it. It is its lawful duty to do so. The bonds, which are deposited with the General Government to secure the national-bank bill, belong to the bank in the first instance, and it draws and receives the interest which is paid upon them.

It is true the General Government is secondarily and indirectly liable for the payment of the bills It is true that it may sell the bank's bonds and reimburse itself if it is compelled to discharge this secondary liability. But the fact nevertheless remains that the national bank bill is only indirectly and remotely an obligation of the Government, whereas the greenback is issued directly by the Government, is its immediate obligation and one for the redemption of which, in the first instance, it is morally and legally bound. And so, Mr. Speaker, there is perfect propriety in the various courts of the Union, including the supreme court of the State of Indiana, deciding that by reason of the distinction I have stated, the national-bank bill is a proper and legal subject for taxation by the State and that the greenback is not.

Mr. Speaker, this Government of ours is a Government of checks and balances. It is divided into three great departments, each invested with its own peculiar functions which neither of the other departments has the right to assume. The National Government too possesses certain powers and the States possess certain other powers. Each sovereignty is invested with authority to the exclusion of the other. No good can ever come, sir, from undertaking to confuse the lines of demarcation which exist between them. Indeed, much harm may result from such a course. Each department should at all times resent and resist all agressions on the part of any other department on its own peculiar domain.

It is only by preserving and perpetuating in practice and in actual operation the line of demarcation existing in the Constitution between the various Departments of the General Government, and between the Federal Government and the States, by seeing to it that the lines are not broken down or confused, that we can hope to continue the existence of our dual system of government. This system of divided powers is the very basis upon which the Government itself is founded; and while it is the absolute duty of the States to repel any infringement upon their reserved rights at the hands of the General Goverment, at the same time it is the right and the duty of the General Government to repel any aggressions upon its sovereignty on the part of the States.

Not only this, but there should be no voluntary surrender by either party to the other of these attributes of sovereignty with which the Constitution has invested it, and I am not only opposed to yielding to the States on their demand—on their imperative demand—the right to tax the agencies with which the Federal Government discharges its plain constitutional powers, but I am unalterably opposed to yielding these attributes as a matter of favor to the States, even though assured that they may be recovered should occasion require.

I am uncompromisingly opposed, sir, to leasing out the Federal sovereignty, either at will or for a term of years. It is much easier to cede away a right such as this, than it is to resume it when desired. It becomes very easy for a thing which has been granted as a matter of favor in the course of time to be claimed and insisted upon as a matter of right. The doctrine of prescription is too often wrongfully invoked for the acquisition of power.

Mr. Speaker, there may come a time, there may come an emergency in the history of this Government when the power of revocation can not be exercised because a majority in Congress may be inimical to the preservation of the Federal authority. I imagine that a Federal attribute ceded to the States by the action of the General Government prior to 1860 would not have been promptly resumed by the kind of a Congress which assembled under the Dome of this Capitol in those dark days which immediately preceded the commencement of the great war of the rebellion.

In correlation, sir, to this proposition that the instrumentalities and agencies of the General Government which carry into execution its constitutional powers are exempt from the taxation of the State, stands the other proposition, which is equally proper and just, and that is that wherever the Constitution has reserved to any State the exclusive right to deal with a particular subject, the agencies the State makes use of to carry out that reserved power are exempted from taxation or interference at the hands of the General Government, and I would stand here for that proposition.

Mr. DANIELS. If the gentleman will allow me, let me ask him this question, whether Congress has not provided already that the States may tax shares in national banks, which they could not do without such legislation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. On that point, I will state to the gentleman, I am not prepared to speak, but the matter is entirely different. The principle is not at all identical. As I have previously attempted to show, taxation of the greenback is one thing and taxation of the national banks quite another thing. The courts have drawn this distinction. But if the Government's consent is necessary to State taxation of national-bank shares, and has been given, as the gentleman states, such action of Congress would not control me in the matter now in hand.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not want to disturb the gentleman——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman will not disturb me at all.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to say that, without any prohibition upon the part of Congress of the taxation of these securities or this money, it would be unlawful for the State to tax them; that there is something back of the mere legislation of Congress that gives to the greenback an immunity from taxation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I do say so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, is not that exactly in the teeth of the holding of the Supreme Court of the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I think it is not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will permit me, I will read a few words on the subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I will yield to the gentleman, although my time is running. I ask the gentleman to be very brief. Can not the gentleman make his point without reading the decision?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will make the point, and, with the gentleman's permission, I will quote the extract in what I have to say. The court there held that it was perfectly competent for Congress to prohibit the taxation of greenbacks, and that it was perfectly competent for Congress to permit the taxation of greenbacks. Therefore, they say:

There is but a single question: Did they prohibit?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Why, Mr. Speaker, that decision is not at all conclusive of the point on which the gentleman cites it. He refers to the case in 7th Wallace. In the case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, and subsequently in the case of Weston and others against the council of Charleston, S. C., the direct point was made and decided, independent of any existing statute, for there was none in those days, that there is no power in the States to tax the instrumentalities of the General Government.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But the statute was passed after that—the first greenback statute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Suppose it was. It was simply declaratory of a principle of constitutional law clearly enunciated and settled in these decisions of the Supreme Court thirty or forty years before—a principle really requiring no statutory authority for its existence. I have discussed this phase of the question sometime ago.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But the Supreme Court said it was not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Not at all. The mere fact that Congress saw fit to prohibit the taxation is no evidence that this power would have existed in the States in the absence of the prohibition. It is frequently the case that Legislatures enact statutes declaratory of constitutional principles.

Doubtless it was for the purpose of calling the attention of the States to the constitutional principle, and allowing them to see it in the form of a statute, instead of requiring them to go back and search for the decisions of the Supreme Court, which had on two occasions denied the power of taxation in the States, that this statute was passed.

Mr. CANNON of California. I should like to ask one question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. CANNON of California. In case the Congress should pass an act of this kind, do you claim it would not be constitutional?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Oh, I have not said that, Mr. Speaker; but now that the gentleman has mentioned it, I will say that I have very grave doubts as to whether or not Congress possesses the power to cede away these attributes of sovereignty which are vested in the General Government by the Constitution. But I am not taking that position now. It is not at all essential to the argument I am making. I am arguing it upon the question of high propriety and of expediency.

Now, as I was saying when I was interrupted, Congress has no right to tax or impede the machinery employed by a State to execute those powers which are expressly and exclusively reserved to it by the Constitution. There is not a gentleman on this floor who would advocate for one minute the proposition that a State of this Union should waive this constitutional principle and allow the General Government to invade its prerogative and impose a tax upon or otherwise impede the agencies it makes use of. And yet gentlemen, with singular inconsistency, stand here and demand of the General Government more than they would concede to it from the State.

What State to-day would be willing to bestow, at the solicitation of the General Government, even with the power of revocation at its pleasure, the right to tax the agencies it makes use of in carrying out its powers exclusively reserved to it by the Federal Constitution?

More than this, the States are always jealous in maintaining their constitutional rights. They never lack defenders on this floor. What State in this Union would be willing to waive its constitutional powers, its inherent rights, and permit another State to step over its border and control its internal legislation?

And, Mr. Speaker, where is this kind of legislation to lead to, if we establish a precedent by the passage of this bill? If you can ask and obtain the consent of Congress to tax this particular agency of the Federal Government, to hinder and impede the exercise of this attribute of its sovereignty, how long will it be until gentlemen will come upon this floor demanding still further cessions, and citing this piece of legislation for a precedent? How long will it be before there will be a clamor that the mints, properties, custom-house papers, and processes of the courts of the United States may be taxed by the States?

Mr. Speaker, it is well enough, especially for gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, to stop and pause, to think before they set a precedent which may result in this species of legislation by Congress in the future. The opening wedge once entered it is easy to split the log. Let us prevent the opening wedge from being inserted in this particular instance. Let us not be cajoled into the abandonment, even for a time, of Federal rights which are of almost inestimable value. It is no argument to me, sir, to say that this exemption of the greenback from State taxation is used as a cloak whereby wicked and designing citizens of the States defraud the States in the collection of their taxes.

Why, sir, if the mere fact that governmental powers are used by dishonest men for improper purposes be a reason for surrendering those powers or ceding them away, you will soon emasculate the General Government and leave it stripped of every attribute of sovereignty; for I know of no particular power which can not be made the subject of abuse by bad and unscrupulous men.

Now, sir, what is the excuse for this kind of legislation? What is the ostensible reason for its introduction? Why, it is sought to be justified upon two grounds, first, that the nontaxability of the greenback admits of the lawful withholding of that much property from taxation from the authorities of the State; second, that the exemption of the greenback from taxation is used by dishonest men for the purpose of perpetrating frauds upon the tax collectors of the different States of the Union. Now, sir, let us examine these two objections briefly, and see how much there is in them. First, as to the charge of legitimate exemption. Mr. Speaker, the extent to which greenbacks can be honestly used as a means of exemption from State taxa-ation is exceedingly limited. There has been great exaggeration as to this phase of the subject. When the time comes for the citizens of the State to hand in their statements of property for taxation a large proportion of the greenbacks in existence is doubtless in the Treasury of the United States.

I am not able to give the statistics or to state the exact amount. Not only this. At such times thousands of citizens, scattered all over this country, North and South, East and West, have these greenbacks which are exempt from taxation, bills of different denominations, in their pockets. The amount is small in each individual case, but in the aggregate it reaches a vast sum, and it is a fact which can not be denied that these citizens in returning their property for taxation never think about claiming these greenbacks as exempt from taxation. Why, sir, instead of $346,000,000, the total amount of greenbacks in existence, being legally exempted each year from State taxation, the sum so exempted falls far below this. It probably does not amount to half of this sum.

I know, Mr. Speaker, we are told that the greenback is used in one State for legitimate exemption from taxation and then immediately transferred to another State, where citizens return property for taxation a little later, and that they are again used for exemption there, and thus perform a kind of double duty. But, sir, it is a much easier thing to charge this than to prove it. Assertion is one thing, evidence is quite another. The extent of this practice, in my opinion, has been grossly exaggerated. While I have heard the charge, I have never yet heard of a well-authenticated case of this kind.

But suppose all of this is true. Here you have a grievance, temporary in its character, one which at most can last but for a few years, and what, sir, is a few years in the life of a mighty nation? But you have also in this proposed legislation another matter for consideration. The remedy you suggest for this grievance can only be applied by sacrificing a great and enduring principle of Federal power. Can you afford to make this sacrifice? Do you dare to seize upon this lesser alternative and relinquish the greater one?

Happy indeed, Mr. Speaker, is that Representative upon this floor who can read between the lines of this as well of other important legislation, who is capable of drawing distinctions, who, in his efforts to grasp the shadow, does not permit the substance to escape, who can see the remote and ultimate results of legislation, instead of simply seeing that which is in his immediate presence. Is it not infinitely more important that this great principle, enunciated by Marshall and sanctioned by the legislation of Congress, should be preserved and maintained in its entirety, that this great principle should be vindicated, than that the privilege of taxation should be a little bit extended to the States?

And now, Mr. Speaker, as to the claim that the exemption of greenbacks from taxation enables unscrupulous citizens to perpetrate frauds upon the tax laws of the various States. What is the plain and proper remedy for this? The stripping of the Federal Government of its essential rights? No, sir. The remedy is within the power of the States themselves.

We have heard a great deal of talk on this floor from time to time about the sovereignty of the States. Here is an arena to which that sovereignty unquestionably applies, and where it can be used with force and effect. Let the Legislatures of the States pass laws to prohibit these frauds. Let the public prosecutors call before the grand juries witnesses who are cognizant of these frauds. Let the grand juries investigate and return true bills of indictment against the wrongdoers. Let these wrongdoers be placed on trial and punished, and the frauds will cease to exist. Do you say that this can not be done?

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Do you do it in your State?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes, sir, we do it in our State; or if we do not, that is no reason why we should not try to do it. If our laws are not sufficient we ought to amend them and then enforce them. This is the plain constitutional remedy. It is not necessary to lay the blame on the General Government and ask it to abrogate its powers.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Does not the gentleman know that the State tax commission, a nonpartisan body composed of the governor of the State of Indiana and two other officers, have recommended the passage of this very bill, and that that governor is a Republican?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I do not know and I do not care. I profess to be able to think for myself and to reason for myself, and I am not to be misled by any legislation proposed by others which leaves out of consideration principles far more important than those which the gentlemen to whom my colleague refers may have observed with their limited vision. But I address myself to my colleague from Indiana: You cast your vote on this floor, did you not, in favor of the passage of a bill to repeal the 10 per cent tax upon State bank circulation?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I did.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Why? It was because——

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Let me state the reason. I did it because I thought the States were capable of self-government, and I think now they ought to be allowed to do some self-governing in the matter of collecting taxes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. You did it, sir, upon the principle which was enunciated by every gentleman upon this floor who favored that bill, that the States were strong and powerful enough when divested of Federal control to give a sound, uniform, and elastic currency, one which would be good from one end of this country to the other. Having taken that ground—and you would not have voted for the bill unless you believed that—how do you dare to come in here now and plead the impotency of the State to pass laws to prevent the commission of fraud by its own citizens upon its tax laws?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. If the gentleman will allow me, the impotency of the States results from interference on the part of the General Government with the powers which exist between the States and the Federal Government—for they do not exist independently for either. This is not a reserved power in the Constitution, but a power which grew out of the necessities of the case, to preserve the agencies of the Federal Government, and it is not right for that Government to exercise that power any further than is necessary to preserve its agencies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman is wandering off to inquire into the origin of this power, but that has nothing to do with my question as to the ability of States to prevent fraud on their own tax laws by their citizens.

The gentleman pronounced himself in favor of repealing the 10 per cent tax on State bank circulation under the belief that the States were strong enough to create money that would be sound and good from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. They will be strong enough to collect this tax if you allow them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. How is the General Government preventing the States from stopping these frauds upon their tax laws of which gentlemen complain?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. By its statutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Can not the States by their State laws punish violations of their own tax laws?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Does anybody claim that the Federal Government interferes with the passage of State laws, making it an offense and a crime to violate the tax laws of the States simply because the greenback is exempt from taxation?

Mr. HALL of Missouri. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. One at a time, gentlemen, if you please. I will hear both of you.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman if it is not agreeable to him; but I want to say that the supreme courts of a number of the States have decided that an investment in greenbacks, even though it be for the purpose of avoiding taxation, is lawful.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. There is not a supreme court in this Union which has held that the fraudulent use of greenbacks as a means of exemption from State taxation is lawful.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I admit that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. And that is the phase of the question I am now discussing, the fraudulent and illegitimate employment of greenbacks in avoidance of State taxes. I have already discussed and laid aside the other branch of the question, the lawful exemption obtainable through them. The General Government has never attempted to invade the province of the States to pass laws by their Legislatures to punish those citizens and taxpayers who use the greenback fraudulently to secure exemption from State taxation.

What gentleman on this floor who stood here and advocated the repeal of the Federal election laws on the ground that the States were strong enough to guarantee the freedom and fairness of their elections—and the gentleman from Indiana, I believe, favored this repeal—dares now to come into this arena and plead "the baby act" by talking about the impotency of the State through the State Legislature to pass and enforce laws prohibiting the fraudulent use of the greenback in order to secure exemption from State taxation?

Mr. Speaker, for the practice which is here complained of, and which it is claimed the pending bill is designed to stop, there is still another remedy which will soon be applied, a remedy which will be operative in a very few years and which will prove effectual without aiming the blow at the Federal power which is involved in the measure now under debate. We have now a remarkable system of finance, quite a number of kinds of paper based upon various kinds of redemptions. The national-bank system must soon expire. The bonds which secure the national-bank notes are rapidly maturing. Some new system must be devised. That system will be a national one which, while the General Government retains control, will nevertheless vest in those who engage in banking sufficient power to enable them to furnish a sound and uniform currency in sufficient volume for the wants of the people.

When that system is established it will doubtless make the money that is created the indirect issue of the Government in the sense that, like the national-bank bill, it will be subject to the taxation of the States, and when that time comes these various existing forms of money, including the greenback, in the interest of simplicity and uniformity, will be gathered up and merged into the new national issue which will take the place of them all.

Mr. Speaker, the character of legislation proposed by the gentleman from Indiana in his little bill is not new. It has been attempted before. In the Forty-seventh Congress a measure of this kind was introduced in the House and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. My friend, the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], then a member of this committee, made a report against the bill and it was never heard of again. I believe the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] has informed us, probably in some of his arguments before the committee in favor of his measure, that a bill of similar character once passed the Senate; but, sir, it never passed the House. Somehow or other, the good saving common sense and patriotism of the American Congress came to its rescue before the bill ever passed from its portals and invited for itself an executive veto.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. It may add to the historical value of the gentleman's remarks if he will allow me to state that such a bill did pass the Senate, having been unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, of which Judge Edmunds, one of the best constitutional lawyers we have had in Congress, was a member. And in the Fifty-first Congress Mr. Morrill, of Kansas, now the Republican nominee for governor of that State, presented a unanimous report of the Committee on Banking and Currency in favor of such a bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That does not controvert anything I have said. I said that no such bill had passed Congress; that the saving common sense and patriotism of Congressmen had taken hold of them before it passed and had saved the necessity of a Presidential veto. I am glad to see the gentleman has sufficient respect for Republican authority to cite it as his precedent and vindication on this floor. The gentleman seems to be utterly incapable of taking any view of this question except along narrow lines. This is a great question of governmental prerogative; and I wish I could so far enlighten the gentleman as to enable him to catch a faint glimmering of the line of argument I am attempting to make here to-day.

Mr. Speaker, we are told this bill provides that greenbacks shall be taxed by the States at no higher rate than they tax other money—as though this would mitigate the invasion of the prerogative of the Government. Why, Mr. Speaker, a tax which gold and silver, the ultimate money of redemption, could bear with perfect impunity would drive the mere promise or obligation, the Treasury note of the Government, out of existence. And look now at the circumstances which environ us while this legislation is being attempted. Reflect for one moment. The Democratic party has come into power and coincident with its advent a great panic and business stagnation has been visited upon the land. Banks have failed. Factories have stopped running. Thousands of men are out of employment. Capital and labor are grappling each other by the throat in a fierce struggle for mastery. Public confidence is reduced to a minimum. Your greenbacks are bottomed upon the continuation of public confidence. Three hundred and forty-six million dollars of them added to $150,000,000 of Treasury notes issued under the act of 1890, make $500,000,000 of promises of the Government, resting not upon the $100,000,000 reserve which was in the Treasury when your party came into power, but simply on $62,000,000 or $63,000,000 of reserve, which is still rapidly decreasing.

Your revenues from customs have fallen off, particularly your coin revenues. You are obtaining no gold from your collections of internal revenue. Your Treasury Department can not negotiate any more bonds under the act of 1875, because you have cast a cloud upon the validity of such bonds by denying the right of your Secretary of the Treasury to issue or sell them. You are refusing, though requested by this official, to give him new authority to issue bonds to obtain gold to put into the Treasury to increase the gold reserve. And under such circumstances as these, you are determined that you will add to the burden which the greenback must bear; that you will take away from it the very thing which helps to float it and kept it at par—its nontaxability; that you will put it in the power of the States to weigh it down and give it an additional blow; and thus it is not at all beyond possibility that you may bring about its depreciation, with all the evils that will come from the depreciation of the United States Treasury note.

Mr. Speaker, as I run back in my mind over the history of my country I am led to reflect that the Democratic party has never been the especial champion of the greenback. When these Treasury notes were issued early in the progress of the war, to aid in the suppression of the rebellion, our Democratic friends declared that the act authorizing their issue was unconstitutional. When the Supreme Court of the United States, as it was then constituted, declared that there was no authority in the Constitution for their issue, the Democratic followers throughout the length and breadth of the country threw up their hats in glad acclaim and chanted hosannas in honor of that court.

But when a little later on the court, newly organized, perhaps, by the addition of another judge, reversed the former ruling and declared that the issue was constitutional, then what did we see? The Democratic party assailed the court with anathemas like unto those that were hurled in past ages against heretics by the popes of Rome. And when at last the holy mission with which they were intrusted was accomplished, when the rebellion was suppressed and the national authority was restored throughout the entire land, the Democratic party, instead of standing for the solemn pledge of their redemption written on the face of the greenback, proposed to utterly repudiate that pledge and to cover them with dishonor and disgrace.

And now in these days when there is agitation and peril throughout the land, at a time when nothing should be done by legislation to impair in the least the value of the greenback or to awaken public distrust concerning it, the Democratic party rushes with alacrity to the support of a bill, a Democratic Representative from my own State leading in the charge, which, if passed, may possibly affect the value of this currency and bring discredit and dishonor upon it.

Why, Mr. Speaker, this proposed legislation is not by any means novel or unique in its character. It is perfectly in harmony with the legislation which has been proposed in Congress ever since the Democratic party came into control of the several branches of the National Government. Its purpose is quite apparent to every thinking man upon this floor. Its result can easily be predicted. If the Democratic party remains in complete control of the Government for a few short years every vestige of the legislation which grew out of the war and which is its legitimate result will be wiped from the statute books of the nation.

All the progress of thirty years, which is the pride of the Republican party, will be destroyed. We will stand where we stood in the dark days when Abraham Lincoln uplifted his hands to high heaven and took the solemn oath of office. The General Government will be stripped of many of its prerogatives, and the States will no longer be circumscribed in their powers to those limits to which by the express terms of the Constitution, as well as by its spirit, they are restricted. The Democratic party is capable, sir, of doing all this. It is not only revolutionary, but it is retrogressive. Nothing is exempt from its anathemas; nothing is too sacred for its polluting hand. It knows nothing of the doctrine of res adjudicata. Nothing with it is ever settled, though the intelligence and common sense of mankind the world over may have pronounced a rightful and permanent adjustment to have been effected. It revolts alike against the decisions of the highest judicial tribunals and the arbitration of the sword to which it was the first to appeal. It is always fatally bent on mischief. Already at the other end of the Capitol we hear the doctrine announced that the United States Senators are simply the "ambassadors of the sovereign States."

Already on the floor of this House, during the progress of the debate on the bill to repeal the 10 per cent tax on State bank circulation and on the bill to repeal the Federal election laws, we have heard gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber declare the pernicious doctrine, that no difference what the Supreme Court of the United States decided as to the constitutionality of a law they had the right to repudiate that decision and determine the constitutionality of the law for themselves.

Already during these debates we have heard it declared by gentlemen on the other side of the aisle that the people of the United States had reversed the decision of the Supreme Court at the polls; as though it were possible under our peculiar form of Government for the decision of the Supreme Court to be reversed at the polls, or indeed in any other way or through any other channel than that which is marked out by the Constitution itself.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Did the gentleman not hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] take that position?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. No, sir; I did not hear it and the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not announce it.

Mr. DALZELL. Never.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. And if he did he announced an erroneous proposition; one which is not entertained by any other member on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, already you have repealed the Federal elections laws. This is one step in your march of spoliation. Your decision is that the Federal Government shall no longer exercise control over elections in which it is vitally interested. These laws, mark you, did not seek to interfere with local elections, but simply had to do with those which pertained to national offices, and in which all of the people of the United States are concerned. To-day the General Government has no power to preserve the purity and the integrity of the ballot.

You have attempted to deprive the National Government of all power of control over the paper currency of the country by introducing into this House a bill to repeal the 10 per cent tax on State bank issues, and to relegate us to the financial condition in that regard which prevailed before the war and to which no sensible citizen would ever be willing to return. It is true you did not succeed; but the spirit and the purpose were there. Your measure was defeated because the solid Republican vote of this House, with a minority of those on your side of this Chamber, voted against it, but the fact nevertheless remains that the overwhelming majority of the Democratic Representatives on this floor cast their votes in favor of that proposition.

This is not all. Without the slightest reason to believe that he had been guilty of fraud, venality, or corruption, or that his conduct deserved impeachment, you reported from the Judiciary Committee of this body, and passed through this House, a resolution to investigate the conduct of a United States judge who had simply made a mistake of law in a case pending before him.

Your committee unanimously reported back that his decision was an honest though erroneous one; and then, instead of leaving that error to be corrected—for in my opinion it was an error and it ought to be corrected—by an appeal to the higher court, where an appeal is now pending, and where there will doubtless be a reversal, the majority of your committee reported back and asked this House to pass a resolution of censure, thus not only nagging this particular judge, but indelicately seeking to invade the province of the judiciary, to set a precedent which will result in confusion in the future, and which may lead to abuse of legislative power, and seeking also to constitute this legislative body a quasi court of appeals to pass upon alleged errors of law committed by the judiciary.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does not the gentleman think he ought to add, in justice to the Committee on the Judiciary, the statement that, as in most other cases of the kind, they have not dared to bring that legislation before the House and the country?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I hope it may never be brought before the House. And I hope there will come a time when returning reason will protect the House and the country from such misdirected zeal on the part of a committee composed of some of the greatest lawyers upon the floor, and that in these perilous times they will insist upon maintaining the lines of demarkation between the various branches of the Government, as provided in the Federal Constitution. If there is any man, sir, on earth for whom I have a supreme contempt it is for the lawyer who is truckling to the demagogic spirit of the times, and who has not the manhood to set his face resolutely against that which is plainly wrong, even though such a course involves his temporary defeat, and trust with confidence to the returning good sense of his countrymen for his vindication. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Well, not only this. Down in the State of South Carolina a railroad corporation was put into the hands of a receiver by the United States court. Three sheriffs of counties in that State, assuming to act as tax collectors under the laws of the State, without asking permission of the Federal court, took the corporation's property forcibly out of the possession of the receiver and undertook to sell it for taxes which they claimed were due to the State.

The Federal court, as it should have done, promptly summoned these State officers before it and punished them by a fine for their contempt of its authority. That judgment was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that august tribunal, which has not yet lost its moorings in these matters, whatever may be the drift of the legislative branch, decided that the judgment was rightly rendered, and then the State of South Carolina paid these fines; and when this session of Congress met a bill requiring the General Government to refund to that State the fines so imposed and paid was introduced into this House, referred to the Committee on Accounts, and has since been favorably reported to this body, from which action of the Committee on Accounts we are to understand, I suppose, that the Federal courts are to have full liberty to punish by fine for contempt those who defy their authority on the express condition that the fine so imposed is to be promptly refunded to the wrongdoer by the General Government.

What kind of a power, sir, to punish for contempt is this? What kind of an instrument is this with which to sustain the dignity and integrity of the court? The very introduction of such a bill into this House is a shameful apology for the righteous action of the court; is in effect a condemnation in the court of that which should receive the highest plaudits at the hands of this body, and which was absolutely necessary to preserve its authority.

But some gentleman on this floor, of more than ordinary shrewdness, has discovered in connection with this matter that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, and he has drawn, introduced, and had referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee has reported it favorably to this House, a bill providing that where a corporation is in the hands of a receiver appointed by a Federal court, instead of such court having the right to control and marshal the assets—a thing absolutely essential to the proper and successful conduct of a receivership in any court—that the State authorities shall have the right to levy upon property of the corporation in the hands of the receiver for State taxes, take it out of his possession, and sell it, all without the consent either of the United States court or of the receiver, and that the court of the United States shall have no power, either by injunction, fine, or other process, to prevent or punish such conduct.

The bill, I believe, graciously accords to receivers of the United States courts in such instances the privilege of going into the State courts to litigate the validity of the tax. And thus the courts of the United States are placed in shameful subserviency to the inferior courts of a State, and the right to hold and administer, independent of the interference of any other court, assets in the hands of a receiver appointed by them, a right I will undertake to say guaranteed by every State law to every State court which appoints a receiver, is to be taken away from them.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have not yet quite reached the end. Here is something else which completely caps the climax of this kind of legislation. Here is another bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary; the minority, I grant you, having seen fit to make a dissenting report, for which they deserved due credit. What does this bill provide? That wherever, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, a United States court having jurisdiction in the premises has rendered a judgment against a municipal corporation of one State in favor of a citizen of another State and the United States court has ordered the proper officer of the State to levy and collect the tax with which to pay the judgment, and that officer has refused, that the court of the United States shall be utterly powerless to punish him for contempt for his refusal if the highest court of the State has held that the tax was illegally assessed; and this proposed legislation, too, right in the face of the very language of the Constitution, which declares that the Constitution of the United States and the treaties and laws made pursuant thereto shall be the supreme law of the land and shall be binding upon every judge of a State court, anything in the constitution or laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding.

Here, again, the sovereign courts of the United States are to be put in shameful vassalage to the courts of the State, and are to be deprived of the power of enforcing their judgments. As well might they be deprived of constitutional jurisdiction to render judgments as to deprive them of the power which they possess to carry their judgments into execution. What, sir, is the value of the judgment of a court which has no authority to enforce it? It is but a piece of worthless paper. Who would respect it or obey it; who would predicate any right upon it or shield himself behind it? I do not think we should have any of this kind of legislation. I am unalterably opposed to it.

How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, as I have intimated once before, I am not surprised at this kind of legislation. The other side of this Chamber is not going to cling very tenaciously to the doctrines which John Marshall, the noblest son of Virginia, so positively declared from the bench. They have no sympathy with the views which he entertained on these subjects. Indeed, sir, in all the time I have been a member of this House I have not yet heard any man in this Chamber from Virginia, or any other part of the South, rise and speak a kindly word of him or of his memory.

Time and again I have heard Thomas Jefferson eulogized by these gentlemen; over and over again I have heard glowing panegyric pronounced upon his memory. No language has been too laudatory in which to sound his praise. Hyperbole has exhausted itself in his honor. Mr. Speaker, I shall not deny that Thomas Jefferson was a brilliant, a learned, and an able man, and that he fills a great space in the country's history; but gentlemen seem to forget that he was not wholly without errors or faults. I shall not undertake to enumerate them.

It is sufficient for me to call the attention of this House to the fact that he was the author, although he undertook to suppress his authorship for the time being, of the pernicious resolution of 1798, which was introduced into the Legislature of Kentucky, a resolution which declared the fallacious and dangerous doctrine that the Union is nothing more nor less than a mere agreement or compact between two sovereignties, the Federal Government upon one side and a sovereign State upon the other; and, that inasmuch as no supreme arbiter is fixed to settle differences which may arise either sovereignty is at liberty to judge for itself as to infractions of this compact, and as to the mode and method of redress therefor.

This proposition, sir, is in direct conflict with the proposition laid down by Washington, Adams, Hamilton, Jay, Knox, Story, Marshall, Webster, and a host of our other great publicists.

It ignores the fact that the Federal Government emanates directly from the people, and that it operates directly upon them, without the intervention of a State, and is blind to the additional fact that the Constitution does create a supreme arbiter, the court of the United States, and invests it with full power to pass on all questions of doubt or difference, and makes the decision final and conclusive.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution of 1798 was the inspiration of the brilliant South Carolinian who led in the nullification of 1832. It had as its legitimate consequence the greatest civil war of modern times; a war in which men of a common kindred grappled each other desperately upon the battlefield, and in which fraternal blood flowed over the land in a torrent like unto the waters of the great Niagara.

Mr. Speaker, it is fortunate for the country that Thomas Jefferson was absent from our shores as minister to the French court in those memorable days when the Constitutional Convention assembled at Philadelphia, with George Washington at its head, and gave to the world that sublime Constitution which is the delight of all publicists and under which our liberties have been maintained, else that Constitution would probably have been little better than the impotent Articles of Confederation which it succeeded, articles which prolonged unnecessarily the war of Independence, and which, when the menace of a common danger was removed by the successful termination of the war, dropped to pieces like a rope of sand, leaving the people to drift toward an anarchy infinitely worse than the oppression from which through their valor they had escaped.

Fortunate, indeed, for the American people that Mr. Jefferson still remained absent from his country in those days when Hamilton, and Madison, and Jay were impressing upon their countrymen with burning words and irresistible logic, through the medium of those inspired essays since known as the Federalist, the absolute necessity of embracing the Federal Constitution, else the weight of his great influence might have been thrown with those who, incapable of distinguishing between unbridled license and constitutional liberty, refused to receive that precious boon.

By unanimous consent, the time of Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana was extended for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, John Marshall's memory needs no kindly words of recognition from gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber to keep it green. The bare mention of his great name on the tongue of even the humblest American citizen is of itself his grandest panegyric. Whether as a soldier fighting through the Revolutionary war to establish on this continent a new government dedicated to the enlarged liberties of mankind, or as a citizen leading a life beautiful in its simplicity and beyond the shadow of reproach, whether as a lawyer standing easily at the head of the bar of a State justly renowned for the great lawyers which it produced, or as chief magistrate of the greatest court known to the Federal Constitution, adorning that high station with his great learning and leaving the deep impress of his mighty mind on the jurisprudence of his country, John Marshall ever commended himself to the good opinion of his countrymen.

He is to the jurisprudence of America what Mansfield is to the jurisprudence of England. His decisions are models of sound reasoning and judicial learning. He never dipped his pen in ink and wrote an opinion from that high bench that he did not write for himself a eulogy far more eloquent than any that could fall from the lips of an orator. He never pronounced a decision from the bench that he did not erect for himself a monument more enduring than monuments of brass which corrode and perish, or monuments of marble which crumble and decay.

He understood well the principles upon which this Government is founded. He saw plainly that, through the medium of the Federal Constitution, its framers designed to create a great and mighty nation which should endure for ages and should give peace, prosperity, and liberty to the American people, and that in that Constitution they had conferred all the powers which were necessary to the accomplishment of this great and laudable end.

He realized fully that the best civil liberty is that which is secured by self-imposed constitutional restraint. He comprehended exactly the powers which the General Government possessed, and he always stood firmly for their proper preservation; and, while he recognized and respected the sovereignty of the State, he never hesitated to circumscribe it to those limits to which the Constitution in its letter and spirit restricted it.

The lines of demarcation between the three great departments of Government were as plain to his eye as the sun in heaven. In his decisions he rigorously maintained them. Fortunate indeed for the American people that in the early days of this great Republic, when it was in the stage of formation, this great jurist sat upon the bench of our highest tribunal, and there through the medium of judicial construction pointed out with unerring certainty the limits and boundaries of the powers, both of the Federal Government and of the States, as they were fixed and imposed by the language and spirit of the Constitution.

And here, Mr. Speaker, I pause—pause not for lack of material, but for lack of time—for I feel that I have already trespassed very largely upon the patience of the House.

Sir, notwithstanding all this retroactive legislation attempted by this Democratic Congress there is no reason why we should despair. The American people, despite their present discouraging environments, are still capable of self-government. The tide of public approval which a short time ago carried this party of imbecility and retroaction into power on its flow will yet certainly ebb.

Already the waters are beginning to recede. Soon they will drag back into the sea of condemnation, if not of obscurity, this conspiracy against human rights, which from the very day of its advent to power down to this hour has never done anything worthier than to strew with misdirected energy the white sands of the shore with the wrecks of the noble aspirations which it has derided and the high hopes which it has destroyed. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I wish to see whether I can not come to an agreement with the gentlemen on the other side as to the time when the debate shall be closed and the previous question ordered.

Mr. BROSIUS. Perhaps my friend will see the propriety of allowing that question to rest in abeyance until to-morrow, when we can ascertain what may be the disposition of the House.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Can we not fix now a time when we can close the debate to-morrow?

Mr. BROSIUS. I think the proposition had better be made to-morrow than to-day.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Well, I do not see any impropriety in trying to secure an agreement now.

Mr. BROSIUS. There are only twenty minutes remaining of to-day's session. If the gentleman will allow me, I suggest that we can have some consultation between now and the adjournment; and if he desires to make any proposition in the morning I think there will be no difficulty about it. I do not believe much more time will be required; but I am not able to say this evening how much, because I have not had sufficient consultation with other gentlemen.

Mr. HOOKER of Mississippi. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] will not undertake to fix a time now for the closing of the debate, but will allow it to run on for the present.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, we were advised at the outset of this debate that this was in no sense a political question; and presuming from the nature of the bill as read from the desk that nothing in the shape of a political debate could properly arise in this discussion, it occurred to me I might venture to offer a few suggestions for the consideration of the House.

I believe, sir, that the general principle of this bill is right. There is a troublesome legal question connected with it, respecting which I should be glad to hear from the lawyers of the House. I will allude to that later on.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS], who opened the debate against this bill, opposes it upon the broad ground that money as such is not a proper subject of taxation. He does not rest his argument at all on the ground upon which my friend from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] bases his; but he says that in the State of Pennsylvania, and in many other States of the Union, the people are not in the habit of classing money as property for purposes of taxation; and for that reason he opposes the proposition of this bill to tax greenbacks and other currency issued by the Government.

Now, of course, Mr. Speaker, that question is clearly a question of judgment on the part of this House. Some States do tax money; others do not. In my own State money is a subject-matter of taxation as much as horses and cattle, and, in my judgment, is as properly taxed as are horses and cattle. In fact, so far as taxation is concerned, I can see no distinction in principle between these different kinds of property—whether gold and silver, greenbacks, national-bank currency or what not. So long as the money of the country or the currency of the country is in substance and effect the private property of persons holding it and capable of earning income, I can see no reason why it is not a proper subject of taxation as well as horses and oxen or other property capable of earning income.

But my friend from Pennsylvania says that when a taxpayer has money in the bank lying idle, or has it in his pocket lying idle, it is not earning income; and he argues that income is the only proper subject of taxation. And on that proposition I cordially agree with him. I am sure, sir, that capital should never be encroached upon for the purpose of raising tax; but the earnings of capital should be made to contribute to the support of the Government.

But the fallacy of my friend's argument is this. He says that money in the bank or money in the pocket of the taxpayer is earning no income. Equally true is it that the horse and the ox standing in the barn are earning no income; but both are capable of earning income; and that is the principle upon which both should properly be taxed. In other words, any property capable of earning income is properly taxable, whether at the time of assessment it happens to be in active use or not.

Mr. BROSIUS. Will my friend allow me a suggestion?

Mr. POWERS. With the greatest of pleasure.

Mr. BROSIUS. I said, as the gentleman states, that money in the bank or in my purse is not yielding any return; I also said that other personal property usually, as a rule, is productive, either in money or use; that the horse on my farm is yielding me a use which would otherwise cost me dollars and cents. Therefore the return is in the form of use, not of money.

Mr. POWERS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I hardly think my friend meets the point I was trying to make. I say that the horse, when not in use, is not earning income; but inasmuch as the horse is capable of earning income when put to use, it is a proper subject-matter of taxation. Money in my pocket brings me no income; but my friend from Maine, if he desires to borrow $100, agrees to pay me income for the use of that money. It is therefore capable of being put to a profitable use. There can be no distinction in principle between the two cases.

My friend from Indiana, before he got along to his eulogy upon John Marshall and his criticism upon Thomas Jefferson, based his argument in opposition to this bill upon the ground that you are seeking to tax an agency of the Federal Government, and that this is wrong in principle, and unconstitutional as well.

Well, sir, I quite agree with him that it is unconstitutional as well as unwise to tax the agencies of the Federal Government. That principle is based on sound reasoning, and I doubt if any gentleman on the floor of this House would be found ready to combat such a proposition. But the trouble with the argument of the gentleman is that the legal-tender note is not an agency of the General Government any more than a ten-dollar gold piece is.

If we were called on to tax the United States court-houses, or the custom-houses, or any other public buildings that are employed by the officials of the Government to carry on the work of the Government, I should say that it was unwise and unconstitutional to tax such property. But the greenback is in no sense of the word an agency of the Government. It is a piece of paper issued by the Government to evidence a debt it has contracted. The Government has received a quid pro quo for every greenback it has issued, and it makes no difference whether it was issued in a time of war or in a time of peace.

The essential essence of the instrument is money and nothing else, no matter whether the greenback when it was isued was at a time when the Government was cramped and was compelled to issue it for the purpose of raising money, or whether it was issued in a time of profound peace when there was no burning necessity resting upon it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the greenback, as I have said, is in no sense of the word an agency of the Government to carry on governmental functions. Why, what does he mean by "agency of the Government?"

What do the courts mean when they say you can not tax the agencies of the Federal Government? They mean, sir, the instrumentalities that are essential to the exercise of the functions of government; and nothing more and nothing less. Now, the greenback, as I have said, was issued as a loan. It is an evidence of debt created by the Government for which it has received a consideration. For every twenty-dollar greenback issued they received $20 in gold or its equivalent, and then promised simply to pay the holder of the note the $20 they borrowed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. POWERS. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Suppose when the Government issued the greenback and got gold the States could tax them 50 per cent, does the gentleman believe that the Government could then have received the equivalent value in gold?

Mr. POWERS. I am coming to that in a moment, and that is the troublesome point about the whole matter. I will not overlook it. I am well aware that there is some ground for saying that in 1862 and 1863 the legal tenders were issued as a means to carry on the business of Government, and in that sense were an "agency" of Government. But the moment these legal tenders became private property they became liable like all other private property to respond to the demand of the Government for revenue. A cavalry horse in the hands of the Government and used by it, in war or peace, is an agency employed by the Government for governmental purposes, and while so employed can not be taxed. But if the Government sells that horse to me and I employ it in my business I see no reason why it is not taxable against me.

Now, the Supreme Court of the United States in several instances has declared that the legal-tender notes are money. They have embodied within them all of the essentials of money. In the case reported in 7th Wallace, produced by my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], the case of the supervisors against the bank in the State of New York, Judge Chase, speaking for the whole court, says that these legal-tender notes having the quality of legal tender, which is one of the distinguishing characteristics of money, are money, and then proceeds to discuss the question whether Congress had exempted them from taxation, and the court unanimously held that they had.

So, I think it is clear that the ground upon which my friend from Indiana bases his argument, to wit, that these are the agencies of the Federal Government, and hence that they are nontaxable, is unsound.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit another question if it will not interrupt him?

Mr. POWERS. It will not interrupt me.

Mr. MILLIKEN. The gentleman says that these agencies of the Federal Government were issued and put upon the market in order to raise money. For instance, the Government issued greenbacks after the war to raise money——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. And for clothing during the war.

A MEMBER. The war could not have been conducted without it.

Mr. MILLIKEN (continuing). Now, suppose the States had possessed the right to tax them, when the General Government issued them, as much as they pleased. Would not that fact, that they were taxable, have depreciated them in the market when the Government was putting them on the market? After they get into circulation, that is another question; but before they got into circulation, I ask if that permission had existed whether it would not have materially impaired their value?

Mr. POWERS. I will say in answer to the gentleman that the national-bank bill is just as much an agency of the General Government as the legal-tender note, and still they are taxed and they are not impaired in value in consequence. Indeed national banks were created as a means to carry on the war, as the greenbacks were. Nevertheless both the bills and stock of these banks are taxed by the States. Bank bills are just as good as greenbacks—why not tax both?

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman allow me this suggestion: Even admitting that it is an agency of the Government, whether it may be taxed by the States or not depends upon the will of Congress, just as in the original national-bank act the Supreme Court held that the State of Maryland could not tax the stock or circulation of the bank. That, however, was because of a prohibition embodied in the act itself. Since then, under the existing national-bank law, the States do tax the stock and property of the banks by permission of the General Government. So, in this instance, the States may tax the greenbacks if the act issuing them did not prohibit it; but when Congress withdraws the prohibition, then they become subject to taxation just as any other money or property in the State.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] has approached the very point that was made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] a moment ago, and which I promised to attend to; and inasmuch as that proposition seems to come to the lips of various gentlemen, I refer to it now. The only trouble that I have in my mind with this proposed law is this very question whether the Government, having declared that the greenback was exempt from taxation at the time it was issued—as held in the Supreme Court in 7 Wallace—whether that exemption is a continuing one, and, as we say in law, "runs with the land"—runs with the bill into whosesoever hands it may come?

There is nothing on the face of a greenback that declares its exemption from public taxation. You have to look beyond the instrument itself to find that exemption. You find it in the law of its issue: but in the case of a government bond, on the face of the bond itself notice is carried from the government issuing it that this instrument is exempt from local municipal taxation. There is that difference between the two classes of securities. Now, the troublesome legal question is this: The law having declared that the greenbacks shall be exempt from taxation, the question arises whether it is competent for Congress at a later time to change that law, and thus, to some extent, depreciate the value of that paper?

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for one moment there?

Mr. POWERS. Certainly.

Mr. COX. I recognize the point that the gentleman is making there; but had the Government then declared that the greenbacks were a legal tender for the payment of debts? No; it had not. After the Government issued these notes, and exempted them from taxation, it was decided that they were a legal tender for the payment of debts.

Mr. POWERS. And you argue from that fact that you do not depreciate them by taxing them?

Mr. COX. Yes; that is it.

Mr. POWERS. There is some force in the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee, that so long as the greenback is made a legal tender for the payment of debts, it must go at its face value anyhow, and I think the gentleman is in error in saying that the legal-tender quality was affixed to the greenback after its issue; I think it was made legal tender by the law creating it. But I leave that question for other gentlemen to consider. I throw it out in passing, because it strikes me that there is some force in the point that, the Government having once exempted this class of paper, it is an exemption that travels with the bill wherever it goes.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will that be the case unless there is an element of contract between the Government and the holder of the bill, and can you find any such element as that here?

Mr. POWERS. I will not undertake to answer the gentleman. I prefer to have him discuss the question to-morrow. I am simply trying to raise this question tentatively that the promoters of this bill may place it on solid ground that will stand the test of judicial scrutiny.

Mr. HULICK. Has not the holder of the greenback now a vested right to have that property or money exempt from taxation, as the law originally provided?

Mr. POWERS. I am very much afraid that the gentleman from Ohio has asked a pretty troublesome question. I confess that it is the only question that has given me any anxiety in reference to the propriety of this legislation.

Mr. McCULLOCH. How would it be as to the notes issued after the passage of this bill?

Mr. POWERS. So far as the notes that are issued in substitution for those that are called in and retired, the same exemption would very likely follow that attached to the notes which they took up.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Suppose a State statute provided that there should be exempt from taxation to every head of a family two horses, and suppose that a subsequent Legislature were to pass a law repealing that and subjecting to taxation all horses within the State? Would you hold that that original act was a contract between the citizen and the State?

Mr. POWERS. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, if not, why do you hold that the law of Congress which declares that the greenback is exempt from taxation, constitutes a contract between the citizen and the National Government that can not be altered by a subsequent Congress?

Mr. POWERS. It is very clear as the gentleman suggests that if the Legislature——

Mr. BOATNER. If the gentleman from Vermont will permit me——

Mr. POWERS. Let me get along with this gentleman first. The hypothesis made by the gentleman in front of me, the gentleman from Mississippi, is an exceptionally singular one. If the Legislature passes a law exempting a pair of horses from taxation it is entirely competent for the lawmaking power to repeal that law. That is quite true, but that does not quite meet the point. Suppose the Legislature did pass a law that two horses which have been delivered to my friend from Mississippi by the Government should be forever exempt from taxation. Now, then, I very much question the propriety of a subsequent Legislature reversing the contract they have made.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But this is all greenbacks.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. If the gentleman will allow me, I will state that the State of Michigan, to encourage investments in salt wells and the digging and manufacture of salt, proposed to exempt all property invested in that enterprise from taxation. By reason of this, and induced by it, a great many people invested largely in machinery for the making of salt in the State of Michigan, and the Legislature afterwards repealed the law, and they claimed that they had obtained immunity from taxation by reason of the proposition of the Legislature, accepted by them when they made the investment. In that case the supreme court of Michigan and afterwards the Supreme Court of the United States decided that there was no contract, but that this was simply a declaration of public policy that the Legislature might announce and change as it pleased. Would not that be analogous?

Mr. POWERS. There is some analogy in the case cited by the gentleman from Indiana: nevertheless it has been held if the Legislature charters a corporation and provides that its shares shall be exempt from taxation a contract to that end is thereby made. But the objection I have raised is not the one I am resting upon, because I propose to vote for the bill, but I think the objection is one that should address itself to the careful consideration of the House before this bill becomes a law.

Mr. Speaker, there are a great many reasons which might be urged in favor of the passage of this bill that the lateness of the hour forbids me to dwell upon. In my State I have personal knowledge of many men who have escaped just taxation by converting all their gold and silver and national-bank bills and even their evidences of debt into legal-tender notes on the 1st day of April, the time when the taxes are assessed.

I remember of a case where a wealthy gentleman was accustomed to take all of his mortgage notes and make a pretended sale of them to a bank cashier, receiving in payment for his $30,000 or $40,000 worth of property legal-tender notes, and after the 1st of April had passed, within a week afterwards, all his notes were taken back and all the legal-tender notes were returned to the cashier, and that man escaped from taxation on that property.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Would not that be taxed in the hands of the cashier?

Mr. POWERS. The cashier bought them for the bank and national banks are taxed in other ways.

Now, it can not be said, as was said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS], that State laws are ample to provide all remedies for this class of cases. That may or may not be. I think probably they are; but the point is this: We ought to make it impossible for a man to take our national securities and play that kind of fraud upon local assessments. It seems to me if we remove this idea that the people have got, that legal-tender notes are exempt from taxation, we shall go a long way in bringing upon the assessment rolls the property of men who now go scot free.

Mr. Speaker, there are some features in this bill that I think will need amendment if the bill is to be passed.

Mr. BOATNER. Before the gentleman passes from that point I would like to call his attention to this proposition. It is that at the time when the greenbacks were issued, the time of their redemption was indefinite. It was known that the Government could not redeem them on time. In fact the inability of the Government to maintain specie payments was the cause of the issue of greenbacks. Now, does not the contract feature, to which reference was made awhile ago, follow, that when the Government resumed specie payment and announced that it was ready to redeem any greenbacks in gold on demand—in other words, if a person holds greenbacks, money in his possession, in payment of which he could have obtained gold on demand, is he then entitled to urge this element of contract?

Mr. POWERS. I would hardly like to place the argument upon that ground. I think it is a little fallacious. I think there is a better ground on which it could rest. I do not believe it is sound that because the reason having ceased for this exemption at the time this paper was issued that therefore the immunity becomes worthless.

Mr. BOATNER. But the Government can, without violating any contract obligation, take away the element of value which was necessary to be given him if now that necessity no longer exists.

Mr. POWERS. Well, I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that Congress should try many experiments with the laws of contracts. If there is a contract there, that is the end of this question. If there is no contract there, then it is clearly within the power of Congress to repeal this exemption from taxation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has raised the point that this bill may be construed as compelling the taxation of this class of securities, and it seems to me there is some color in that suggestion. There is no such purpose, I apprehend, upon the part of the gentleman who introduced this bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, as I catch the argument of the gentleman from Vermont it is that the greenbacks by an act of Congress were exempted from taxation, and that therefore there is a contract between the holder of the greenback and Congress, or the Government, that they shall not be taxed. Is not that the point?

Mr. POWERS. That is the point exactly.

Mr. COX. Now does every man who takes a security from a government take it with the recognition of the fact that that government can control it just as it pleases?

Mr. POWERS. If he takes it by a contract relation I think it is exempt from any control on the part of the Government.

Mr. COX. The very power that makes the contract is the superior power to control it. Is not that true?

Mr. POWERS. When the Government becomes a party to a contract it must stand in the attitude of a contracting party. It can not while becoming a party to a contract use its sovereign power to destroy that contract.

Mr. COX. Your point is that when the sovereignty comes down and makes a contract with an individual it leaves the plane of sovereignty and puts itself upon a plane with the other contracting party. Is not that the point?

Mr. POWERS. Certainly; that is the point.

Mr. COX. If that is true how can the Government control any of the contracts which it makes with individuals?

Mr. POWERS. It can not. The point I make is that when the Government makes a contract and becomes a contracting party it is bound by its contract just as the other party is.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I wish to suggest to the gentleman who has this bill in charge that the objection made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] that possibly a construction may be given to the bill which will compel the State to tax these notes is well founded, and I think the difficulty ought to be corrected.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I suggest to my friend that it is proposed to take the original bill instead of the amendment.

Mr. POWERS. Well, whatever may be the form of amendment I think the bill ought to be amended in that respect. Then, Mr. Speaker, I have myself drawn an amendment which I shall now read for information and which at the proper time I shall ask to have adopted. In the proviso to section 1 of this bill is the following language:

Provided, That any such taxation shall be exercised in the same manner and at the same rate that any such State or Territory shall tax other money within its jurisdiction.

Now, the question arises, what is meant by the word "money" in that proviso. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. COX], whom I have consulted, says that he means gold and silver coin. My friend from Indiana [Mr. COOPER], who introduced the bills, says that he means any currency.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Any currency circulating as money.

Mr. COX. I wish to say to my friend from Vermont that my understanding of his position on the question that we were discussing a moment ago is that whenever a Congress makes a contract it binds a future Congress.

Mr. POWERS. I say that when the General Government makes a contract it is bound by it just as much as I am bound by my contract.

Mr. COX. If this Congress makes a contract, do you mean to say that that binds a future Congress?

Mr. POWERS. I do, if it is a contract.

Mr. COX. Then, when this Congress makes a contract that binds future Congresses, how does it happen that this Congress is greater than the others?

Mr. POWERS. It does not happen so; but the other Congress that undertakes to undo the contract is confronted with the fact that there is a vested right existing which it can not disturb either in law or in morals.

Mr. COX. If this Congress can bind one future Congress, why can it not make contracts to bind fifty Congresses?

Mr. POWERS. Well, I will leave that question, Mr. Speaker, for another time. However, I will add now that this Congress can make contracts that will bind fifty subsequent Congresses.

Mr. COX. I see the gentleman's trouble.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I can not speak for anyone on the committee but myself, but as to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Vermont, I do not see any objection, and personally I will not object to the change in the bill that has been suggested. I wish, however, to ask the gentleman whether this proviso does not cure the defect to which he has referred?

Mr. POWERS. Not entirely, I think.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. The way the bill reads now is:

That no United States legal-tender notes circulating as currency shall be exempt from taxation under the authority of any State or Territory: Provided, That any such taxation shall be exercised in the same manner and at the same rate that any such State or Territory shall tax other money within its jurisdiction.

Now, take Pennsylvania for instance——

Mr. POWERS. Let me state my objection, if you please. If my friend from Tennessee [Mr. COX] is correct in saying that "money" here means gold and silver, there may be no trouble about this matter. But supposing that we should have State banks in the near future, as some of you gentlemen on that side of the House are anxious that we should have.

Suppose that the State should levy a 2 per cent tax upon the issues of State banks and a 4 per cent tax upon legal-tender notes, and the question should arise whether that is not unequal taxation.

If you could go into court and satisfy the court that the word "money" referred only to gold and silver, there would be, as will be seen, no disparity. But if it be held that the generic word money included State bank bills there would be unequal taxation. Hence, in order to prevent any confusion, I wish to offer an amendment, inserting after the word "money," in line 10, the words "or currency circulating as money."

The Clerk read the proposed amendment of Mr. POWERS.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. BROSIUS. I do not know that I shall wish to speak upon that amendment; but it is now ten minutes after 5 o'clock, and I should be glad if the vote upon the amendment could go over until to-morrow. I think it is time we should adjourn.

Mr. POWERS. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have an amendment which I wish to offer now in order that it may go into the RECORD. It is to strike out all of section 1 after the enacting clause down to the word "provided" and to insert—

That the consent of the United States is hereby given to any State or Territory to tax United States notes circulating as money within such State or Territory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that one amendment is now pending.

Mr. BROSIUS. I was going to raise that point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman might offer this as a substitute.

Mr. HEPBURN. I simply ask permission to offer it for information. I want it to be published in the RECORD, and to lie over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The amendment, then, will be considered as read for information, and not regarded as pending.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I move that the House adjourn.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 6500) to define and establish the units of electrical measure; when the Speaker signed the same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had adopted without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives authorizing and instructing the Secretary of War to transmit to the House of Representatives reports pertaining to improvement on the Minnesota River in the State of Minnesota.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 1930) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had disagreed to amendments of the House to bills of the following titles, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes upon such bills, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PALMER, Mr. VILAS, and Mr. GALLINGER.

A bill (S. 307) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson; and

A bill (S. 920) to pension Mary Brown, of Berlin, Vt.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DAVEY, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence, for five days, on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask indefinite leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. BRANCH, on account of sickness in his family.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

The motion of Mr. HALL of Missouri was then agreed to: and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. STONE of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a resolution to refer to the Court of Claims the bills (H. R. 1258) for the relief of estate of B. B. Neville, deceased, of Shelby County, Tenn.; (H. R. 1266) for the relief of S. L. Carpenter, of Fayette County, Tenn.; (H. R. 593) for the relief of Mary F. Pollan; (H. R. 1525) for the relief of the estate of Isaac Jones, of Adams County, Miss.; (H. R. 1231) for the relief of E. C. Oakley, administrator of W. H. Neal, deceased, late of Shelby County, Tenn.; (H. R. 980) for the relief of estate of M. H. Battle; which, with the accompany report (No. 1203), was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. LOUD, from the Committee on Claims, reported, with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, the bill (S. 919) for the relief of Eunice Tripler; which, with the accompanying report (No. 1202), was ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and a resolution of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SNODGRASS: A bill (H. R. 7640) to repeal joint resolution authorizing members to certify monthly the amount paid by them for clerk hire—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HEARD: A bill (H. R. 7641) to secure to the public the benefit of improvements on patented articles—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BLACK of Illinois: A resolution to set aside a day for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 397) for the construction of a public building in the city of Chicago—to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. BOWER of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 7642) for the relief of Abraham C. Bryan, of Traphill, N. C.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CATCHINGS: A bill (H. R. 7643) for allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, commonly known as the Bowman act—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CARUTH: A bill (H. R. 7644) for the relief of the estate of William Campbell, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HITT: A bill (H. R. 7645) for the relief of Kate Eberle, an Indian woman—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. IZLAR: A bill (H. R. 7646) for the relief Mrs. Sabina O'Callaghan, administratrix of the estate of Denis O'Callaghan, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WISE: A bill (H. R. 7647) for the relief of R. W. Elsom—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELL of Colorado: Resolutions of the Western Slope Congress, of Colorado, relative to the timber reserves in that State—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, petitions and affidavits of Thomas E. Breckenridge, Judge W. H. Gabbert, and Charles S. Watson, of Telluride, Colo., in re memorial of Thomas E. Breckenridge, asking for remuneration for services in connection with the expeditions of Gen. John C. Frémont—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, memorials of the officials of the States of Missouri, California, and Colorado, asking that Thomas E. Breckenridge, of Colorado, be remunerated for services rendered in connection with the expeditions of Gen. John C. Frémont—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BOEN: Protest of Evangelical Lutheran St. John's Church, of the town of Harrison, county of Kandiyohi, State of Minnesota, by R. H. Biedermann, pastor, and Andrew Lehver, F. Mahn, H. Kahneir, and F. Toesnig, trustees, against changing preamble of the Constitution—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CARUTH: Petition of citizens of Kentucky, in behalf of exempting fraternal societies and organizations from taxation—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the Commercial Club of Louisville, Ky., in favor of an appropriation to aid the Cotton States and International Exposition at Atlanta, Ga.—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of members of Wilkinsburg Conclave, Improved Heptasophs, Wilkinsburg, Pa., against an income tax as affecting beneficiary societies—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KIEFER: Petition of J. R. Maron, B. S. Shreive, Charles Knoll, F. L. Nagler, J. E. Nienhauser, F. A. Schlick, Fred Westphal, John Theitz, J. Horst, E. G. Lund, Hans Carlson, Rev. A. Wold, M. F. Fritze, E. F. Funk, W. A. Weiss, C. Allison, F. M. Arbuckle, James N. Doyle, and many other citizens from the city of St. Paul, Minn., against Government appropriations for sectarian Indian schools—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. McRAE: Petition of Hickey & Harper and Lazarus & Levy, of Camden, Ark., against an increase in the tax on whisky and an extension of the bonded period—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MARSHALL: Petition of 11 citizens of Pulaski City, Va., praying exemption from the income tax as to all fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MORSE: Petition of Messrs. Mitchell, Dexter & Co. and 48 other wholesale dealers of Boston, asking for a duty of at least 3 cents per dozen on imported eggs—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RITCHIE: Petition of E. B. Southard, E. I. Tippett, and 37 others, of Toledo, Ohio, praying for exemption of fraternal beneficiary societies from operation of income-tax law—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. STEVENS: Petition of 16 citizens of Lawrence, Mass., praying that fraternal societies operating upon the lodge system be exempt from taxation in any form—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WANGER: Petition of H. Y. Neiman and other citizens, of Pottstown, Pa., for exemption of fraternal beneficiary societies, etc., from any taxation—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of John Yardley and other citizens of Bucks County, Pa., for exemption of fraternal beneficiary societies, etc., from any taxation—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 6, 1894.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. CALL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was dispensed with.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the regular hour of meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relative to the alleged erroneous survey of the Klamath Indian Reservation; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of 18 citizens of Mount Gilead, Ohio, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provisions of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 48 citizens of Richland County,

Ohio, praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Board of Trade and Transportation of Cincinnati; of the Young Men's Business Club of Cincinnati, and of the Real Estate and Stock Exchange of Cincinnati, all in the State of Ohio, praying for a fast-mail service between Cincinnati and the South; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. POWER. I present a petition of 820 citizens of Flathead County, Mont., in which they respectfully represent that a small appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the Flathead and Pend d'Oreille Rivers between Kalispell, the county seat of Flathead County, Mont., and Jocko, a point on the Northern Pacific Railroad, would make navigable those rivers, all the year round except two months in midwinter, 80 miles. Thirty-five miles of this distance is across Flathead Lake, which requires no expenditure whatever. Thirty miles of the Flathead River needs but a very small expenditure, it being navigable now, with only a few snags to obstruct navigation in low water. The improvement of these rivers would give a southern outlet to all the mines, large towns and markets of Montana, and afford a daily market for the enormous crops annually produced in the Flathead Valley, a rich agricultural country of farming lands, embracing 7,000 square miles. There are cereals and vegetables enough produced in this valley annually to supply the people of the whole State, but which have to rely solely on a home market, because of the great distance by rail to the nearest market to purchase the large surplus. We respectfully ask for a Government survey of these streams between the points hereinabove named, and an estimate of the cost of the improvement, to enable Congress to act intelligently in this behalf.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Mary A. Doyle, widow of Patrick Doyle, late a private in Company D, Second Regiment Potomac Home Brigade, Maryland Volunteer Infantry, praying for an increase of pension from $8 to $20 per month; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY. On behalf of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is unable to be here, I present the petition of Wright Rives, executor of the estate of John C. Rives, praying for compensation for the storage of books and stereotype plates, the property of the United States Government, on the premises of the estate of John C. Rives. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DIXON, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1154) for the relief of the legal representatives of John C. Howe, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CAREY. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2129) to authorize the entry of land for reservoir purposes, to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator will not do that until the morning business is closed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be laid aside until other reports are made.

Mr. CAREY. All right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Wyoming at the conclusion of the morning business.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6937) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6748) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and submit a report thereon. I desire to give notice that on Monday morning I shall call up the bill for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Meanwhile the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6978) to authorize the Pittsburg and Mansfield Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2137) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Osage River, in the State of Missouri, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2055) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Duck River, in Humphreys County, Tenn., reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4611) to amend an act approved January 26, 1893, to authorize the construction of bridges across the Hiwassee, the Tennessee, and Clinch Rivers, in the State of Tennessee, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5601) to authorize the construction of a wagon and foot bridge across the South, or Main, Canadian River at or near the town of Noble, in Oklahoma Territory, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. MARTIN, April 23, 1894, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. ROACH, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. SHOUP on the 15th ultimo, intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3076) granting a pension to George L. Frymire, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. MARTIN on the 29th ultimo, intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by himself March 14, 1894, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it favorably with an amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

REPORT ON FEVERS, ETC.

Mr. GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, providing for printing extra copies of the special report of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia on typhoid and malarial fevers, etc., to report it with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That in addition to the "usual number," there be printed 4,000 extra copies of the special report made by the select committee of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia at its meeting of June 6, 1894, on typhoid and malarial fevers and other preventable diseases, of which 300 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 700 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for the use of the said Society.

The amendment of the Committee on Printing was, at the end of line 1, to insert in parentheses the words "the Senate concurring."

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the report of the Director of the Mint on the production of the precious metals in the United States for the calendar year 1893 be printed, and that 10,000 extra copies be printed, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 4,000 copies for the use of the Director of the Mint.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States (the Senate concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1891 and 1892 there be printed 5,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 10,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 20,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner of Education.

Mr. GORMAN. I submit reports to accompany the resolutions which have just been passed, and I ask that they be printed in the usual form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

PRINTING OF REVENUE BILL.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution, and asked for its present consideration:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 600 copies of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, as passed by the Senate.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the Senator from Maryland if he thinks 600 copies will be enough. There is a great demand for copies.

Mr. GORMAN. What number would the Senator from Connecticut suggest?

Mr. HAWLEY. I should think 1,500 copies ought to be printed.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well; let the resolution be so amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be amended so as to read "1,500 copies," if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PARIS TRIBUNAL OF ARBITRATION.

Mr. GORMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom were referred the joint resolution (S. R. 76) to print the proceedings of the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, held in conformity with the treaty of February 29, 1892, between the United States and Great Britain, and the joint resolution (S. R., 85) to print 16,000 copies of the proceedings of the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris, relating to the fur seals, to report a concurrent resolution as a substitute therefor, and to submit a report thereon. I ask that the concurrent resolution be considered at this time.

The concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed under the direction of the Department of State 6,000 copies of the official proceedings of the Tribunal of Arbitration created in pursuance of the treaty of February 29, 1892, between the United States and Great Britain, including all documents, papers, and agreements presented officially to said tribunal by the agents of said Governments, respectively, and also including the written or printed arguments and oral arguments of the counsel on behalf of each of said Governments made on said hearing at Paris, and the opinions of the arbitrators respectively delivered in said tribunal in conformity with its order admitting the same to constitute a part of said proceedings; of which number 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the use of the Department of State.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that Senate joint resolution No. 76 and Senate joint resolution No. 85 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1196) to pension Mary E. Trickey;

A bill (H. R. 4475) to amend section 4434 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 6979) to amend section 3 of an act entitled, "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States," approved August 1, 1888;

A joint resolution (H. Res. 94) providing for an investigation relative to the work and wages of women and children; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 201) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to continue the employment of certain mechanics and laborers.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 578) granting an increase of pension to Wells Johnson; and

A bill (H. R. 6500) to define and establish the units of electrical measure.

EMPLOYÉS OF NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the joint resolution which has just come from the House of Representatives in regard to the employés of the Navy Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 201) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to continue the employment of certain mechanics and laborers was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to continue until the 31st day of July, 1894, the employment of mechanics and laborers paid from the appropriation "Increase of the Navy: Construction and machinery," whose services are required upon work in progress; and a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for this purpose, such sum to be immediately available: Provided, That the amount which may be expended by the Secretary of the Navy under the authority herein conferred shall be deducted from the amount which may be appropriated for "Increase of the Navy: Construction and machinery," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution, and I will read in this connection a letter from the Secretary of the Navy:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, July 3, 1894.

SIR: I learned from Senator MCPHERSON this morning that the question of including in the thirty-day resolution the expenditures for carrying on the work of the new Navy was discussed in your committee yesterday, and that your committee thought the resolution broad enough to cover these expenditures. I desire to inform you that, before issuing the order suspending the laborers and mechanics employed under "Increase of the Navy," I consulted with the Attorney-General, and he concurred in the construction I put upon the resolution. To save all question in the case, I hope the House will pass a resolution covering these expenditures. I communicated with the Committee on Naval Affairs, because it has charge of naval appropriations.

Respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

The joint resolution we passed was just in the form of all the joint resolutions that have been passed year by year continuing the appropriations, and under which the different Secretaries of the Navy have carried on all kinds of work in their Department. I firmly believe, the Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Navy to the contrary notwithstanding, that the joint resolution gave the Secretary of the Navy full power to go no and expend that sum.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am inclined to defend the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy and the Attorney-General against the opinion of the Senator from Missouri. I think it has been customary when such extending joint resolutions have passed to add to them certain clauses providing for the continuation of certain appropriations, about the continuance of which there would otherwise be a doubt. I think if the Senator will look at the joint resolution which was passed in 1882 he will find that there are various additions to the customary clause, which specially take care of certain work. It is by no means certain that the present Secretary of the Navy and the present Attorney-General, both of them good lawyers, are wrong, and that the Senator from Missouri, who is also a good lawyer, is right. But whatever may be the exact right of the legal question, certainly there ought not to be any objection to the passage of an additional joint resolution if such a one is before the Senate. Is there such a one?

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been laid before the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. CHANDLER. There certainly can be no harm in passing it, whether the Senator from Missouri is right or whether the Attorney-General and the Secretary of the Navy are right. I thought it was only just to those very able and faithful public officers that I should add my opinion to theirs, although by so doing we put ourselves against the legal opinion of the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GEORGE. At the request of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, I have given some attention to the preparation of a bill upon the subject of the arbitration of disputes between employés of railroad companies and the companies themselves. Whilst I do not dare hope that the bill is perfect, I think it contains the germ, possibly, of the settlement of that troublesome question. In pursuance of that object, I introduce a bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 2177) to amend "An act to create a board of arbitration or commission for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate and territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés," approved October 1, 1888, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That whenever a proposition for arbitration shall be made by the employés of any railroad corporation as contemplated and provided for in section 1 of the act mentioned in the title of this act, and the same shall not be accepted by the said corporation, then it shall not be lawful for any United States court or judge to grant any injunction against said employés or any of them or to make any order requiring or authorizing any United States marshal to control, or in any manner interfere with, the conduct of said employés or any of them.

SEC. 2. That whenever the management of the affairs of any railroad corporation shall be in the hands of a receiver appointed by any United States court or judge, and there shall be a difference or controversy between him and the employés of said railroad company under his charge, as contemplated and described in said first section of said act, and the said employés shall offer to submit said difference or controversy to arbitration as provided for in said act, it shall be his duty to accept the same and to make selection of an arbitrator as provided for in said act, with the advice of the court.

SEC. 3. That an obstruction to the running of a railroad train growing out of any strike by the employés thereof shall be held and considered as an obstruction to carrying the United States mail within the meaning of the laws prohibiting such obstruction only when said train shall have attached thereto no car on which passengers or other freight are carried or intended to be carried.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 2178) to place Romeo Friganza on the retired list; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2179) for the relief of Addison M. Copen; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2180) for the relief of Thomas P. Morgan, jr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2181) relating to the pay and retirement of mates in the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MILLS introduced a bill (S. 2182) to provide for the selection of a site for the establishment of a navy-yard and dry dock on or near Sabine Pass, in the State of Texas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 2183) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Thomas Lee; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 2184) for the relief of Calvin Jones; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2185) to provide for the settlement of controversies between certain railway companies and their employés, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2186) for the relief of the widow and legal representatives of the late Orsemus B. Boyd, captain in Eighth United States Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BATE introduced a bill (S. 2187) for the relief of the Presbyterian Church of Loudon, Loudon County, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 2188) to authorize additional allotments to the Seneca Indians in the Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HUNTON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2189) to regulate Canal street, etc., in the city of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JARVIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHOUP submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Depredations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF RAILWAY LINES, ETC.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators, no more than two of whom shall be members of the same political party, shall be appointed to investigate and report, by bill or otherwise, into the necessity and authority for Government ownership and control of the railway, telegraph, and telephone lines in the United States, and especially into the relation existing between such railway, telegraph, and telephone lines and their employés, and what legislation, if any, is necessary to prevent strikes by and lockouts of the employés thereof in the future, and to bring about a more equitable, just, and permanent system of employment and wages.

Said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, employ a clerk and stenographer, report the testimony and evidence taken by it, and may act by subcommittee or otherwise.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be printed and go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, at the request of the mover.

LIST OF CLAIMS.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate a list of all claims allowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department since January 1, 1894, not heretofore reported to Congress.

INDIAN ENGAGEMENTS.

Mr. LINDSAY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to furnish for the use of the Senate, on or before the 1st day of August, 1894, a statement showing fully and in detail all expeditions and engagements had by the military forces of the United States with hostile bands or tribes of Indians for the period beginning January 1, 1850, and ending June 30, 1894, showing, whenever practicable, the tribe or band engaged or operated against, and submitting with said statement copies of all correspondence and reports relating to the said expeditions against and engagements with the said Indian bands or tribes; and that said Secretary, at as early a date as practicable, shall also furnish to the Senate a similar statement with copies of such correspondence and reports, as to all expeditions against and engagements with Indian bands or tribes from the foundation of the Government up to the 1st day of January, 1850.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. CAREY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2129.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information if there be no objection.

Mr. CALL. I have the floor upon a question of privilege, but I am willing to yield to the Senator from Wyoming if his bill does not interfere with my right to the floor and will not give rise to any debate.

Mr. CAREY. It will not cause any debate, I assure the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALL. I think the Senator had better wait a little while before he calls up his bill.

Mr. CAREY. Does the Senator from Florida prefer to go on at this time?

Mr. CALL. I prefer to go on.

Mr. CAREY. With the understanding that I can call up the bill when he concludes I give way for the present.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, it has become the custom for newspaper correspondents to falsify the records and to slander the character of the members of this body, and we permit the press associations to libel falsely and infamously the men who constitute this body. They have no hesitation in imputing indecency, indecorum, dishonesty, and corruption to its individual members. Men without consideration in the country, without moral qualities, the mere semblance of men, without recognition anywhere, are permitted to enter into the galleries here and through the associated press of the country to disseminate from one end to the other their infamous, cowardly, libelous, and false attacks upon members of this body. It has become a great evil. The interests of the Republic, the interests of religion, of decency, of manhood, and of character demand that this should be stopped, and that the criminals who are guilty of it should be consigned to the dens of infamy and punishment where such men properly belong.

Mr. President, I wish to bring to the notice of the Senate a libelous statement, and to prove conclusively the truth of the statement which I shall here make in reference to it and the miserable creature who gave currency to it.

On the 22d of June there appeared in the Florida papers, and it was extensively copied through the Associated Press of the United States in every form of caricature, an infamously false and libelous statement, which I denounce here, and shall present the proof to show its falsehood, attributing to me indecorum of conduct and manners. After sixteen years of service in this body, in which no member will undertake to say that any one has surpassed me in the careful observance of the proprieties of the Senate and decorum of conduct here, there appeared this piece in the newspapers:

The senior Senator certainly attained the height of vulgar boorishness and succeeded in thoroughly disgusting even those in the Senate who are fairly familiar with his vagaries and idiosyncracies.

His costume just at present is very stunning and costly, among the articles of apparel he seems to delight most in being a pair of glaring yellow shoes. These he wore into the Senate to-day. He came creaking into the Chamber about noon, seated himself calmly at his desk, and with easy nonchalance removed his shoes and calmly elevated his unsightly blue-stockinged feet to the desk in front of him.

This action caused a shiver of disgust to run through the entire assemblage and through the galleries. It was an act of vulgarity unprecedented in any body of gentlemen, and was a direct insult to the State that sent him to the Senate.

FACED ABOUT.

Presently Senator CALL swung round in his chair and elevated his feet to the desk in the rear of his own. This desk was occupied at the time by the books and papers of Senator KYLE of South Dakota, who was delivering a speech upon the income tax. Mr. KYLE noticed the ungentlemanly and coarse action on the part of Senator CALL, and immediately left his own desk and walked to the center aisle, where he continued his speech. A number of the Senators in CALL'S vicinity also moved away, several of them going over to the other side of the Chamber to avoid the unpleasant notoriety of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. President, that is an infamous falsehood. The man who conceived it knew it to be a falsehood, and it was told for a malicious and political purpose. Let us see what is the evidence of that; let us see if there is anything more than my statement to sustain the truth of the assertion I make:

UNITED STATES SENATE, Washington, D. C., June 29, 1894.

We occupy seats in the Senate near Senator CALL, where he is within our observation all the time. We were present on the day of the newspaper statement of his exposure of his feet without shoes on his desk. The statement is untrue, and nothing of the kind occurred.

No one in the Senate is more decorous and observant of propriety in his conduct than Senator CALL. We believe every member of the Senate would make this statement.

JAMES H. KYLE—

Who this most mendacious creature alleges to have been disgusted with this indecent conduct of mine—

WILLIAM B. BATE,
WILLIAM V. ALLEN,
J. L. M. IRBY,
THOMAS J. JARVIS,
EDWARD MURPHY, JR.,
W. N. ROACH,
PATRICK WALSH.

Mr. President, what should be done with so infamous a character, who has openly and notoriously and falsely slandered a member of this body by a falsehood without any foundation whatever? What is the object? This man never crossed my path, nor I his. He does not belong to the State of Florida. I do not know him. I should not know him if I were to see him. What prompts him to this infamous falsehood? He is paid, he is hired to slander and falsify the character of men by those who have an object in it.

But, Mr. President, nothing of the kind occurred. There was no foundation for the statement. I came into the Senate with a wounded and lacerated foot, and, carefully avoiding exposure, in the concealment and privacy of this desk here I slightly removed one of my shoes in consequence of its swollen condition, for a few moments, carefully concealing my foot.

This man, whoever he may be, should be branded as a falsifier by a resolution of this body, and I shall introduce a resolution for that purpose.

Mr. President, that is not all. Why should such an outrageous charge be made? What wit, what character, what manhood in attempting to assassinate the character of a Senator and represent him falsely all over the country as conducting himself in an indecent and indecorous manner, appearing here and putting his feet upon his desk? If the American people are content that those who are associated with the press should be known as common liars, without having any respect for truth or manhood or courage, let it be so. The great American people have a contempt for a man who is guilty of such conduct.

But that is not all. This thing has a motive in it. This assassin, whoever he may be, is hired to assassinate the character of men. Let us go a little further. I have read the statement of all the Senators around me here in regard to this incident. I wish to follow this thing up. On the 3d of July, presumably from the same person, there appeared a statement, which I shall read, in a corporation newspaper established in the State of Florida, a professedly Democratic paper, established by three corporation men, the most aggressive Republicans in the United States professedly, and the most aggressive Democrats and also Populists, having no party connection or convictions, but seeking only to destroy a public man who has the character and courage to maintain his convictions and defend the rights of the people. It has money behind it.

Half the senators in Florida are to be elected this year who will vote for the Senator who shall succeed me; and this newspaper, as on a former occasion, has its columns full of this falsehood and villification of me; and here is another which I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate, not for my sake alone, nor my vindication only, but that I believe it due to the dignity of this body and to its sense of duty to the American people that it should brand as slanderous and libelous the men who maliciously invent falsehoods, who are hired to do so, and that it should exclude them from this gallery for the reason that by the deliberate judgment of this Senate they are professional falsifiers. I have here an article headed, "Now, what will CALL do?" It contains this statement:

WASHINGTON, July 2.

Some time ago the Citizen published in its Washington dispatches the statement that Senator CALL had on file at the Treasury Department an indorsement of Joseph Gannon for the position of supervising inspector of steam vessels for the third inspection district.

After the publication of this statement Senator CALL visited the Treasury Department and saw Mr. Carlisle, to whom he stated that he desired to withdraw his indorsement of Mr. Gannon.

There is a statement that is an infamous falsehood. I have never been to the Treasury Department to see and have never seen Mr. Carlisle on this subject, and never made such a statement. Why this falsehood in regard to me, which is stated as the truth by this man, whoever he may be? I denounce it as an infamous and malicious falsehood. I have never had a word with Mr. Carlisle upon the subject or with any other official of the Treasury Department. I deny the statement, and I challenge the proof of it. But that is not all. I have never withdrawn any indorsement of Mr. Joseph Gannon for steam inspector. I have never indorsed Mr. Joseph Gannon for steam inspector of the third district, and I will prove this falsehood and the conspiracy upon which it rests by the records of the Treasury Department and expose this man to all persons who love manhood and courage and honesty, and detest and despise a miserable corrupt creature, who hires himself out to assassinate the character of other men.

At this visit Mr. CALL endeavored to explain his indorsement of two men for the same position by stating that he did not know when he indorsed Mr. Gannon at Senator Butler's request that Mr. Gannon was an applicant for the same place for which Mr. Vogel had already been indorsed by the majority of the Florida delegation.

That is another lie. Every sentence in this statement is a falsehood.

This was a weak excuse, but it was better than none. The mischief had already been done, however, and Capt. Vogel's chances had been ruined by the split indorsement of Senator CALL.

BEGAN TO PREVARICATE ABOUT IT.

Shortly after the publication in the Citizen of this story Senator CALL began to hear from the friends of Capt. Vogel, and he was severely arraigned for his desertion of Capt. Vogel and his cowardly effort to curry favor with a fellow Senator at the expense of his Florida friends. After receiving a number of letters that were of a tone to make the senior Senator believe that summer was really with him at last, he resorted to the expedient of denying his indorsement of Gannon. At least that is the only construction to be placed upon the remarkable telegram sent by the Senator to Jacksonville. In that telegram he says:

"The statement in reference to my visiting the Treasury Department is an infamous lie. There is not a word of truth in it."

The senior Senator is evidently cornered, for that dispatch may mean anything in the world. It is not at all a denial of the statement that he had betrayed his friend and had indorsed another man for the same place. It is simply a denial of the truth of some story about his visiting the Treasury Department, and as usual the senior Senator is not explicit. On this occasion he is purposely ambiguous. Not knowing just how much truth could be brought against him, he preferred to shield himself behind an evasive contradiction of nothing in particular.

HIS STATEMENT IN THE BANNER.

Getting away from Jacksonville, Senator CALL becomes more courageous, and in a small county paper called the Ocala Banner he recently published a communication in which he says:

"I have not recommended anybody for the position of supervising inspector, with the exception of Capt. Leo Vogel."

In making this statement the senior Senator from Florida is guilty of a direct prevarication. Moreover, he has so faultily covered up his tracks that the records against him are still in existence.

The Citizen's Washington correspondent called at the Treasury Department to-day, in company with a Southern Representative, who had access to the papers on file, and the documents in the case of the supervising inspector of steam vessels were secured and carefully examined.

The statements made in these dispatches were verified. Filed with the application of Gannon was a typewritten indorsement stating that the signers were all acquainted with Mr. Gannon; that they were convinced from his record as local inspector at Charleston that he would make a capable, efficient, and trustworthy supervising inspector, and that they therefore asked his appointment.

SAID HE WOULD, BUT DID NOT.

This typewritten introduction occupied half a page of legal cap and lauded the Charleston man for his excellent qualities, which were described as fitting him especially for the position for which he was an applicant. This indorsement is signed by Senators BUTLER, IRBY, GORDON, and WILKINSON CALL. At the bottom of the page is a footnote, stating that Senator IRBY withdrew his indorsement of Gannon, but there is nothing to show that Senator CALL had ever withdrawn his indorsement, although he stated to Secretary Carlisle that it was his intention to do so.

Mr. President, that statement is an infamous falsehood, and I ask the Senate if a man is to be permitted to occupy a place here in the Press Gallery convicted, as I convict this man, of a willful and malicious falsehood, intended to destroy the character of a Senator.

What are the facts in regard to it? Fortunately truth asserts itself, and when a man becomes a notorious liar, the truth denounces him and exhibits itself.

Before the last inauguration of Mr. Cleveland, before Mr. Vogel had ever become an applicant for this office, early in the month of March, Mr. Gannon had filed his application. I have the record here, and I have the application which was filed, with the names of several Senators upon it, for Mr. Gannon's appointment, and my name is one of them. It bears the file date of March 2, 1893.

It had escaped my memory, though I knew I had never indorsed Gannon or anyone else for the position for which Capt. Vogel was an applicant. What does the record show? Here is the letter of Assistant Secretary Curtis, of the Treasury Department, written at that time, on the 24th of March, 1893, stating that this application of Gannon's, to which this miserable creature refers, bearing my signature as the evidence of my falsehood, is intended to be for the local inspector at Charleston and not for the position of supervising inspector of the third district; and yet this man, professing to have examined the papers and to have seen them, publishes here this infamous libel, imputing this falsehood to me; and here is the letter of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury instructing the application to be considered, as it was stated to me, for local inspector, and not for the position of supervising inspector.

What does the Senate think of the man who convicts himself by his own evidence, professing to have seen that paper and yet publishing such a falsehood as that I had falsely stated that I had never recommended anybody but Vogel?

Gannon an applicant for local inspector at Charleston March 2, 1893, although his paper states that he was applying for inspector of the third district; letters of the Secretary of the Treasury, March 24, 1893, stating that his application was for local inspector; Vogel applying on March 23, 1893, for inspector of the third district; my recommendation continuously made and renewed until May 9, 1894, and this man stating that he had seen the papers and asserting that I had abandoned Vogel for Gannon, who was an applicant for local inspector at Charleston only.

What has the Treasury Department to do with this conspiracy? What have the officials of the Department to do with it? This paper has been buried away, but it seems to have been hunted up. I shall read the letter of Mr. Curtis, which I have here, for the information of the Senate, and also a letter from a member of the House of Representatives.

The matter had passed from my memory; it was before the inauguration of the President, and the Senators asked me to join in the indorsement. I said, "If he is an applicant for the position of local inspector at Charleston I will cheerfully agree with you;" but it seems the application was headed for "supervising inspector," which had escaped my notice, but their assertion was carried out by the immediate filing of the letter of the member of Congress directing the application to be made for the local inspectorship, and the following is the letter of the Assistant Secretary, explaining, as they had stated to me, that the application was for the local inspectorship; and yet this infamous creature, knowing that fact, published throughout the world, through the Associated Press, this positively and absolutely false statement, with the papers before his eyes and exhibiting the falsehood. What does Mr. Curtis say? Here is his letter:

MARCH 24, 1893.

SIR: Referring to Department letter of the 23d instant, forwarded to you for your consideration by the board ordered to convene to select for the district a suitable person for appointment as local inspector for the district of Charleston, in connection with the papers of R. H. Berry, of Wilmington, N. C., an applicant for that position, I herewith transmit the application and indorsements of W. H. Gannon, also an applicant for same position. You will observe that the position to which Mr. Gannon's papers refer is that of supervising inspector of steam vessels for the third district, but it is understood that Mr. Gannon would be glad to succeed Mr. Taglio as local inspector of hulls, and you are directed to consider his papers in connection with said vacant local inspectorship.

Respectfully,

W. E. CURTIS, Secretary.

Mr. JNO. W. OAST,
Supervising Inspector of Steam Vessels, Third District.

Here is the letter of the member of Congress upon which the direction was made:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
DIVISION OF APPOINTMENTS,
Washington, D. C., May 24, 1893.

DEAR SIR: I am very anxious that Peter Taglio should give place at the earliest day possible to W. H. Gannon as inspector of hulls for the district of Charleston, S. C.

This is the matter of which I spoke to you about ten days ago.

The inspectorship of boilers might wait a while.

Please have such action taken as will secure Gannon's appointment as soon as you can, and oblige, yours, sincerely, etc.,

W. H. BRAWLEY.

Hon. WILLIAM E. CURTIS, etc., etc.

Mr. President, what shall be done with willful, malicious, convicted libelers and slanderers hired to destroy the character of members of this body? What does this man know of Capt. Leo Vogel and my relations with him? Here is the record: The application made for the local inspectorship of Charleston, in which I joined the Senators from South Carolina; and this man in this paper charges me with having traded with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] for his influence for the rejection of the nomination of Wilson, who was not nominated for more than twelve months after this occurrence—another malicious falsehood.

SIR: I have the honor to hand you herewith a petition for the appointment of myself as supervising inspector of steam vessels for the third district.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM H. GANNON.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Secretary of the Treasury.

We, the undersigned, respectfully request at the hands of the honorable Secretary of the Treasury the appointment as above stated, and would recite the long experience and efficient service as local inspector of the Charleston district under the former Democratic Administration. Capt. Gannon, having been master of steam vessels for twenty-five years, is especially qualified for the service, capable in every particular, and we believe his appointment would prove in every way wise and desirable.

Respectfully,

M. C. BUTLER.	WILLIAM H. BRAWLEY.
JOHN L. M. IRBY.	RUFUS E. LESTER.
J. B. GORDON.	S. B. ALEXANDER.
WILKINSON CALL.	E. E. MEREDITH.

Indorsement: SAVANNAH, GA., March 2, 1893.

This man Gannon was out of the way entirely, nobody recommending him for anything; a year having elapsed, and this newspaper writer charges me with having traded this indorsement, made before the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland, with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] for his vote in opposition to the confirmation of Mr. Wilson, nominated more than a year after Gannon's applying for the local inspectorship at Charleston.

But what has Capt. Vogel's recommendation by me to do with my veracity and a charge of falsehood against me upon this state of things, when I have never said that I had abandoned Vogel? That was the application, that was the meaning, that was the averment—that I had abandoned my friend. Now, what is the record?

Capt. Vogel's application was filed on the 23d of March, 1893, after the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland, and within less than twenty days; while the other man filed his application before the inauguration, and it was before the Secretary at that particular date for the local inspectorship, and here is the first movement I made.

MARCH 23, 1893.

Capt. Leo Vogel's application for this office is filed with the indorsement and recommendation for its favorable consideration by

WILKINSON CALL.

That is the record of the Treasury Department. What next?

On the 23d of March Capt. Vogel is recommended by J. L. M. IRBY.
On the 25th March Vogel is recommended by T. T. Stockton and WILKINSON CALL. On the 8th May by Senator CALL in personal interview with the President. Thurber, private secretary; slip on file.
On 24th April, 1893, by Senator CALL.
On 9th April, 1893, by Senator CALL.
On 2d May, 1894, by Senator CALL.
On 9th May, 1894, by Senator CALL.

And yet this man goes to the Treasury Department and deliberately falsifies the record. Is such a man to be respected by his press associates? Are honor and truth and manhood to find no consideration, but libel and slander and imputations of indecent conduct to be made upon Senators?

Mr. President, here are the records. They are conclusive; they prove this falsehood; they prove that there is no foundation whatever for the statements; that they are malicious, and made for a purpose. Why are they made? Because powerful interests assail me, and the men who are advertised to hire out for professional libelers and slanderers are paid by these powerful persons, who are seeking to deprive the people of the State of Florida of the ownership of the lands which the law has given to them, and impose a tribute of twenty or thirty million dollars to be paid into their pockets by virtue of frauds committed against the people. That is the inciting motive.

These people do not know me: they have never crossed my path, nor I theirs; they know none of my people; they know nothing of Capt. Vogel, my devoted friend, a brave and gallant officer, a man from the bosom of the people, who before the mast became a master sailor and sailed upon every sea, a man conversant with every form of maritime knowledge, skill, and experience; a man who served upon the confederate ships, the Alabama and the Florida, with great distinction, and a man everywhere capable of commanding ships, either naval or commercial, and who, I am proud to say, is my devoted friend, and to whose face no man dare slander me. Mr. President, Capt. Vogel is better than a hundred millions of generations of such libelers and slanderers.

What next? What shall be done further? Shall we sit here and be represented as coming into this Chamber in indecent exposure? Shall these miserable creatures, cowardly, false libelers, be permitted to make use of this Chamber? The press is a noble association. My friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH], without reproach, a man of learning, a man of a high sense of honor, and many others are like him, have been correspondents here. Shall they permit their records to be polluted by convicted libelers and assassins of character? What interpretation can be placed upon it? Here is the record. There is no escape from it.

Mr. President, here is the statement which I have explained; here is an accusation against me, which is a falsehood, of abandoning friends, of playing double with different men, professing to be based upon the records of the Treasury Department. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the perpetrator of the false and slanderous statements relating to the Senator from Florida, Mr. CALL, be excluded from the Press Gallery of the Senate on the ground that he is a professional liar and libeler, and that his name and newspaper connections be ascertained by the Sergeant-at-Arms and reported to the Senate, to be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of this resolution.

Mr. President, the Senate of the United States is a body of respectable men, who come here with the confidence and indorsement of the people. The press association of this country is a body of respectable men who are all presumed to be honest and honorable lovers of the truth, rather than of falsehood, lovers of decorum and of propriety, and not of those who hire themselves out to defame and blacken the character of virtuous men and women.

Such characters are to be condemned by all right-loving people, whether Senators or members of the press. We must establish some mark by which the deliberate judgment of the Senate in case of clear conviction of newspaper men of dishonorable, false, and unworthy conduct shall be branded upon them with the expression of our disapproval.

I ask that the resolution may be printed and go over to be hereafter considered by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over and be printed.

Mr. CALL subsequently said: I am informed by Senators here, who concur with me as to the gravity of the offense and the propriety of the Senate taking some action in regard to it, that it is better that the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Rules, and I therefore make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. TELLER. There is a House bill on the table to provide for allotting to the Southern Ute Indians lands in severalty. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] desires to offer some amendments to the bill, which will also be referred to the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 6792) to disapprove the treaty heretofore made with the Southern Ute Indians to be removed to the Territory of Utah, and providing for settling them down in severalty where they may so elect and are qualified, and to settle all those not electing to take lands in severalty on the west 40 miles of present reservation, and in portions of New Mexico, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, in the absence of objection.

Mr. VILAS. I desire to offer certain amendments to the bill. I prepared them with a view to discuss them this morning, but by an arrangement between the Senator from Colorado and myself the bill is referred. I offer the amendments and ask that they be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered, without objection.

FLORIDA JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President——

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent (I will move if necessary) that the bill (H. R. 51) to change the boundaries of the judicial districts of the State of Florida may be taken up for hearing after the conclusion of the bill the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] desires to call up.

Mr. PLATT. Do I understand the Senator from Florida to ask unanimous consent to call up the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the request of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PLATT. I know the Senator has for a long time desired to get consideration for the bill, but the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS], I believe, opposes the bill, and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has desired to say something upon it. Both those Senators are absent this morning. I do not think the Senator ought to press the bill in a thin Senate in their absence. I hope he will let it go over.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent that on next Friday the bill may be made the regular order and taken up for consideration.

Mr. PLATT. I think the Senator should wait until the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Delaware are here.

Mr. PASCO. This is purely a local bill, and I can not think it necessary to wait for the Senator from Delaware in order to determine what are to be the boundary lines of the judicial districts of the State of Florida. I hope that the request of my colleague will be granted and the bill will be taken up this morning. It is a matter of great importance to the people of Florida. It has been standing over for weeks while half a dozen or more bills of a similar character have been passed without objection. I can not conceive that it is necessary to wait for the Senator from Delaware to express his views as to what shall be the boundary lines of the Florida judicial districts.

Mr. PLATT. In the absence of the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Massachusetts, I feel I ought to object this morning.

Mr. CALL. My colleague is entirely right, and I will move, if there be a Senate here, to take the bill up when the pending bill of the Senator from Wyoming is disposed of. I wish to state that I would not desire to deprive the Senator from Delaware of a hearing if it were important for him to have one. I am satisfied that the bill ought to pass, and that it will pass. It is in the interest of everybody there, the officers of the courts and the people of the districts, and the business of the courts. I believe that when the Senator from Connecticut fully understands the case he himself will consent to it. I shall make the motion I have indicated if there be a Senate here.

LAND FOR RESERVOIRS.

Mr. CAREY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2129) to authorize the entry of land for reservoir purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 1, line 8, after the word "use," to insert "at $2.50 per acre."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to know from the Senator from Wyoming whether this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CAREY. I believe it is a unanimous report. Every member of the committee has seen and examined the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill involves some pretty important questions. If it be a unanimous report of the committee I shall not object. If it is not a unanimous report I shall object to its consideration.

Mr. CAREY. It has the approval of the chairman of the committee. If the Senator desires an explanation I can make one that I think will be entirely satisfactory to the Senator.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not interpose an objection.

Mr. PASCO. What is the number of the bill and its Calendar number?

Mr. MORGAN. Let the bill be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read as amended.

Mr. PASCO. I ask for the Calendar number, that I may examine the bill for myself. I do not ask that it be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill is not on the Calendar. It was just reported this morning.

Mr. HARRIS. It has no order of business.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a Senate bill, which has just been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, and is not on the Calendar. Now, let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct. The reading of the bill is called for. The Secretary will read the bill as amended.

The Secretary read the bill as amended as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any citizen of the United States, or any association of citizens of the United States, or any ditch or water company, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, shall have the right to purchase lands suitable for reservoir purposes, not to exceed one quarter section of unoccupied public lands not reserved for public use, at $2.50 per acre: Provided, That when lands so purchased are within a mining district such lands shall be considered mineral lands, and the patent to such lands shall not authorize the purchaser to extract mineral therefrom, but all such mineral shall be reserved to the United States, which reservation shall be inserted in such patent.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall insert in the patent a provision that unless the land so sold shall, within three years from the date of entry, be utilized for reservoir or water-storage purposes, that such land shall revert to the United States. That the privilege herein granted shall not be construed to interfere with the control of the water for irrigation or other purposes under authority of the respective States and Territories, and this provision shall be inserted in the patent.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLEN. I am inclined to think the bill ought to be amended so far as it prescribes a maximum price for the land. As I recollect the reading of the bill it provides that the land shall in no case be sold for a greater sum than $2.50 an acre. Let that portion of the bill be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

That any citizen of the United States, or any association of citizens of the United States, or any ditch or water company, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, shall have the right to purchase lands suitable for reservoir purposes, not to exceed one quarter section of unoccupied public lands not reserved for public use, at $2.50 per acre.

Mr. ALLEN. I move to strike out the words "two dollars and fifty cents per acre" and insert "at such price as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out, in line 8, the words "at two dollars and fifty cents per acre" and insert "at such price as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe."

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to add at not less than some fixed sum.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the Senator put in whatever sum he sees fit.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest "not less than $2.50 per acre."

Mr. CAREY. If the Senator will permit me just one minute, I think I will remove any objection he may have. The price has been fixed in the bill at the double minimum—$2.50 per acre. It limits the amount that any one person or association can purchase to 160 acres. The bill expressly provides that the land can only be used for one purpose—to store water upon it. Under the provisions of the bill the party does not even obtain the mineral in the land, if there is any, and in case he fails to use it for reservoir purposes the land reverts to the Government of the United States, notwithstanding the party has paid $2.50 per acre for it.

When some poor fellow wants to buy 160 acres or 80 acres or 40 acres for reservoir purposes, I do not see how you are going to fix it so as to have the land appraised by the Secretary of the Interior. The bill is in the form in which such bills are usually passed.

Mr. TELLER. There is no reason why the land should be appraised.

Mr. CAREY. It is now appraised by law.

Mr. TELLER. It is appraised by law at $1.25 per acre, or if it is mineral land at $2.50 an acre for one class and $5 for another. The mineral is specially excepted.

Mr. CAREY. If it is timber or stone land it is $2.50 per acre.

Mr. TELLER. Timber or stone land is $2.50 per acre. In the mountain regions there are a large number of small natural reservoirs, 40, 60, 80, and 100 acres. They are rarely ever larger than that. There are a great number of farmers in the country, which I in part represent, who have been in the habit of going into the mountains themselves and building reservoirs on public lands. There is a feeling of insecurity in that, and they desire to have title. The reservoirs are to aid them in furnishing the water supply during the season in which they irrigate. They fill the reservoirs in the early part of the year, and then when the irrigating season comes on they are allowed to run the water into the streams and down into the ditches.

A great number of reservoirs will be built in the mountain regions by the local ditch associations in Colorado and other irrigating States if they are allowed to do so. There can be no monopoly in it. It is specifically provided that the States shall still have the same control over it as over other public lands. In the State of Colorado at least—I can speak of no other—there is no monopoly in the ditching of water. The State has taken charge of it and fixed the price at which water can be sold. But in these cases the most of it will be done by an association of farmers who own the reservoirs as they own the ditches, and the water will not be sold at any price; it will be furnished by the men who build the reservoirs.

Mr. POWER. The Senator from Colorado has stated the situation in Montana. It will be a great convenience to the farmers in the valley if they can build reservoirs on lands where they can secure the right and in that way secure their investment.

Mr. ALLEN. The insertion of the amendment that the land shall be sold at a price to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and not less than $2.50 per acre, it occurs to me, covers everything that the Senators from the mountain States can ask. If there should be an attempt to establish reservoirs on land worth more than $2.50 per acre, land worth $5 or $10 or $20 an acre, then the power ought to be lodged in the Secretary of the Interior to fix a price above $2.50.

Mr. CAREY. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska to permit an amendment to go in providing that the land shall not be sold for less than $1.25 per acre. I do not think any of it is worth more than $1.25. The amendment of the committee was inserted to remove the objection of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], the chairman of the committee, who thought it would be better to fix the price at $2.50 per acre.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the amendment read "at a price to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, which shall not be less than $2.50 per acre."

Mr. CAREY. Let it read "$1.25 per acre."

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest as a compromise to insert "not less than $2 an acre;" so as to give the Secretary of the Interior authority to fix a higher price than $2.50.

Mr. ALLEN. I agree to that.

Mr. CAREY. I can not resist the appeal of the Senator from Tennessee. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the clause be read as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "use," in line 8, "at such price as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, at not less than $2 per acre."

Mr. ALLEN. The word "at" should go out.

Mr. PLATT. You do not want the word "at."

Mr. ALLEN. It should read "at such price as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, not less, however, than $2 per acre."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

FLAGS OF TWENTY-SECOND MICHIGAN REGIMENT.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2070) to provide for the restoration to the State of Michigan of two flags carried by the Twenty-second Michigan Infantry Volunteers and now in the War Department.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any report in that case?

Mr. HAWLEY. There is a careful report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to have the report read?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is of some length. The General of the Army has given personal attention to this matter. I will state the case briefly. There have been several precedents, where applications by regiments or States were made for the delivery to them of flags held in the War Department. The flags in some cases were flags which were captured by the Confederates, and again upon the subjugation of the Confederate forces restored to Federal possession, but not to the regiments themselves. In cases where there was nothing specially brilliant in the behavior of the regiment at that time or afterwards, the War Department has not favored the restoration.

An examination has been made in this case, and the distinct approval of the General of the Army is among the papers. The regiment was at the crucial test in the battle of Chickamauga. I presume there are those here who were witnesses of some of the interesting events on that occasion. The regiment especially distinguished itself. At the time when the Union line was broken the regiment suffered heavily. I believe it was at that point that it lost its flags; but it redeemed itself before night. Indeed, it did not need any redemption at the time, for it was sacrificing itself at a very important point.

All that appears at length in the report. The original proposition was to restore the flags to the regiment, but in my judgment that is all wrong. They belong to the State. If the State chooses to give them to the regimental association—my State will not do it—that is their lookout.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPHINE F. KELTON.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 879) granting a pension to Josephine F. Kelton, widow of Brig. Gen. John C. Kelton, late adjutant general United States Army.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committe on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Josephine F. Kelton, widow of Brig. Gen. John C. Kelton, late Adjutant-General United States Army, and pay her a pension of $50 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNIVERSITY OF UTAH.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to consider a House bill which has been favorably reported from the Committee on Military Affairs without amendment. It is the bill (H. R. 3135) granting to the University of Utah a site off the public domain.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 1196) to pension Mary E. Trickey was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 4475) to amend section 4434 of Title LII of the Revised Statutes of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 6979) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States," approved August 1, 1888, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 94) providing for an investigation relative to the work and wages of women and children was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 9, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 6, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. JOHN W. HEIDT, of Georgia.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NAVIGATION IN TAMPA BAY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, recommending an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill for the establishment of additional aids to navigation in Tampa Bay, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

THE TARIFF.

The bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, was laid before the House with the amendments of the Senate, and was referred, with the amendments, to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PENSION BILLS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 307) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson; and

A bill (S. 920) to pension Mary Brown, of Berlin, Vt.

The SPEAKER. These bills, which were amended by the House, have been returned from the Senate with the information that the Senate disagrees to the amendments and asks a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. If there be no objection the amendments will be insisted upon and the conference agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, Mr. HARE, and Mr. PICKLER as conferees on the part of the House.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT LEXINGTON, MO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1930) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Lexington, Mo.; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for two days.

SAMUEL COLLINS.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 411) for the relief of Samuel Collins, which has been favorably reported by the House Committee on Claims, and is now on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Samuel Collins, of Water Valley, Miss., the sum of $230.11, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let the report in that case be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. BUNN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 411) for the relief of Samuel Collins, having had the same under consideration, report the same back with a recommendation that it do pass.

The Senate report made upon this bill during the first session of the Fifty-second Congress is so clear a statement of the facts that your committee adopts the same as a part of this report.

[Senate Report No. 531, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The purpose of the present bill is to pay to Samuel Collins, of Water Valley, Miss., certain bounty money due him for enlisting in Company I, Fifth United States Colored Heavy Artillery, during the late war. His claim for $300 was allowed March 17, 1870, per settlement No. 556104, authorized by joint resolution of Congress January 13, 1864. The certificate for this sum was made payable to the Commissioner of the Freedman's Bureau in accordance with law, and the money was paid to the chief disbursing officer of the bureau April 1, 1870, and passed into the hands of C. L. C. Cass, the local agent at Jackson, Miss., on December 3, 1871.

This agent claimed that he paid the money to the soldier and exhibited a receipt purporting to be signed by Collins and witnessed by two witnesses. The claimant, however, insisted that he had not received the money, and urged his demand against the Government for payment. The agent, Cass, then stated that the money in this case and another had been paid to the wrong persons, but failed or refused to make good his mistake or negligence.

Thereupon suits were instituted in the name of the United States by the United States district attorney in the district court of the southern district of Mississippi against the agent, Cass, for the recovery of the amounts improperly paid to the wrong parties, or wrongfully withheld by him while acting as agent of the Freedman's Bureau and disbursing officer of the Government.

The two suits were consolidated, and Mr. Cass in his defense set up a counter claim against the United States, which on the trial was disallowed, and a judgment was rendered in favor of the United States for the aggregate amounts due to the two soldiers, with interest and costs. An appeal was taken to the circuit court, and the judgment of the district court was sustained.

An execution was issued upon the judgment, and the net sum collected upon it was $77.39, and as to the residue of the amount it was returned nulla bona. Of this amount $69.89 was paid to the claimant, Collins, and he has received only that sum upon his bounty claim of $300, the Department ruling, according to law, that no further action could be taken with reference to the payment of the balance without the action of the Congress.

The record of the Cass suit is before the committee, and a letter from the judge who presided at the trial, who gives a brief history of the case; also a letter from the Second Auditor of the Treasury. Upon these the foregoing statements are based, and the judge's letter is herewith submitted as a part of this report.

It is very clear that the unpaid part of Collins's bounty is still due to him by the United States. The default was on the part of one of its officers, to whom the money was intrusted, and it never reached him. The United States has a judgment against the officer for the money, which he received and failed to pay, and the prosecution of the suit in its name, by its own officer, is a full recognition of the fact that it was the money of the Government that was withheld, and that no payment had ever been made that would discharge its liability.

The $300 is still due the claimant, less the $69.89 that he received after the partial recovery upon the execution. This leaves a balance of $230.11.

JACKSON, MISS., May 17, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: I learn that there is a bill referred to you providing for an appropriation of some $300 or $400 to Samuel Collins, a colored man of Water Valley, in this State, for that amount due him as a soldier in the late war as bounty money.

The sum of $300 was duly allowed said Collins, and an order drawn in his favor upon one L. C. Cass, then receiver of public money in this city. Cass refused to pay the money to Collins, claiming that he had paid it to someone else. The United States district attorney brought suit against Cass upon this claim, in the name of the United States for the use of Collins; also, in the name of the United States for the use of another of the same character. These suits were consolidated. Cass defended on the ground that the United States was due him as salary an amount more than the claim. The case was submitted to the court as of a jury.

This was in the district court. A judgment was given in this court for the claims, interest, and costs, from which Cass appealed to the circuit court, by which the judgment of the district court was affirmed and an execution was issued; returned nulla bona.

Collins has never received this money, and should have it.

The written opinion delivered in the district court at the time sets out the facts, and which I herewith inclose. I further state that Collins is a good, industrious, honest, colored man, who has been for many years in the employment of the Illinois Central Railroad Company, and much respected by those who know him and for whom he labors.

If Cass is living and the money can be made upon the judgment against him, the Government can be reimbursed, but Collins ought not to be dependent upon that recovery, but should have his money. He should not be defeated by the embezzlement and fraud of a dishonest agent.

R. A. HILL, United States Judge.

THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKERY. It seems that this is a claim for bounty, and that the agent of the United States withheld the pay from the party who was entitled to it?

Mr. MONEY. Yes; and the United States sued the agent and got judgment and recovered the amount.

Mr. DOCKERY. The report, however, does not seem to show to whom the bounty was paid.

Mr. MONEY. That was not necessary. The fact is it was not paid at all. It was sequestered by the agent of the Government. This man is entitled to his bounty and the judgment shows it.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. MONEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PUBLIC PARK, CASTINE, ME.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4322) granting the use of certain land to the town of Castine, Me., for a public park.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the town of Castine, in the State of Maine, the right to occupy, improve, and control, for the purposes of a public park for the use and benefit of the citizens of the United States, and for no other purpose whatever, the tract of land owned by the United States situated in the extreme southerly part of said town of Castine, containing 3 acres, more or less, and known as the "Fort Madison lot"—said tract being more fully described in the deed of Joseph and Phebe Perkins, conveying the said land to the President of the United States, dated April 1, 1809, which deed is recorded in the records of Hancock County, Me., book numbered 27, page 105—upon the following conditions and provisions, namely:

First. That the said town of Castine shall ascertain by proper survey and accurately mark in a permanent manner the boundaries of said tract of land according to the description given in said deed; that no use of said land shall be begun by the said town until after general plans of said improvement shall have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War.

Second. That said town of Castine shall have and exercise power to make and enforce police regulations concerning said tract and shall properly protect all said property from injury.

Third. That the United States reserves to itself the fee in said tract and the right to resume immediate and entire possession whenever either of the above provisions shall have been violated, and also to resume possession and occupy any portion thereof whenever, in the judgment of the President, the exigency arises that should require the use and appropriation of the same for public defense or otherwise, or for such other disposition as Congress may determine, without any claim for compensation to said town for improvement thereon or damage on account thereof.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the report accompanying the bill read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. MARSH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House bill 4322, beg leave to report that they have considered the same and recommend its passage.

The bill provides that the town of Castine, in the county of Hancock and State of Maine, may occupy, improve, and control, for the purposes of a public park for the use of the citizens of the United States, and for no other purpose, a certain public reservation known as the "Fort Madison lot," situated in the southerly part of Castine upon the shore of Castine Bay. The bill gives no title in this reservation to the town of Castine. It does not alienate any right which the United States Government has in it. It only allows the town of Castine to improve and occupy it as a park, enforce police regulations upon it, and to vacate it whenever the Government shall for any reason decide to occupy it, or when any of the conditions of the bill shall be violated.

This reservation is located among summer cottages upon the shore of one of the most beautiful bays in the country. It is now entirely useless and an eyesore to the people. The citizens of Castine wish to clear it up, remove the stones and rubbish upon it, riprap the water front so that the bank may not be washed away by the sea, and make it a pleasant resort and a way of approach to the sea without crossing private property.

Your committee think their purpose to be a laudable one, and that its accomplishment can not be in any way to the detriment of the Government, but rather a benefit in the way of preserving its property.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me ask the gentleman from Maine what is the value of this land?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not know that it has any particular value. I will state to the gentleman that they want to occupy it for a park.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman from Maine will give some explanation about this matter.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I know personally all about the land in question, as I have been on it many times. It is a strip of land lying along the shore of Castine Bay. It was occupied during the last war as an earthwork, and is situated amongst some beautiful cottages which have been built there as summer resorts, while this lot, belonging to the Government, is covered entirely with rubbish and stones, and is an eyesore to the people who have petitioned for the passage of this bill.

The entire east front is exposed to the ocean when the winds come in from the southeast, and is gradually washing away.

The people of Castine, by the provisions of this bill, are entitled to go on the property and remove the rocks and rubbish, clear it up, riprap the east front to prevent its further washing by the ocean, and occupy it as a park for the benefit of the people of the town and of the United States generally. It gives them a chance to go down to the sea without crossing private property as they must now do. They get no right whatever to the property; the Government under the provisions of the bill would have the right to reoccupy it whenever it pleased or whenever it became necessary to use it for any public purpose.

This bill provides also that the town shall not charge the Government for the improvements it may make on the lot. Let me say further, Mr. Speaker, that this bill was drawn by the War Department and was sent to me. I introduced the bill precisely in the form that it was drawn by the Department. It is approved by them, and I can not see the slightest objection to it in the world. The people of the town will simply improve the property of the Government, and the Government in all probability will never occupy it again for any purpose. There is nothing they could use it for except a fortification. They would not want to occupy it for a light-house, because there is one on Dyces Head, perhaps a quarter of a mile away.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the amount of land in question?

Mr. MILLIKEN. About three acres, on the shores of the bay.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the size of the city that gets the use of this property?

Mr. MILLIKEN. Oh, it is not a city, but an old town where the wars were fought between the French and the English. There is an old fort on the hill near the town, or the remains of one of these old fortifications.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the size of the town?

Mr. MILLIKEN. About 1,500 inhabitants.

Mr. McMILLIN. I should suppose from the size of the town that there was a good deal of parking all around it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Oh, yes; but the town has quite a number of good cottages——

Mr. McMILLIN. It strikes me that a town of that size, with the Atlantic Ocean on one side, and occupying as it does but a small space, would not want very much of a public park.

Mr. MILLIKEN. This is a summer resort, I will state to the gentleman, occupied by cottages. Mr. Morey, of Boston, erected a cottage at this point a short time ago, costing $40,000.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Is this for the benefit of Mr. Morey?

Mr. MILLIKEN. No, sir; but it is asked for by the people of the whole town, who have petitioned for it. Mr. Morey, I will state to the gentleman, wanted to buy it, and the people did not wish to have it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MILLIKEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EASTERN AND WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICTS OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. WOODARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6542) to change the lines between the eastern and western judicial districts of North Carolina, and fixing time for holding courts in said eastern district.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the call of committees for reports.

The committees were called for reports.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE, WILLIAMS VS. SETTLE.

Mr. WOODARD, from the Committee on Elections, submitted the views of the minority in the contested-election case of Williams vs. Settle, Fifth district of North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The views of the minority will be printed.

LEAVE TO FILE A REPORT.

Mr. LAPHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to submit a report from the Committee on Military Affairs at a later hour in the day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that leave will be granted.

There was no objection.

Subsequently Mr. LAPHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7515) granting right of way through Arlington reservation for electric railway purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TIMBER LANDS IN CERTAIN STATES.

Mr. HALL of Minnesota, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill (H. R. 5714) to amend an act entitled "An act for the sale of timber lands in the States of California, Oregon, Nevada, and in Washington Territory;" which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

MUNICIPAL BUILDING, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. ABBOTT, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported bill, H. R. 7651, as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 6074) to authorize the erection of a municipal building at Washington City, D. C.

The bill (H. R. 7651) was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The bill H. R. 6074 was ordered to lie on the table.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at half past 12 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Public Lands.

DECLARATIONS OF INTENTION TO ENTER DESERT LANDS.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 4448) for the relief of persons who have filed declarations of intention to enter desert lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], from the Committee on Public Lands, calls up the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where declaration of intention to enter desert lands have been filed, and the four years' limit within which final proof may be made has not expired prior to January 1, 1894, the time within which such proof may be made in each such case is hereby extended to five years from the date of filing the declaration; and the requirement that the persons filing such declarations shall expend the full sum of $1 per acre during each year toward the reclamation of the land is hereby suspended for the year 1894: Provided, That within the period of five years from filing the declaration satisfactory proof be made to the register and receiver of the reclamation and cultivation of such land to the extent and cost and in the manner provided by existing law, and upon the payment to the receiver of the additional sum of $1 per acre, as provided in existing law, a patent shall issue as therein provided.

The Committee on Public Lands recommended the following amendments:

Insert after the word "ninety-four," in line 12, the words "and such annual expenditure for that year, and the proof thereof is hereby dispensed with."

Insert after the word "law," in line 17, the words "except as to said year of 1894."

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will ask the gentleman from Arkansas what class of lands this applies to?

Mr. McRAE. Desert lands.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SALE OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4952) to amend section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], from the Committee on Public Lands, calls up the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2455. It shall be lawful for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to order into market and sell for not less than $2.50 per acre any isolated or disconnected tract or parcel of public domain which in his judgment it would be proper to expose to sale after at least thirty days' notice by the land officers of the district in which such lands may be situated: Provided, That lands shall not become so isolated or disconnected until the same have been subject to homestead entry for a period of three years after the surrounding land has been entered, filed upon, or sold by the Government."

With the following amendment:

In line 9, after the word "of," insert the word "the," and after the word "domain," in the same line, insert the following: "Less than one quarter section."

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear the report read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] asks that the report be read. The report can be read in the time of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HERMANN. I wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. McRAE. Let the report first be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. McRAE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4952) to amend section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, have had the same under consideration and report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The first section of the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 854), withdrew from private cash entry all public lands except in the State of Missouri.

The ninth section of the act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat., 1095), prohibits the sale of such lands at public auction, with certain exceptions, in the following language, viz:

"That hereafter no public lands of the United States, except abandoned military or other reservations, isolated and disconnected fractional tracts authorized to be sold by section 2455 of the Revised Statutes, and mineral and other lands the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public sale."

In consequence of these enactments, no public land of the United States lying out of the State of Missouri can be disposed of at private entry, and none can be offered and disposed of at public auction not embraced in abandoned military or other reservations, and not comprehended in the terms, "mineral and other lands the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by acts of Congress of a special nature having local application," except such isolated and disconnected tracts as are authorized to be sold by section 2455 of the Revised Statutes.

That section reads as follows, viz:

"It may be lawful for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to order into the market, after due notice, without the formality and expense of a proclamation of the President, all lands of the second class, though heretofore unproclaimed and unoffered, and such other isolated or disconnected tracts or parcels of unoffered lands which, in his judgment, it would be proper to expose to sale in like manner. But public notice of at least thirty days shall be given by the land officers of the district in which such lands may be situated, pursuant to the directions of the Commissioner."

It will be seen that the exception contained in the said section 2455 embraces only "unoffered lands," or lands "heretofore unproclaimed and unoffered." It appears that in the process of disposing of the public lands it frequently happens that certain tracts, inconsiderable in area, which are of the class of "offered lands" or lands which have been heretofore proclaimed and offered, are found to have become isolated or disconnected tracts, and to be undesirable for homesteads, from insufficiency of area or other cause, and which yet can not be disposed of either at private entry or at public sale, however desirable it may be, in view of the provisions to the contrary contained in the first section of the act of March 2, 1889, and the ninth section of the act of March 3, 1891, before mentioned.

The purpose of this bill is to permit the disposal of this class or description of tracts at public sale by means of an amendment of said section 2455, which would extend its provisions to such small isolated or disconnected tracts, although of the class of lands heretofore proclaimed and offered.

The bill also proposes to fix the minimum price for any lands so disposed of at $2.50 per acre instead of $1.25, as under the general law, and to limit the operations of the section 2455 to lands which "have been subject to homestead entry for a period of three years after the surrounding land has been entered, filed upon, or sold by the Government."

Mr. McRAE. I move the adoption of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to hear an explanation of this bill by the gentleman from Arkansas. How much land does this bill cover?

Mr. McRAE. It would be impossible to tell how much it covers; but it only covers isolated and disconnected tracts.

Mr. PICKLER. What do you mean by isolated tracts?

Mr. McRAE. We define it in this bill as all tracts of a less area than 160 acres when disconnected for three years after the surrounding land has been entered, filed upon, or sold. Heretofore the Commissioner has, in his discretion, determined what were isolated tracts and when they would become such.

Mr. PICKLER. It is subject now to homestead entry?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. Why do you want to auction it off?

Mr. McRAE. We do not want it auctioned off. For many years there was a law on the statute book authorizing the private sale of all offered lands. That law was repealed by the act of March 2, 1889. When the act of March 3, 1891, was passed—by mistake, I will assume—it provided for the revival of section 2455, which embraces only "unoffered lands," and so the isolated tracts of "offered lands" can not be sold at all, while such tracts of the unoffered can be. This bill seeks to apply this section as amended to all isolated public lands alike.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, can anybody go in and buy those lands for $2.50 an acre?

Mr. McRAE. They can not get it for less than $2.50 an acre. The law as it now is permits them to get the "unoffered" at $1.25 per acre.

Mr. PICKLER. Do I understand you to mean that all these lands may be bought at $1.25 an acre?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. McRAE. The unoffered isolated tracts can be, but the offered tracts can not

Mr. PICKLER. How much does the unoffered lands cover?

Mr. McRAE. It does not cover all unoffered lands, but isolated and disconnected tracts of such land, and the amount is inconsiderable.

Mr. PICKLER. One more question. What is the necessity of this law? Is not this land all, as you say, open to homestead entry?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly; and will still remain open to such entry.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, what is the object of disposing of it more rapidly than it can be taken up under the homestead law?

Mr. McRAE. The theory is, that as it has been subject to homestead entry for thirty, forty, or fifty years, and no one has entered it under the homestead law, it is not fit for a homestead.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Does it limit it to any amount?

Mr. McRAE. It is limited to disconnected and isolated tracts of less than one-quarter section.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. A man can not purchase more than 160 acres.

Mr. McRAE. This bill does not authorize the sale of any tract except those which are less than one-quarter section.

Mr. HERMANN. I will ask my friend a question in this connection with that asked by the gentleman from Washington, whether one person can enter more than one disconnected tract, and in the aggregate make entry of more than 160 acres.

Mr. McRAE. I think he could if he wanted to pay $2.50 an acre for it and the Department would let him.

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to ask the gentleman a further question. Does not that put it in the power of a man to go into the river reaches and find little tracts of 30 and 40 acres and enter them and go on for miles and miles up and buy all the little patches and tracts on which some homesteader may want to be able to make a home for himself? Is it not putting it in the hands of a man who would be able to speculate in these lands? Do you not think it ought to be left open for settlement as it is?

Mr. McRAE. This law has been on the statute book, Mr. Speaker, since 1846, and it has not been abused by any Administration so far as I know. No Department will permit it to be used for speculative purposes. Nobody is going to take these isolated and disconnected tracts, as a general thing, except the abutting owners who want to enlarge their farms.

Mr. PICKLER. Why should not the Government keep the land?

Mr. McRAE. These are only tracts less than a man would be entitled to under the homestead law and presumably unfit for such uses.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. That law as to offered lands was not applicable to all the States. There were no offered lands in the West. It was only in your section of the country.

Mr. McRAE. There were perhaps none in your State; but there were offered lands in Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, and other States in the West.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. There were none in California or Oregon.

Mr. HERMANN. Yes; there were offered lands in California and in Oregon.

Mr. FLYNN. As I understand, all this land must have been open to homestead settlement for three years before that can be taken under the operations of this law.

Mr. McRAE. Certainly; it must remain disconnected from all public land for three years before it can be taken by this bill. That provision is not in the law we propose to amend, however. In the law as it now stands there is no limitation upon the amount, and no provision as to when it shall become isolated.

Mr. PICKLER. Is it not the fact that in a large number of instances the reason why these tracts have not been taken by homesteaders is that they have been able to get 160 acres somewhere else, but that opportunity is rapidly disappearing, and now the homesteaders will come in and take 80 or 40 acre tracts if they can have them under the homestead law?

Mr. McRAE. I do not know that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PICKLER. I have the floor, I believe. These isolated tracts have not been taken because homesteaders could get 160 acres elsewhere. I ask the gentleman if that is not the reason they have not been taken?

Mr. McRAE. I can not tell why a settler did not take this land rather than some other lands he did enter. No man can answer that question. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It was because he did not want it. [Laughter.]

Mr. McRAE. I presume it was because he did not want it.

Mr. PICKLER. No, he did not want 80 acres when he could get 160 acres elsewhere, but when the opportunity to get 160 acres disappears then he will come in and want the 80 acres.

Mr. KEM. Can the gentleman tell us what is the general quality of this land? Is it fit for agriculture?

Mr. McRAE. My dear sir, I can not answer that. There are some disconnected tracts of land in the various States of the Union.

I suppose that the theory on which the original law was framed was that as all the "offered land" was subject to sale at $1.25 an acre that some provision should be made to dispose of small tracts of "unoffered land," but when by the act of March 2, 1889, the distinction between "offered" and "unoffered" was abolished there was no good reason for reviving it by the act of March 3, 1891, as to isolated tracts.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would it not be safer, however, to limit the amount that each party can take?

Mr. McRAE. I have no objection to a reasonable limitation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be limited to a quarter section.

Mr. McRAE. They can not get as much as a quarter section by one purchase under this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know; but a man might buy several tracts.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It seems to me that it would be for the best interests of the Government and of the people at large if we would limit the quantity which each person could purchase of these lands. All over the West there are a great many fractional 160-acre tracts——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But not close together.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Not close together; 20 acres here, 30 acres there, 40 acres elsewhere. When a man came to take up his land at the land office he found that he could not make it all contiguous, so he left off 25 or 30 or 40 acres, which was outside, but which was just as valuable as that which was taken. I think that is the condition in my friend's Territory, and in Oregon and Dakota. These lands are just as good as the lands that were originally taken up under the homestead act, and if we are going to repeal the act of March 3, 1891, which at the time I thought was wise legislation——

Mr. McRAE. We are not repealing it at all, but making it general.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. We are, inferentially.

Mr. McRAE. We are correcting what was evidently a mistake made in the law of 1891, which revived section 2455, Revised Statutes, which, strange to say, authorized the sale of "unoffered lands" but prohibited the sale of those that had been offered.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that was done deliberately after full consideration.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, to save the lands for the homesteaders.

Mr. McRAE. The lands were all saved to homesteaders two years prior to that time by my bill of March 2, 1889.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. In one section of the country public lands could be bought for $1.25 per acre, while in another section the settler had to reside upon his land and still pay $2.50 an acre. That change was made openly, and I knew at the time we were doing it for the purpose of putting all the public lands of this country under one common law.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the gentleman from South Dakota was a member of the committee on conference.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlemen who drafted the act of 1891 intended to do what they say here to-day, then they accomplished exactly the reverse, because none of this land could be sold but for that act, and there is much more "unoffered" than "offered" land. In the extreme Western States and Territories there are no "offered lands." Under the act of March 3, 1891, every disconnected tract in all the States and Territories may in the discretion of the Commissioner be sold at not less than $1.25 per acre. In Washington unoffered lands can be sold.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. There are no offered lands in my State.

Mr. McRAE. But the gentleman misunderstands the point upon which this rests. The law as it now stands is that no isolated tracts except unoffered lands may be sold. That is the point. Does the gentleman catch it?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The gentleman is stating it with sufficient volume of voice for me to catch it. [Laughter.]

Mr. McRAE. Do you understand it?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yes, I understand it.

Mr. McRAE. In your State unoffered lands can be sold, and as you have none but unoffered lands, all isolated tracts in your State may be sold.

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman has no lands in his State that can be sold.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman is mistaken. The case is exactly the reverse as to isolated tracts.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no.

Mr. McRAE. That statement shows that the gentlemen who assisted in drafting the act of March 3, 1891, did not know the distinction between the "offered" and "unoffered" lands, and I do not wonder that the mistake was made.

I can read you what the Department said about this matter. I have known of applications made and denied for offered lands. The Department construes the law to mean that it is only the unoffered lands in all the States that can be sold under section 2455.

Mr. PICKLER and Mr. WILSON of Washington. We have not any offered lands.

Mr. McRAE. You have not anything else except unoffered lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. The timber-land law of the Pacific States is the only law that allows the land to be sold at all, and that only to those entitled to enter homesteads, except in special cases where the homestead policy could not apply.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yes; the gentleman from Indiana is correct; it is only under the timber-land law that lands can be sold, and then only to persons entitled to make homestead entries.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is in error again, for the timber and stone act only applies to "unoffered land," and offered land can not be sold under it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, I leave that controversy to be settled between you two gentlemen.

Mr. McRAE. Section 2455 originally applied to unoffered lands, when the distinction meant something. This act of 1891 has been construed by the Department to exclude offered lands from sale. The result is that it is only lands of the character that you have in your State and in States situated like yours that can be sold at all under this provision. The lands which were upon the market for forty or fifty years, and which are confessedly of but little value, can not be sold, while those which you say are valuable can be sold. Still you refuse to consent to pass this bill, which extends the existing law and makes it general in its application to unoffered and offered lands alike.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the gentleman overlooks the fact that this is an encroachment upon the homestead law, under which it is our policy to place all the public lands.

Mr. McRAE. It is no encroachment upon the homestead law at all.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to yield me five minutes.

Mr. McRAE. I will do so.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt the good faith of the Committee on Public Lands and its chairman in reporting this bill; but in my opinion it is a mistake. Whatever may be thought in regard to this controversy about offered and unoffered lands, I know that in my State and in most of the Western States lands can be procured under the timber act at $2.50 an acre, under the homestead act, under the mining law, and under the desert land law. Now, those are a sufficient number of ways to dispose of the public lands.

Without regard to this controversy about offered and unoffered lands, the object of this bill is to put up for sale lands now subject to homestead entry and sell them at not less than $2.50 an acre. That is the confessed and undisputed object of the bill. Now, while I do not doubt the good faith of the committee, I am opposed to that policy. It has been the policy of the Congress of the United States, especially for the last twenty years, to reserve all the public lands for homestead settlement; and that is the correct policy. I do not want any more of these public lands sold to anybody; I do not care whether the purchasers be speculators, farmers, or anybody else. Let these lands be reserved for homestead entry.

Now, the reason these tracts of less than 160 acres have not been sold heretofore is that while men could go to other sections of the country and get tracts of 160 acres they did not care to take tracts of smaller size, even though they might be better land. They wanted as much land as they could get. But the time has now come when it is getting to be very hard for a man to find anywhere in the United States a place where he can settle upon 160 acres of public land in a section of the country where there is sufficient rainfall.

Hence these isolated tracts of less than 160 acres each are now sought for. It often happens, for instance, that a man's son who has been living with him reaches the age of 21 and wants to start out for himself. He does not care to go to a new neighborhood, but would rather settle down near his old home upon an 80-acre or even a 40-acre tract. It will not be many years before we shall need every acre of this land for homes for our people. Pray, what is the object of selling our lands for the pitiful sum of $2.50 an acre? Why should we want to do that?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is a merely nominal price.

Mr. PICKLER. Can not the Government as well afford to hold these lands as an individual can? If the lands are worth $2.50 to individuals, are they not worth that much to the Government to be reserved for settlers?

It is useless to talk about confining people to 80-acre tracts. You can not do it. If I want a thousand acres of land I will buy 80 acres, will get my brother to buy another tract of 80 acres, my wife to buy another, my daughter to buy another, my wife's relatives to buy other tracts in the same way, and I will take the land.

Mr. HOLMAN. But there is no limitation here at all against speculating in the fragmentary portions of the public lands.

Mr. PICKLER. I understand that; there is no limitation here at all. But my point is that you can not adopt an effectual limitation. If speculators want this land they will get it. The men who will take these lands are those who are making investments in land—not the homesteaders. These lands will not be taken by the men who really want land for homes, but by men who want to invest in land. I am opposed to the principle of selling Government land.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERMANN. I desire to offer an amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] has the floor. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take but a moment of the attention of the House in this connection. You have heard in the last ten or fifteen minutes a great deal of talk about violating the homestead laws, and about the necessity and desirability of following the principles laid down in it, both from the gentleman from South Dakota and the gentleman from Indiana.

Those who assail this bill either do not understand the effect of the legislation embodied in the act of 1891, or have permitted it to be misstated to the House to-day. The section to which this is an amendment provides for the sale only of unoffered lands. The 9th section of the act referred to is as follows:

That hereafter no public lands of the United States, except abandoned military or other reservations, isolated and disconnected fractional tracts authorized to be sold by section 2455 of the Revised Statutes—

The section for which this bill is offered as an amendment.

And mineral and other lands, the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by action of Congress, of a special nature, having local application, shall be sold at public sale.

Now, that section expressly excludes the sale of any of these lands unless they are unoffered lands. Two gentlemen who assisted in the preparation of that act stand here to-day and tell you that it does not. I can not see the necessity of arguing with gentlemen who in the face of the plain letter of the law undertake to make the House believe that the committee is trying to deceive it in presenting this bill for its consideration.

I have told you the effect of the act of March 3, 1891, and, so far as I am concerned, I do not care one bawbee what you do with the bill, whether you pass it or not; but I do want you to understand the position of the committee.

Now, we have in the State of South Dakota, in the State of Washington, in the State of Montana, and all over the West isolated and disconnected tracts of land, without the limitation of less than 160 acres we propose, which are subject to sale at the minimum rate of $1.25 an acre——

Mr. PICKLER. That is a mistake.

Mr. McRAE. It is not a mistake.

Mr. PICKLER. It is. You can not buy a foot of land in my State at $1.25, and I have lived there for twelve years and know what I am talking about.

Mr. McRAE. I do not care how long you have lived there; if the gentleman in that time has not learned more than he appears to know of the distinction between offered and unoffered lands, he had better go and remain forty years.

Mr. PICKLER. I know what I am talking about, and all about offered and unoffered lands, and understand what the law is, I think, as well as the gentleman from Arkansas, and I say that there has been no land in my State sold under this law at $1.25 an acre nor could it be so purchased, the gentleman to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. McRAE. I have stated what the law is.

Mr. PICKLER. It is just the reverse of what the law is. The gentleman is entirely mistaken as to lands in South Dakota.

Mr. HOLMAN. That law only applies to timber lands in the Pacific States.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman from Indiana is entirely mistaken in that. The timber and stone law has nothing whatever to do with this question of isolated tracts, but, like this section, only applies to "unoffered land."

In the Western States generally there are several ways of disposing of public lands, and it simply amounts to this: Whether you will permit, in the southern and most easterly part of the Western States, that law to be amended so that it will cover lands heretofore offered at public sale and which would not sell for $1.25 an acre, and which have been subject to homestead since 1862, and which have been isolated from all public lands for more than three years prior to entry.

Mr. PICKLER. I am satisfied that no land officer has ever construed that to be the law. Not an acre has ever been sold in my State, let me say to the gentleman, as he asserts.

Mr. McRAE. I hope the gentleman from South Dakota will not interrupt me further. I have yielded to him courteously, but he has not observed the same courtesy toward me.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. McRAE. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire time?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to take any time of the House, but simply to ask the gentleman whether it has not been the settled policy, at least of the House, for fifteen years to abandon entirely the sale of public lands except in case of reservations, and to reserve them for homestead settlers alone, as has been repeatedly declared by the House. Homes for our people has been our policy.

Mr. McRAE. But the gentleman from Indiana, supporting that policy as he declares, assisted in writing section 9 of this law which I have quoted, and I would be glad now if he would tell the House, in the light of what he has said, what that means. If you did not mean to sell any public land, what did you mean when you expressly provided that certain lands could be sold under section 2455 of the Revised Statutes without limitation.

For the gentleman to assert that this proposition is an abandonment of the homestead principle and entire change in the policy which has been pursued with reference to our public lands, in the face of the facts I have stated, is to me a most extraordinary and strange proposition to submit to any intelligent body of men.

Mr. HOLMAN. If a mistake was made in this act of 1891, I want it corrected; and in any view I do not want the principle to be further extended of selling public land. We shall be buying lands for our people, gentlemen, to uphold our free institutions in less than forty years. Freeholders are the only safety to a republic. The public domain is substantially exhausted. What land is left, gentlemen, for God's sake let the landless people have it.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman has said that he intended to do just what he did by the act of 1891, and he and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] have asserted that I have misstated the law when I asserted that it was a mistake.

Mr. HERMANN. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to accept an amendment which I wish to offer.

The SPEAKER. There is already an amendment pending.

Mr. McRAE. There is one amendment pending, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HERMANN. My amendment is to another portion of the bill.

Mr. McRAE. I should like to have the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon reported in my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas yields to the gentleman from Oregon. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. McRAE. I yield simply for the purpose of having the amendment reported in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 16, page 2, at the end of said line, the following:
"Provided, That not more than 160 acres shall be sold to any one person."

Mr. McRAE. I have no objection to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ascertain what amendments are pending. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows.

In line 9, after the word "of," insert the word "the," and after the word "domain" in the same line insert the words "less than one quarter section."

So that it will read:

SEC. 2455. It shall be lawful for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to order into market and sell for not less than $2.50 per acre any isolated or disconnected tract or parcel of the public domain less than one quarter section which in his judgment it would be proper to expose to sale after at least thirty days' notice by the land officers of the district in which such lands may be situated, etc.

The SPEAKER. That is the pending amendment.

Mr. McRAE. I ask the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. Would an amendment to the amendment be in order?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. PICKLER. I move to strike out the words "one hundred and sixty" and insert the word "eighty."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out one hundred and sixty and insert eighty, so that it will read:
"Provided, That not more than 80 acres shall be sold to any one person."

Mr. McRAE. That is not an amendment to my amendment. That applies to the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN].

The SPEAKER. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. McRAE) is the only amendment which is pending. The Clerk will report that amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9, after the word "of" insert the word "the," and in the same line after the word "domain" insert the words "less than one quarter section."

The SPEAKER. That is the amendment which is pending. The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota is applicable to the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], which was read for information. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oregon to offer that amendment, and the gentleman from South Dakota to offer his amendment to the amendment, after the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] is disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask my friend from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] to allow section 9 of the statute to be read.

Mr. McRAE. I have read it already.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will see that it does not apply to lands intended to come within the scope of the homestead policy, but this provision extends it to lands intended to be covered by the homestead policy.

Mr. McRAE. My dear sir, it is just an amendment to that section, and covers lands of the same character, except that it covers the offered lands which are very much less in quantity and value.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I should like to see that provision repealed. By my vote not one acre of the public lands shall ever be sold that comes fairly within the scope of the homestead law. The vital question is homes for our people—freeholds.

Mr. PICKLER. Does the gentleman from Arkansas say that in my State lands can be sold now in isolated tracts at $1.25 an acre?

Mr. McRAE. I do say so if there are isolated tracts in your State.

Mr. PICKLER. Why, I thought the construction had been the other way.

Mr. McRAE. I never heard of any construction the other way.

Mr. PICKLER. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman has very emphatically denied the statement I made that these lands could be sold, and now he admits by this question that he does not know anything about it.

Mr. PICKLER. All the knowledge in regard to public lands is not centered in the gentleman from Arkansas. I said they had not been so sold and the law had never been so construed, and I reassert it.

Mr. McRAE. I do not make any such pretense, but when I make a statement, after investigation at the Department and after careful consideration of the law, I like to have gentlemen who know me as you do to accept that statement as the truth unless they can show the error in it.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, well, I do not accept everything. I know it is not the fact in my State.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are no "offered" lands in the State of the gentleman from South Dakota, and never were any.

Mr. McRAE. But it applies to unoffered lands, and that is the only point in this bill. The law applies to unoffered lands, and we are trying to make it cover offered lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. The homestead law alone applies to the section of country from which the gentleman from South Dakota comes.

Mr. PICKLER. The homestead law alone applies to my section of the country, and if the effect of the law is as stated by the gentleman from Arkansas, I want it repealed.

Mr. McRAE. Here are two gentlemen who thought they knew all about this law, and who rose up in great wrath and denied my statement when I told them the effect of it, and now when I show them the effect of this bill they say they want it repealed. A few moments ago it was a good law; now it ought to be repealed.

Mr. PICKLER. The trouble is you shoot with a shotgun. You do not know where located nor how much land you are disposing of in this bill. Your information is not definite.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. This is a good deal like the demonetization of silver. Nobody knew anything about it.

Mr. McRAE. That is right. They did not know anything about what unoffered meant. It passed at 11 o'clock at night, without ever having been printed, and I think I was the only man in this House who cautioned the House against the danger of the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no; it was well understood, I think.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the section which the gentleman from Indiana asks to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That hereafter no public lands of the United States, except abandoned military or other reservations, isolated and disconnected fractional tracts authorized to be sold by section 2455 of the Revised Statutes, and mineral and other lands the sale of which at public auction has been authorized by act of Congress of a special nature having local application, shall be sold at public sale.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, that is the section of the act of 1883 which applied to reserved lands, which was not intended to cover lands which in the years and years to come should be entered under the homestead policy.

Mr. McRAE. I demand the previous question on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands the previous question on the amendment offered by him.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, what amendment is that?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. PICKLER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLER. Does that include the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; that is entirely different. This is the amendment offered by the gentleman when he reported the bill.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Now the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oregon to offer an amendment. The gentleman from Oregon offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 16, page 2, at the end of said line, the following:
"Provided, That not more than 160 acres shall be sold to any one person."

Mr. PICKLER. I move to amend that by striking out "one hundred and sixty" and inserting "eighty."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota moves to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon by striking out 160 and inserting 80.

Mr. McRAE. I suggest an amendment might be made to that, that not more than one entry shall be made by any one person, and accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. HERMANN. I suggest to the gentleman that will do injustice.

Mr. McRAE. Then go on and have it as first proposed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PICKLER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 46.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 19.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill was engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Twenty-two gentlemen have arisen in support of the demand.

A MEMBER. The other side.

The other side was counted.

The SPEAKER. Twenty-two gentlemen have seconded the demand and 96 oppose it; not one-fifth have seconded the demand; the yeas and nays are refused; and the question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PICKLER and Mr. HOLMAN. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 32.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following House concurrent resolutions:

House concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 10,000 extra copies of the report of the Director of the Mint of the production of the precious metals for 1893:

House concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 4,000 extra copies of the report of the select committee of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia on typhoid, malarial fevers, and other preventable diseases; and

House concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the report of the Commissioner of Education for the years 1891 and 1892; also

House resolution 201, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to continue the employment of certain mechanics and laborers.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles: when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1758) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River, between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road;" and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 201) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to continue the employment of certain mechanics and laborers.

SECTION 2238 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4185) to repeal the twelfth subsection of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the twelfth subdivision of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That the repeal shall take effect on and after January 1, 1894.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 2 strike out the following language: "January 1, 1894," and insert the following: "The passage and approval of this act."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. KRIBBS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4185) to repeal the twelfth subdivision of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, have had the same under consideration, and report it back with an amendment striking out the second line in section 2 and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the passage and approval of this act," and with the recommendation that it pass as amended.

The reports to the committee from the Secretary of the Interior and Commissioner of the General Land Office, together with a tabulated statement submitted by the latter, showing the result upon the Government receipts and compensation of land officers had this law been repealed in 1893, are hereto attached and made a part of this report.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 15, 1893.

SIR: I transmit herewith report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on House bill 4185 "To repeal the twelfth section of subdivision 2238 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," with tabulated statement therein referred to.

The subdivision of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes repealed by the proposed bill provides that—

"Registers and receivers in California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Colorado, Idaho, New Mexico, Arizona, Utah, Wyoming, and Montana are each entitled to collect and receive 50 per cent on the fees and commissions provided for in the first, third, and tenth subdivisions of this section."

I concur in the views of the Commissioner, that there is no good reason why the people in one land district should be taxed more in fees and commissions than in another, and I therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS C. McRAE,
Chairman of Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 23, 1893.

SIR: I herewith return the bill (H. R. 4185) to repeal subdivision 12 of section 2238 of the Revised Statutes.

I also submit tabulated statement showing, by States and Territories, the offices affected by the statute, the earnings of each of said offices in 1893 under existing law, and the amount such office would have earned under the proposed repeal; the amount paid registers and receivers at each of said offices in 1893, and the amount they would have received under the proposed change; the amount of decrease of revenue to the Government, and of compensation to registers and receivers in each office and in the aggregate in 1893 had existing law been repealed.

It will be observed there are sixty-one offices affected by the bill. Twenty-three of these were maximum offices in 1893, and thirty-nine of them paid the register and receiver less than $3,000 each. Under the proposed repeal there would have been only seventeen maximum offices and forty-four under maximum.

The reduction of revenue to the Government would have been $36,479.26, and the reduction of compensation to registers and receivers would have been $24,135.86, making a total reduction of fees, commissions, etc., paid in the land districts affected of $62,615.12.

I am unable to see any good reason why the people in one land district should at the present time be taxed more in fees and commissions than another, and feel disposed to recommend the passage of the bill.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. McRAE. What time does the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] wish?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Four or five minutes.

Mr. McRAE. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to regulate the fees in certain district land offices in the West. It does not apply to any of the land offices east of the Missouri River. West of that river, in the States of California, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and in the Territories, 50 per cent additional was added upon all homestead, preëmption, and timber-culture entries; that is to say, a homestead entry that would cost $18 in South Dakota would cost $27 in Washington; a preemption that would cost $2 in South Dakota or in Wisconsin or Minnesota would cost $3 in Wyoming.

This 50 per cent was added upon the ground that at the time expenses were greater in the West, that the cost of rent, fuel, travel, was greater. It did not increase the emoluments of the land officers above the maximum allowed by law, $3,000, but it did increase the fees of the General Government. Now under the law the fees go to the Government, and the land officers, the register and the receiver, are paid $3,000 each if the office earns that much, but all the fees and commissions have first to be turned into the Treasury and then are paid back to those officers. In the Fifty-first Congress I introduced a bill similar to this one introduced by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL]. It was passed by the House and went to the Senate, where it was defeated.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether at this time the enactment of this law will not operate to close many of the land offices in the West. It seems to me that it will do so, and will thereby produce greater hardship to settlers in getting to the land offices by reason of the distances they will have to travel and the expense, than what they now incur. Since the Fifty-first Congress the law has been expanded so that almost every entry and every filing in a local land office can be made in the county before a United States commissioner, or a judge of probate, or a clerk of the circuit court.

Mr. HERMANN. And if the gentleman from Washington will yield, I desire to say that the passage of this bill will virtually amount to the abolition of a number of land districts on the Pacific coast for the reason that the public land area is very rapidly diminishing by reason of the daily sales, and in a very short time no land officer can exist upon the reduced fees here proposed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen from the States affected by this bill have informed me that they will oppose it, and as it is evident that in the short time we have left we can not pass it, I withdraw the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to withdraw the bill, no vote having been taken upon it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 3135) granting to the University of Utah a site off the public domain.

PUBLIC LANDS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 195) to amend an act entitled "An act to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the law relating to mineral lands," approved March 3, 1883.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands," approved March 3, 1883, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows, namely:

"That within the State of Alabama all public lands, whether mineral or otherwise, shall be subject to disposal only as agricultural lands, and only under the provisions of the homestead laws: Provided, That any bona fide entry heretofore made of lands in said State under the provisions of the preemption or homestead laws may be patented without reference to an act approved May 10, 1872, entitled 'An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States,' or any other act relating to mineral or coal lands, in cases where persons making application for such patents have in all other respects complied with the provisions of the preëmption or homestead laws relating thereto at the time of such entry: Provided further, That in all cases where any person legally eligible thereto has entered and located a homestead or perfected a preëmption, and has lost or hereafter loses the same in consequence of any grant or sale previously made by the Government of the United States, or by any means whatever, without fault on his or her part, such person, upon making satisfactory proof thereof, may enter another homestead upon any of the lands within said State subject to homestead.

"SEC 2. That every homesteader, as a prerequisite to obtaining a patent to his or her homestead, shall make final proof, by two credible witnesses, that he or she has continuously resided upon, cultivated, and permanently improved a substantial portion of such homestead for two consecutive years next succeeding such entry. Such proof shall be in duplicate, and the register and the receiver of the local land office shall make such indorsement thereon as they think just, and file one set of such proofs in their office and forward the other to the General Land Office; and such proofs shall be subject to the inspection of any person in anywise interested therein, and shall thus remain on file for one year; and if at the expiration thereof no contest should be filed, and no notice be given, supported by affidavit, made before any officer, State or Federal, authorized to administer oaths, charging and specifying fraud in either the original entry or the final proof made as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause a patent for the land to issue to such homesteader; and until the expiration of three years from date of entry a sale of such homestead shall be deemed an abandonment thereof, and an abandonment for sixty days shall be sufficient cause for cancellation of the entry; and after due notice, and allowing thirty days for appeal, such homestead shall be again subject to homestead entry. But if a contest be filed or affidavit be made as aforesaid, or if from any cause there be reasonable ground to suspect fraud in the case, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall investigate the same and make such order as shall be just and lawful: Provided, That no other notice of final proof than that hereinabove prescribed shall be required, and that entries of homestead or preemption begun in good faith before the passage of this act may be perfected under existing law; and, with this exception, the timber-culture and preëmption laws, and section 3001 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, allowing commutation of homestead entries are hereby repealed as to the State of Alabama to which alone this act shall apply.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole, and the morning hour has expired.

STATE TAXATION OF NATIONAL BANKS AND UNITED STATES TREASURY NOTES.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4326) to subject to State taxation national-bank notes and United States Treasury notes, which was under consideration yesterday, and I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] whether we can not agree upon an hour when the vote shall be taken? Three hours of debate will take us to half past four, and at that time I should like to have the previous question considered as ordered.

Mr. BROSIUS. I think there is no objection to that on our side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] asks unanimous consent that a vote be taken at the end of three hours——

Mr. BROSIUS (interposing). Mr. Speaker, as a part of the proposition, I would suggest that the time be evenly divided between the two sides, and that my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL], control the time in favor of the bill, and my colleague from Illinois, who reported the views of the minority, control the time on the other side.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that the previous question be considered as ordered at the end of three hours on the bill and pending amendments, that the time be equally divided between the two sides, that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] shall control the time in favor of the bill, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] the time in opposition to it. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. There are two amendments which have been reported by the committee, and which, if there be no objection, might be voted on now, so as to perfect the bill; and then other amendments would be in order. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] has offered an amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I desire to offer and have pending a substitute for the bill of the committee and for all pending amendments. I think I have embodied in this substitute the suggestions which have been made by way of amendment on all sides.

The SPEAKER. It is in order to offer the substitute if the gentleman has the floor. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] yield to the gentleman from Indiana to offer the substitute?

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana offers a substitute, which will be read. Of course the amendments will have to be voted on before the substitute.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I hope that gentlemen on the other side will pay special attention to this substitute.

The proposed substitute of Mr. COOPER of Indiana was read, as follows:

That all circulating notes of national banking associations and all United States legal-tender notes and all other notes and certificates of the United States payable on demand and circulating as currency shall be subject to taxation under the laws of any State or Territory: Provided, That any such taxation shall be exercised in the same manner and at the same rate that any such State or Territory shall tax other money within its jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall not be deemed or held to change existing laws in respect of the taxation of national banking associations.

The SPEAKER. This substitute will be considered as pending. Now, if gentlemen desire to offer other amendments it might be best to dispose of the amendments of the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I want to understand who offers the substitute just read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I supposed that the gentleman from Indiana offered the original bill.

The SPEAKER. No; the original bill was called up by the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] whether the original bill was not the bill of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. HALL of Missouri. No, sir. The order should have been that the bill of the gentleman from Indiana should lie on the table, and that this substitute should take its place.

Mr. COX. The bill which came from the committee was the bill introduced by the gentleman from Indiana, with an amendment striking out the lines in regard to national-bank circulation. Those lines were stricken out from the fact that there is but one State in the Union that does not tax national-bank circulation; the State of Mississippi withholds such taxation under a decision of the supreme court of the State. The committee did not deem it important to provide for taxing national-bank circulation, as all the States, with the exception of Mississippi, impose such taxation already. The bill which came from the committee was the bill of the gentleman from Indiana with that alteration. This substitute I never heard of before.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. What is the necessity of the gentleman from Indiana offering a substitute for what is in fact his own bill?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I would be glad to explain.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to offer the substitute. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, at the breaking out of the war between the States it became necessary for the General Government to use its credit; and this was done by a series of measures, among which were three several acts providing for the issuance of United States notes. The first of these acts was passed February 25, 1862, and provided for the issuance of $150,000,000 of these notes. The next was passed July 11, 1862; and the third March 3, 1863, making altogether provision for $450,000,000.

These notes, by reason of the colors of the ink in which they were printed, I presume, came to be commonly called greenbacks. Prior to either of these enactments there was outstanding $50,000,000 of the old demand notes which had been issued under a law passed in July, 1861. Those notes were payable on demand and were a legal tender for all dues, both public and private. The first act which provided for the issuance of $150,000,000 contained a provision for the retirement of those $50,000,000 of demand notes, so that the entire amount of outstanding United States notes was covered by the three enactments I have named.

The first of these acts provided that the notes should be a legal tender for all dues, public and private, except interest on the public debt and duties on imports. They were not payable on demand, and no time was fixed for their redemption. That act contains this language:

And shall also be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, etc.

It also provided that—I read the language of the law—

All stocks, bonds, and other securities of the United States, held by individuals, corporations, or associations in the United States, shall be exempt from taxation by or under State authority.

The next act continued the provisions of the first upon that subject by reference thereto. And the last act to which I refer had this provision:

And all the bonds and Treasury notes or United States notes issued under the provisions of this act shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal authority—

the word Treasury notes, it will be observed, being added in the last act and omitted from the first. That language was carried forward into the Revised Statutes, and is contained in section 3701, which reads as follows:

All stocks, bonds, Treasury notes, and other obligations of the United States, shall be exempt from taxation by or under State or municipal or local authority.

Mr. Speaker, I do not insist that the exemption of this currency from taxation depends upon these legislative enactments. I think they but declare the right of the General Government to that protection which is inherent under the Constitution. The several declarations made in these statutes to the effect that these notes were not to be taxed by State authority, were but notices to the States of that fact. They simply reaffirmed and restated a constitutional right which had been adjudicated time and again in the early history of the Government by its highest judicial tribunals, and which has at no time since been seriously controverted or even doubted.

Since these decisions and legislative declarations it has been uniformly agreed that United States notes issued under these enactments are exempt from State taxation. By reason of this exemption great hardships have arisen—unequal, and therefore unjust taxation has resulted, and there is just ground for complaint, and I believe I may say a general demand for some remedy for the wrongs which have resulted from this condition of the law.

Taxing officers find it an obstruction to the full performance of their duty, and the honest taxpayer is made to bear an unequal burden because of the peculiar advantages given to those who are in a position to cull out and keep this kind of currency in order to secure the exemption. Although great efforts have been made and great progress, too, I might add, in Indiana in the direction of tax reform, we have yet found ourselves wholly unable to secure honest returns of money on hand or on deposit without the assistance of Congressional action.

I hold in my hand the report of the State board of tax commissioners of the State of Indiana for the year 1893, which calls attention to this subject, and I will read from this report some observations which are there made upon this subject:

There are a few obstacles to a just and reasonable equality in taxation still remaining, and these are made the more conspicuous by the effort to secure equality. In justice to all taxpayers no class of property receiving the protection of the Government should escape taxation, and particularly none should escape taxation on account of technicalities or inadequacies of legal provisions. And yet some classes of property stand in exactly this position.

As to one of these, the difficulties can be removed only by an act of Congress of the United States, and this is the exemption of "greenback currency." Greenbacks are exempted from State taxation by virtue of a decision of the United States courts that they are Government securities, and this exemption was doubtless conducive to public welfare so long as our paper currency was not on a specie basis, but now that the Government is maintaining specie payments there remains no reason for exempting greenbacks from taxation in order to strengthen its credit. It is both unjust and confusing that one kind of money should be exempt from taxation while all other kinds of money are taxed, and this injustice is a strong temptation to many men in possession of money to misrepresent its character.

Indeed it is notorious that this temptation has proved so strong that the amount of money claimed to be exempt as greenbacks is enormously in excess of the entire greenback circulation. In our opinion your honorable body should memorialize Congress, asking the passage of a bill making greenbacks taxable as other money, such as was introduced when specie payments were resumed, and whose passage has been repeatedly urged since that time, but thus far without success.

I wish now to call the attention of the House to one or two letters out of many which have been sent to me upon this subject and which point more specifically to the evils which this legislation seeks to remedy. I have one here from Lebanon, in Boone County, Ind., from which I read, as follows:

LEBANON, IND., March 13, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I wish to congratulate you upon the introduction of your bill to tax greenbacks. After having fifteen years' experience in the county auditor's and treasurer's offices in this county and four years in a national bank I believe I know how people convert their money into greenbacks in order to evade taxation. I will venture the assertion that not less than $100,000 in Boone County alone escapes the tax duplicate every year. The easiest tax a man can pay is on money already accumulated.

Hoping you will meet with success,

I remain, etc.

——— ———.

Hon. GEORGE W. COOPER,
Washington, D. C.

I have also another letter, which it seems to me reflects much light on this subject. I will omit names and localities because I do not wish to be personal. This writer says:

I have been very much interested in your bill authorizing the States to tax greenbacks, and I desire to call your attention to some facts which came under my personal observation which deeply impressed me with the injustice of the present law on that subject. Last year I acted as assistant assessor at ———, and as such it became my duty to assess a private banker. When I called for the amount of cash on hand he said he had some. He then produced a large roll of greenbacks amounting to $105,000 as part of his "cash on hand."

* * * * * * * *

I think your bill should become a law.

Yours, truly,

——— ———.

I read these two letters in order to point out the precise evil that we seek to correct. I am told that at the day when property should be returned for taxation in all the States where money is taxed as property there is an effort made to have on hand at that time for the purpose of escaping taxation as many Treasury notes as can be gathered. In fact, I understand that many days preceding the date of the assessment private bankers at least, if not national bankers, because the latter have not so strong a temptation in that direction as the private bankers, national banks being taxed on their stock and not on their deposits—but the private bankers begin to cull out and lay aside the greenbacks in order to have them on hand at the time of the assessment.

I am told also that this form of money is transferred from State to State where different days are established by law for the assessment of property, and is used for the same purpose in more than one place. So that I have no doubt the entire $346,000,000 of greenbacks in existence not only escape taxation, but by reason of the fact that that money is exempt from taxation a great deal more than the $346,000,000 is exempt by persons claiming to have greenbacks when they have not. I have a letter from another part of my district exemplifying this condition of affairs, from which I will read an extract:

I am in the midst of my assessing for this year and I still meet with reminders of that unjust national law which exempts greenbacks from local taxation. I still meet with the usual number of taxpayers who had a little money on the 1st of April, but it was greenbacks. I have become a little more inquisitive than usual, and I ask some of them to let me see their greenbacks, which they have all done so far, and I have only found two parties so far that had any greenbacks. I asked them if they had got any of them lately and they said no. All the others who thought they had greenbacks had silver certificates or Treasury notes. Our people are anxious to see your bill taxing greenbacks become a law.

So that, as I said, not only are the $346,000,000 exempt, but I have no doubt that as much as double that sum is exempted under the cloak which is afforded by this exemption.

Now, Mr. Speaker, an attempt was made to remedy this soon after the war. Ex-Senator McDonald of Indiana, one of the ablest lawyers our State has ever given to public life, introduced the bill in the Senate. For some reason it failed to pass that body. Afterwards a bill was introduced by Senator GEORGE of Mississippi, which was sent to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and was favorably reported unanimously by that committee; and I wish to state it here in the House, for I think it is entitled to weight, that the language of that bill was partly framed by ex-Senator Edmunds of Vermont, who is known to all members present as one of the ablest lawyers in the country. That bill passed the Senate in December, 1890, and was subsequently reported favorably from the House Committee on Banking and Currency by Mr. Morrill of Kansas. For lack of time, however, or perhaps from the lack of pressure behind it, the bill failed to pass Congress.

At the beginning of this Congress I introduced the bill which is now pending in the House. I make this statement because my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], in his speech in opposition to the bill spoke of it, as I thought, rather contemptuously as "legislation proposed by the gentleman from Indiana in his little bill."

Mr. Speaker, I have made no pretense to originality in this matter. In fact the gentleman will remember that in my argument before the committee of which he is a member, I then stated the various efforts that had been made in this behalf. This proposition is not original with any of us. The propriety of it suggests itself to all who care for justice and demand equality, the importance of it to those who have given it most thought and investigation.

To further show the extent to which this matter has provoked public notice and remonstrance, I call attention to a plank in the Democratic State platform of Indiana for the campaign of 1892. I will read the plank to which I refer:

Inasmuch as the exemption of greenback money from taxation by national law is not only unjust in principle, but also is the occasion of much fraudulent evasion of local tax laws, we demand that the Indiana Senators and Representatives in Congress use their influence to secure the passage of laws making greenbacks taxable as other money.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understand the gentleman to say that in the Fifty-first Congress a bill passed the Senate enabling the States to tax Treasury notes, commonly known as greenbacks.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. That is correct; yes. It passed the Senate in December, 1890.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I did not recollect about it, and I wanted to see if I understood the gentleman aright.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Now, Mr. Speaker, some question is raised as to whether Congress at this time has the power, or ought to relieve the difficulty by permitting the States to subject this kind of property to taxation. Upon that subject I would very much desire those who are interested in that constitutional question to give me their attention.

Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky. Before you begin to discuss the constitutional question I desire to ask you—I could not hear you distinctly—whether your substitute is exactly in the language of the bill that was reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. The substitute which I have offered, and which is pending, is in substance the language of the bill as reported from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate; but at the suggestion of some of the gentlemen on the other side of the House, I made a verbal amendment, merely to relieve the language of some obscurity, as they thought.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did the Senate bill provide for the taxation of national-bank notes? Was any question raised as to that?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes, sir; but if gentlemen will allow me, I wish to discuss the verbiage of the bill at a later stage of my remarks, and I should prefer to answer these questions at that time.

Mr. Speaker, the bill before us proposes to relinquish to the State no constitutional power or authority which is granted by express words to the General Government. I wish to have that understood at the beginning. It is true that wherever an express grant of power is made by the Constitution to the General Government, that power is inalienable. Congress can neither delegate to the States, nor the States receive and exercise such a power. But, Mr. Speaker, there are certain powers not expressly granted, but which from necessity are held to belong to the Federal Government—powers which follow and flow from those expressed, which supplement and make effectual those defined and named. The power to protect one of its instrumentalities is one of these. We do not question the existence of that power nor do we ask that she shall surrender it, but we do insist that she has the right to say just how far she will go in the exercise of that power and where the limit shall be.

This being a power constructively given, a power to preserve the agencies and instrumentalities of the Government it, should certainly be used no further than may be found necessary to accomplish that end. Whenever in this case the money issued by the Government is protected from unequal taxation, from unjust discrimination, that end is accomplished. No one ought to ask more. This bill, Mr. Speaker, makes ample provision against any such abuse.

But it is insisted that there is a contract, a guaranty of immunity from taxation, created by the law under which the notes were issued and that this immunity is a kind of vested right which inheres in the note and passes from one to another with the bill. There are two answers to this proposition, either of which is conclusive.

First. The exemption does not depend upon the statutes, but upon the constitutional rights of the Government; and,

Second. There is no contract of exemption either declared in the law nor implied from the circumstances. It is true that the law declares "that they shall be exempt from taxation by or under any State or municipal authority," but this was not a promise to the holder; it was an inhibition against the local taxing powers. The authors of this law knew how to use language that would create a contract. They do so in the very first section, where they declare "and any holders of said United States notes," etc., may convert them into United States coupon or registered bonds.

Now, that is contract language—the language of promise—but this law nowhere declares that any holder of said United States notes shall be exempt from taxation thereon. No such language is used. There is simply a declaration that served as a notice that for the time being and under the circumstances the Government would not allow them to be taxed by any authority save her own.

I call your attention now to the language of this law again. It reads that they "shall be exempt from taxation by or under any State or municipal authority." That is not a promise that they shall be entirely exempt from taxation.

If it had been intended that they should be exempt from taxation, the language would have been "they shall be exempt from taxation." Now, the expression "by or under State authority," was technical, and what did it mean? It meant that the States should not tax upon their own authority; that the Government withheld that authority. There is nothing in the language of this bill which provides that the General Government shall not tax these notes nor that she will not authorize the States to do so.

Now, to illustrate: The language of the statute to which I refer is that these notes shall not be taxed by or under State authority. Now, if this bill passes they will not be taxed under State authority. They will be taxed under our authority.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Do you claim that the Congress of the United States can confer upon a State the authority to levy a tax?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes, sir; I have discussed that question somewhat. I call your attention to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in 3 Wallace, the case of Van Alen against the assessor. That was a case like this.

The General Government had authorized the State governments to tax the shares of national-banking associations. They were held to be the agents of the General Government; but Congress thought it unwise to withdraw from taxation so large an amount of property or money as would be invested in national-banking associations, and therefore the Government authorized the States to tax the shares of national banks; and the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case to which I refer, decided the very question which the gentleman asks.

Now, I will read from that decision. I will read from page 585 of that decision:

It is said that Congress possesses no power to confer upon a State authority to be exercised which power has been exclusively delegated to that body by the Constitution, and consequently that it can not confer upon a State the sovereign right of taxation; nor is a State competent to receive a grant of any such power from Congress. We agree to this. But as it respects a subject-matter over which Congress and the States may exercise a concurrent power, but from the exercise of which Congress by reason of its paramount authority may exclude the States, there is no doubt Congress may withhold the exercise of that authority and leave the States free to act.

Again, it is held (in the National Bank vs. Commonwealth, 9 Wallace) that the rule exempting instrumentalities of the Federal Government is limited by the principle that State legislation which does not interfere with the usefulness of such instruments is not within the rule of prohibition.

Mr. RAY. Will the gentleman permit me just a minute?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAY. I do not know whether I will vote for this bill or not, and here is the question that troubles me a little. I would like the gentleman to state his views upon it, if he will, without desiring to consume too much of the gentleman's time.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I will be glad to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. RAY. Now, when those Treasury notes were issued under the laws of the United States they were not taxable. That is true, is it not?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAY. By express provision of law.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. And by a correct interpretation of the Constitution, even in the absence of any express provision of law, in my judgment.

Mr. RAY. Now, they have gone into circulation and are in the hands of bona fide holders.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAY. And I believe it has been held that they are not money.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. No; on the contrary, they have been uniformly held to be money——

Mr. COX. They are held to be money.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. They are declared to be money in the very law under which they were issued. This is the language of the act: "And shall be lawful money." The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Bank vs. Supervisors, 7th Wallace, held them to be money.

Mr. RAY. Very well; then they are money. Then you have what you say is money in the hands of the people.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAY. Taken by the people.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAY. Under a law which declares that they shall not be subject to taxation.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAY. Now, you propose, after these notes are in the hands of the people, and taken under the law, to turn around and not tax them by authority of the General Government exactly—that is the General Government does not impose a direct tax, but it does say that each State, if it sees fit, may impose a tax upon them.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Under limitations prescribed by us.

Mr. RAY. Is not that a breach of good faith, a violation of the terms of the contract and of the conditions under which the people took these notes?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. No, sir. I am glad the gentleman asked that question, although I was coming to it. Upon that point I call attention to Cooley on Taxation, which treats of the very question the gentleman has asked me. I read from page 52:

There are cases in which State Legislatures have pledged the State in a more or less formal manner, that on some particular subject of taxation the State should refrain, either wholly or for some definite period, from levying any taxes whatever, or should levy them only to a certain extent. Whether such a pledge could bind the State has been made the subject of controversy. The general rule is that one legislative body can not by its own action narrow the scope of the legislative power, but with the same amplitude that it comes to one body it must pass to the successor.

Pledges, therefore, or stipulations by one Legislature regarding the future levy of taxes, though they may under some circumstance charge the consciences of the members or their successors, are not limitations on legislative power, but may be observed or disregarded as it shall be thought the public necessity or policy may require. An exception, however, is held to exist in case of an agreement by a State, entered into for a consideration, to refrain from exercising this power; that provision of the Federal Constitution which forbids the State passing laws which impair the obligation of contracts, applying as well to contracts by the State itself as to those between individuals.

Mr. Speaker, in discussing this question, gentlemen who claim that this exemption is a vested right should not forget what it takes to constitute a vested right.

There can be no vested right without a consideration. The power of taxation is an attribute of sovereignty. It has been doubted by some of our ablest and wisest jurists whether a legislative body has the right, even for a consideration, to bargain away the taxing power. It certainly can not be done as a mere matter of favor. I read from the syllabus of the case of Wilmington Railroad Company against Alsbrook, page 137, 110 North Carolina Reports:

The grant of an exemption from taxation without some consideration or equivalent therefor received by the State does not constitute a contract, but a privilege merely, which may be recalled at the pleasure of the Legislature.

The charter of the Dartmouth College was held inviolable upon the ground that it was a contract. The language of the court (Chief Justice Marshall delivering the opinion) is:

This is plainly a contract to which the donors, the trustees, and the crown (to whose rights and obligations New Hampshire succeeds) were the original parties. It is a contract made on a valuable consideration. It is a contract on the faith of which real and personal estate has been conveyed to the corporation. (Dartmouth College vs. Woodward, 4 Wheaton, page 643.)

And so, Mr. Speaker, it will be found in every case where a charter has been upheld and held not subject to subsequent alteration or repeal by legislative enactment, that such charters were granted upon some valid and binding consideration.

Now, I want to call attention to the difference between the contract as to the bonds and these legal-tender notes. The bonds were authorized and exempted from taxation and it was provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should negotiate them. He was to go out and meet the citizen and make contracts for the sale of the bonds. The rate of interest was fixed, it is true, in the law, but the price the bonds would bring in the market was to be a matter of contract between the citizen and the State.

That was a private contract. And, so far as the bonds are affected by that exemption and by the contract that was made, there is no question in my mind but that they are and will be exempt; and in fact, the contract is printed on the face of the bonds that they shall be exempt. That, I repeat, is a private contract. Now, the difference between that case and this is that this is not a private contract. There was no contract between the citizen who took the legal-tender note and the General Government, except that the General Government agreed to pay it, and to pay it, as I believe, in gold or silver coin, and that contract on the part of the Government will be performed whenever it does that. Now, I want to say further, that if there is anything else that the citizen took by reason of the law or the contract beyond the right to get his money in gold or silver there was no consideration given for it.

Mr. WARNER. And is it not also a fact that, in contradistinction to the process by which the bonds are marketed, namely, negotiation, the greenbacks were issued under the sanction of the law, which, by making them legal tender and forcing them into circulation, left not even the possibility of a contract relation existing between the man who took them and the United States Government?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I subscribe to every word of that. You have anticipated what I was about to say. The taker of the greenback did not surrender any more value for it than if he had taken any other form of legal-tender money. He gave no consideration for any extra promise. He surrendered nothing that entitled him to claim anything more than his money on demand. So that if he thinks he had any additional contract by reason of the prohibition of State taxation contained in the law, I say he gave nothing for it. He is mistaken, too, if he thinks that this was a private contract. It was nothing but a declaration of public policy on the part of the General Government.

Mr. WARNER. Is it not also a fact that at the time that exemption went into force there was no redemption provided for the greenback?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. That is true. Those notes were not made payable on demand, for it was known that they could not then be paid.

Mr. WARNER. And that, therefore, to insist upon that exemption now, is to insist that when the Government is ready to perform the only promise that it did make in that direction, the citizen who refrains from asking the performance of that contract shall still have the benefit of the exemption which was given as long as the performance of the contract was not offered by the Government.

Mr. RAY. The gentleman says that the Government when it issued these notes forced them into circulation, compelled the people to take them. Well, they did take them, and they took them under a law which said that the notes should not be subject to taxation. Now, I do not see how he can claim that the Government has not given its solemn promise that those notes shall not be taxed.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. If the gentleman will hear me through I think he will have that point cleared up. I have tried to explain to the gentleman the difference between a private contract and a law declaring a public policy. I do not admit that the takers of the greenbacks took them with any private contract that they should be exempt from taxation. I hold that that provision in the law was merely an inhibition against taxation by the States, and that the citizen gave nothing for what he took in that respect, if he took anything.

Mr. RAY. But did not the citizen take all the benefits which the law gave him?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. He has enjoyed those benefits.

Mr. RAY. And one of those benefits was that these notes would not be taxed by the States.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. He has enjoyed that benefit because the Government said that it should be so, but we did not agree to continue that indefinitely. We are under no obligation either legal or moral to do so.

Mr. RAY. But is there not an implied promise, if you put in circulation an obligation of that kind, that the conditions shall continue as long as the obligation is out?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I am coming to that point.

Mr. QUIGG. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I suppose he perceives that my colleague from New York [Mr. RAY] is raising a question not so much of law as of good faith. Cooley undoubtedly informs us that we have the power and the right to enact such legislation as this, but the question is as to the good faith of it.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Well, as to that I will say that there can be no question upon the part of anybody that the Government of the United States has acted with perfect good faith with all its creditors. These greenbacks were taken by the people when they were worth only 30 or 40 cents on the dollar, and we have made them equal or superior to gold, and it seems only proper and just that these notes, which are money, which perform all the functions of money, shall be subject to taxation like other money and property.

There is not even a suggestion of bad faith in it. But, addressing myself to my friend from New York [Mr. RAY], I wish to call his attention to the difference between a private contract, such as is made between a citizen and the State when bonds are negotiated, and the declaration of public policy that was made by the Government with reference to the greenbacks. I hold in my hand 13 Wallace's Reports, in which the Supreme Court of the United States decides the case of the Salt Company against East Saginaw. No doubt many gentlemen here are familiar with that case. In brief it was this: The Legislature of the State of Michigan had provided a certain exemption from taxation with respect to all property invested in salt-making enterprises—salt wells, and such other property as might be useful and necessary in conducting that business. Afterwards the Legislature repealed the laws providing such exemption. Men had erected costly machinery and invested large sums of money in those enterprises; and they came into court and claimed immunity from taxation.

The question was presented whether this was a private contract binding upon the Legislature under the inhibition of the Constitution providing that no State shall pass any law impairing the obligations of contracts, or whether the act of the Legislature was simply a declaration of public policy which could be made and unmade at the pleasure of the legislative power. This is an important case, and one which I think has a bearing on this question. I therefore wish to read somewhat fully from it:

> Had the plaintiff in error been incorporated by a special charter, and had that charter contained the provision that all its lands and property used in the manufacture of salt should forever, or during the continuance of its charter, be exempt from taxation, and had that charter been accepted and acted on, it would have constituted a contract. But the case before us is not of that kind. It declares in purport and effect that all corporations and individuals who shall manufacture salt in Michigan from water obtained by boring in that State, shall be exempt from taxation as to all property used for that purpose, and after they shall have manufactured 5,000 bushels of salt, they shall receive a bounty of 10 cents per bushel. That is the whole of it. As the supreme court of Michigan says, it is a bounty law, and nothing more; a law dictated by public policy and the general good, like a law offering a bounty of 50 cents for the killing of every wolf or other destructive animal.
> Such a law is not a contract except to bestow the promised bounty upon those who earn it, so long as the law remains unrepealed. There is no pledge that it shall not be repealed at any time. As long as it remains a law every inhabitant of the State, every corporation having the requisite power, is at liberty to avail himself, or itself, of its advantages, at will, by complying with its terms, and doing the things which it promises to reward, but is also at liberty at any time to abandon such a course. There is no obligation on any person to comply with the conditions of the law. It is a matter purely voluntary; and, as it is purely voluntary on the one part, so it is purely voluntary on the other part; that is, on the part of the Legislature, to continue or not to continue the law.
> The law in question says to all: You shall have a bounty of 10 cents per bushel for all salt manufactured, and the property used shall be free from taxes. But it does not say how long this shall continue; nor do the parties who enter upon the business promise how long they will continue the manufacture. It is an arrangement determinable at the will of either of the parties, as much so as the hiring of a laboring man by the day.
> If it be objected that such a view of the case exposes parties to hardship and injustice, the answer is ready at hand, and is this: It will not be presumed that the Legislature of a sovereign State will do acts that inflict hardship and injustice.

Now, I think this case makes perfectly clear the difference between charter or contract rights and rights growing out of a law merely declaring a public policy.

There is another case to which I wish to refer, although I will not take time to read the decision. The Legislature of the State of New York offered immunity from taxation to the amount of $1,000 worth of property to anyone who would join a certain militia company for the term of seven years, I believe. Now, the Legislature, after having inveigled some of its citizens into that militia company under such inducements, repealed the law. I have no doubt my amiable friend from New York [Mr. RAY], who sits in front of me, knows all about that decision.

Mr. RAY. Let me say right here that the law was repealed because nobody went into that militia company under that act except the tax jumpers. The halt, the lame, and the blind, and others who were good for nothing as soldiers, went into that organization for the purpose of escaping taxation.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. And nobody will be affected by the bill which I propose here to-day except tax dodgers. [Laughter.] Somebody evidently went into that militia company; because there arose this case in which a similar exemption is claimed to that which is claimed here for the greenbacks. But the supreme court of the State of New York held that such exemption was simply a declaration of public policy, not a contract between the citizen and the State. So I say that a law exempting greenbacks from taxation is simply a general declaration of public policy, an inhibition upon the State, not a contract made between the citizen and the Government which issues these notes. It seems to me that is clear.

Mr. QUIGG. What have you to say as to the expediency of the measure?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am asked to address myself to the question of the expediency of this law. In the first place, I want to call the attention of the House particularly to the importance of this question. There are $346,000,000 of these greenbacks outstanding, and $152,000,000 of Treasury notes issued under the Sherman law, which are equally exempt, because they are Treasury notes and obligations of the United States. As to these so-called Sherman notes the injustice of this exemption is manifest at once when we consider the fact that they are represented in the Treasury by the supposed value which we received in exchange for them. So that we have withdrawn from taxation not only the one hundred and fifty-two millions deposited in the Treasury, but we have also the same amount withdrawn from taxation in the hands of the holders of the Government obligations, and which represent this amount. So that there can be no question of the injustice of that exemption.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another branch of this question to which I wish to address myself briefly, and particularly to call the attention of any of the members from the State of Mississippi, if any of them honor me with their attention at this time. The supreme court of that State has decided that national-bank notes were alike exempt from taxation under this law. They did not put it entirely upon the ground suggested by some who have mentioned the matter heretofore, but they based it on the ground that the statute expressly defines national-bank notes as obligations of the Government. And so it does, and I will call your attention to the language.

Now, in the same act which provided for the issuance of United States notes, but in a subsequent section, there is a definition of obligations of the Government of the United States in these words:

> SEC. 5413. The words "obligation or other security of the United States" shall be held to mean all bonds, certificates of indebtedness, national-bank currency, coupons, United States notes, Treasury notes, fractional notes, certificates of deposit, bills, checks, or drafts for money, drawn by or upon authorized officers of the United States, stamps or other representatives of value, of whatever denomination, which have been or may be issued under any act of Congress.

Mr. COX. Is that the statute of the State of Mississippi?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. No, sir.

Mr. COX. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. The statutes of the United States.

Now, the United States statute uses the language I have just read, "national-bank notes." The supreme court of Mississippi accepted the definition given to the words by this section of the statute, and held national-bank notes exempt from taxation, and therefore in that State they have been exempted from taxation. I do not think that that was a sound decision.

If gentlemen will look into the matter they will find that the supreme courts of Indiana and North Carolina have repudiated that decision, they holding that the use of the language read by me was in that part of the statute defining and providing punishment for crimes against the obligations or securities of the United States; and these words that I have quoted were used as defining such obligations and securities to which the penalties attached for forgery or fraud or other crime in connection with them, should apply. It had no reference whatever to the question of taxation. It is furthermore to be observed that the same sets of words are not used in each case, so that it is clear that no connection was intended between the two.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the State of Mississippi has decided that national-bank notes are exempt from taxation. So we have in Mississippi national-bank notes, Sherman notes, and greenbacks, all exempt from State tax. In order to meet this difficulty, at the suggestion of gentlemen from Mississippi, I put in the words "circulating notes of the national banks," in order to remove the difficulty and bring all of these obligations within the purview of the law. It will make the remedy more complete and relieve the people of Mississippi of the difficulty under which they are laboring. As suggested by someone around me, it does not injure the bill by being there.

Now, we have in one part of the country national-bank notes exempt; in all parts I believe the Sherman notes exempt, and also the original greenbacks. But I think there is still a graver question which has not been presented in connection with the matter. I am not at all sure that gold and silver certificates are not exempt. They are obligations of the General Government just as much as the greenbacks. They are certificates of deposit; and a certificate of deposit is not a contract to repay any specific money, but a contract to pay a specific sum of money. It is therefore an obligation of the United States. There are, in round numbers, about $400,000,000 of these certificates.

Mr. KEM. Does this bill include all currency?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes, sir; it is intended to clear up the whole matter and put all money or currency circulating as such on the same footing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to address myself to the expediency of the question. Here are $346,000,000 of greenbacks and $152,000,000 of Treasury notes, about $500,000,000, which all agree are exempt from taxation. They are held by the banks and capitalists and are called out from deposits wherever they are accessible. I made an effort to obtain a greenback here sometime ago, and found great difficulty in doing so.

The fact of the matter is that they are hoarded. Their owners will not surrender them. They are kept for the purpose of avoiding taxation. They are held mainly by misers and private bankers in the States. The last report of the Comptroller of the Currency shows that the national banks held $114,000,000 of them as a part of their reserves. It is said these do not escape taxation, because national banks only pay on their capital stock. But I have been advised that even this money is made to do duty for the stockholders and favorite customers on the day on which taxes become a lien. They are not in circulation. You can scarcely get one of them. They have been retired under that general law which operates to retire every class of currency, when a special value is attached to it.

Mr. BROSIUS. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word in relation to that?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes, if the gentleman will be brief.

Mr. BROSIUS. My friend misconceives the situation in reference to the circulation of these notes, I think. A member of this House yesterday showed me his whole month's salary, paid in greenbacks, and the Government is paying them out right along to members of the House and others.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. They will disappear like water poured upon the desert of Sahara, and will find their lodging place in the chest of the miser and in the vaults of the banks, where the taxgatherer will not get them. Now, I say there are $500,000,000, on the face of the law, exempt from taxation. What does that cost us? Why, in most of the cities and towns of this country, including county and State taxation, the rate of taxation is at least 2½ per cent. These notes are mostly held in cities.

We are therefore paying 2½ per cent on these notes by exempting them from taxation. We can borrow money for that, and get gold by issuing a 2½ per cent bond, and we would better do it than to continue a system which not only costs us 2½ per cent upon the amount of these notes, but also affords a protection and a cloak and an excuse for the exemption of millions and millions more, the full amount of which we can not know.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one word with reference to the supposed effect on this currency itself. Some one has said, and I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] contends, that all money ought to be exempt from taxation, and that it is so in Pennsylvania. Well, while I am not well advised as to the methods of Pennsylvania, or how well they operate, I know that the constitutions of seven-tenths of the States of the Union treat money as personal property and require it to be listed for taxation. I know that is so in the State in which I live. I know it is true in the State of Ohio, because the constitution of that State expressly mentions money as one of the subjects of taxation, and I know that in most other States there is an effort to compel taxation on hoarded cash.

I wish to say for myself that I believe the man who has money is in the best position of all others to pay taxes. He has realized. The man who has a crib of corn must yet make the market, and there are between him and his market, perhaps, muddy roads, bad weather, and the chances of the market; but the man who has delivered his goods, who has realized on what he has had to sell, he is in the best position of all, it seems to me, to pay taxes.

But they say it will drive money out of circulation if you tax it. Why, Mr. Speaker, the fact is, if you withdraw from taxation any one of these kinds of money, that will of itself operate as a reason why it shall be held. If a man's money is subject to taxation, he will invest it. If it is exempt from taxation, he will not invest it unless he has the promise of larger return than he would otherwise get, because he knows it is no expense to him. If you tax it it will work.

As my friend the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] said yesterday, an idle horse in the stable does not profit a man, but if you will tax idle horses they will go to work, and if you will tax money the owner of it will be obliged to stir himself to get a return sufficient to pay the taxes on it, and it will make it pass current, and make its circulation more lively.

The fact is, and I think it is within the observation of every man in the sound of my voice, that greenbacks have been retired from circulation practically, because they are not subject to taxation, and wherever a man desires to hold any form of money he prefers to have it in the form of greenbacks, and when he gets greenbacks he holds them as long as he is not tempted by some seductive investment to bring his money out from its retirement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is all I desire to say on this branch of the subject.

Mr. BROSIUS. Will my friend allow a question?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has seven minutes.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. BROSIUS. I want to ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat. Can the gentleman inform the House what amount of money at any time, in any one year, in any section, in any political division of his State, has been returned for taxation?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. These accounts are not kept separately. I will tell the gentleman that in Indiana we have made a special effort, and that, too, against the opposition of members of his party to bring out the property that is subject to taxation, and that this bill is in line with that effort.

The gentleman will find that by the strict enforcement of just local laws we have brought out for taxation purposes millions and millions of money that has heretofore been kept in hiding and escaped taxation. The report of the tax commissioners which I hold in my hand, and which I will state was made by a nonpartisan board, states that under the operation of our new law we have been able to bring out many millions of dollars that had escaped taxation. Here is what they say:

> Millions of dollars that formerly escaped taxation have been brought upon the tax duplicate, and an equalization in assessment of property has been reached which is generally conceded to be more equitable than an equalization heretofore known in the State. In our opinion all that is now needed is an extension and more perfect application of the principles of the new law.

Mr. BROSIUS. My friend certainly does not want to make the impression that the people of Indiana are in the habit of concealing their property.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. Our people are just as good as any. The gentleman will not entrap me into any reflection upon the people of Indiana. The habits of mankind with reference to money are the same all the world over. I want to say that I am perfectly willing to risk a comparison between Indiana and Pennsylvania. We want to tax everything. We want to make everybody pay his share for the support of the government, whereas in Pennsylvania the men who have the money are the men who escape taxation.

Mr. BROSIUS. Will the gentleman let me know whether the report of the auditor-general shows the amount of money reported for taxation?

Mr. COOPER, of Indiana. I have said these returns are not kept separately in our State, and I am unable to state how much is returned in cash for taxation; but I assure you that if you will give us the power to strike down this shield of the tax dodger we will see to it that we get all the taxes we are entitled to.

But, Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. JOHNSON] and also the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] have insisted that the evils of which we complain can be corrected by the States themselves; that it has been decided that the transfer of property into these exempt forms for the purpose of defrauding the State revenues is unlawful, and if detected will not be successful. But the difficulty is in proving the fraudulent purpose, and in following up each case and arriving at the real facts.

Besides it has also been held that a party may convert his money and property into United States notes, notwithstanding it be with intent to avoid taxation, the distinction being that it must not be a mere device, but a bona fide transaction. This was so held by the supreme court of Indiana in the case of Stilwell vs. Corwin (55 Ind., page 433). Take, for instance, the case mentioned in one of the letters read by me, where a private banker had selected from the bills which passed through his bank $105,000 in Treasury notes. No one will doubt, I presume, that this was done for the purpose of exempting that much of his property from taxation, and yet it can not be denied that that transaction was perfectly legitimate as the law now stands.

This very case, however, serves to illustrate the injustice of existing conditions, and to my mind it serves as an unanswerable argument in favor of this bill. In the city in which I live this sum of $105,000, which is made exempt in the hands of a single banker, would cover the cost of a hundred humble but comfortable homes. These are taxed to their full value, and in the hands of their owners nothing is exempt. Such an unjust discrimination and such an unequal distribution of burdens is not calculated to inspire in the mind of the average citizen that faith in the fairness and justice of his country which alone can make it the object of his affectionate regard.

I will call attention now, Mr. Speaker, and I wish the attention of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE] to the verbal differences in the bill which the committee has reported and that which is pending as a substitute. It was thought by the gentleman from Virginia, and suggested, I believe, on the floor of the House, that the original draft of the bill as introduced by me would compel the States to tax these notes. We do not want to force this boon on Pennsylvania and other States whose policy it may be to exempt money from taxation, and I do not care to insist on the provision as I first introduced it, but desire to provide that by permission of the General Government they may be subject to taxation in the States and Territories.

The substitute offered by me will read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all circulating notes of national banking associations and all United States legal-tender notes, and all other notes and certificates of the United States payable on demand and circulating as currency, shall be subject to taxation under the laws of any State or Territory: Provided, That any such taxation shall be exercised in the same manner and at the same rate that any such State or Territory shall tax other property, money or currency circulating as money within its jurisdiction.

Mr. MARSH. Does that cover the silver or the gold certificates?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I think so.

Mr. MARSH. Would it cover a gold certificate that was based upon a deposit of bullion?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I think so. Let us look at the language: "That all certificates of the United States payable on demand and circulating as currency, and all United States legal-tender notes." Now, the Sherman notes are United States legal-tender notes, declared so by the act which created them.

Mr. MARSH. Yes; but the silver certificates and the gold certificates are what I am directing your attention to.

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. They are included. "All other notes and certificates of the United States payable on demand and circulating as currency," is the language of the bill——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois was recognized, and yielded fifteen minutes to Mr. NORTHWAY.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, I shall have no time during the fifteen minutes allotted to me to discuss many of the questions which have been considered by gentlemen who have preceded me in this debate. I shall confine myself in what I say to one branch of the subject. I shall not discuss the question of whether we can constitutionally confer on the States power to tax greenbacks or any other form of national credit. I shall not discuss, either, the propriety of taxing silver certificates or national-bank currency, further than to say that until yesterday I did not know that there was a State in this Union which had held that national-bank currency was not taxable.

In my State and in all the States around me national-bank notes are taxable as much as horses and cows; and I was surprised to hear yesterday that the State of Mississippi had held that they were not taxable. In what I have to say I shall confine myself to the question of the taxation of greenbacks. I shall not discuss the question whether the greenbacks would be taxable by the States or municipal corporations if there had been nothing said in the law about their not being taxed. I know that question was discussed by the able gentleman from Indiana yesterday, but I have no time to venture upon it now.

I want to call the attention of the House to one question only, and then to leave it. What were the conditions obtaining at the time the greenbacks were issued? I know it has been said by the gentleman who was last on the floor, as bearing on the question of the policy of taxing the greenbacks, that even though the time had been when it was not politic to tax them, that time had passed away. I want to express strong dissent from that idea, and to say that if there ever was a time when the Government should say that they were not taxable, and did say it, that condition should exist, in my opinion, so long as there is a greenback.

I can not conceive that the pledge of its faith on the part of the Government is limited to days, or months, or years. Whatever pledge of faith was made by the Government relative to the greenback was not to the individual who took it, but inhered in the very paper itself and lasts as long as the paper shall last. I know it has been said here by gentlemen on both sides that Government bonds should not be taxed. Why? Because it was a part of the contract they should not be taxed. I adhere to that idea as strongly as any person can, that the Government bonds ought not to be taxed, but I affirm this proposition, that, as between the two, the greenback and the bond, the bond should be first taxed.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If my friend will permit an interruption, while I have much sympathy with what he says about keeping the contract, I will ask him whether he does not think that when the Government is willing to pay the greenback in gold; when any holder of any greenback can have it paid in gold at any minute, whether he does not think, in view of that fact, that the pledge which the Government made, both for the redemption and the nontaxation of the greenback is fairly kept?

Mr. NORTHWAY. No. Let them call in the greenback and pay the gold, and then you can tax the gold, if you please.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. But the Government can not pay a greenback unless the holder presents it.

Mr. NORTHWAY. It can call them in and redeem them.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Does not the gentleman know that the Treasurer of the United States has no power to do that?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Well, we can pass a law authorizing it, and let us do that if it is thought desirable, instead of violating our faith.

Now, I want to pursue the thought I was presenting. What was the condition of affairs at the time the greenback was issued? The Government was in debt. It was struggling with a gigantic rebellion. It had no gold or silver with which to pay the soldiers or to pay the creditors of the Government. In this emergency it simply forced a loan. Not as a contract with individuals, but as a strong, gigantic exercise of power, it compelled men to take the greenbacks. It struck off this money and forced it upon the citizens. They were compelled to take it.

Now, I submit that when the strong arm of the law compels a man to take a piece of paper as money, the Government ought to stand firmly by its pledge of faith. If a government is not willing to do this it ought not to pledge its faith to any individual. Four hundred and fifty million dollars of greenbacks were paid to individuals under compulsion. It was a forced loan. The people were compelled to take these greenbacks in the discharge of indebtedness.

Mr. KEM. The Government does not compel the people to take those greenbacks at this time?

Mr. NORTHWAY. No, sir. I will come to that point in a moment.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Is it not true that the provision of law prohibiting the States from taxing these notes is no part of the original act?

Mr. NORTHWAY. That matters not.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. In point of fact, this provision was passed some time later—after the war.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I will say that that is a point which is not material. At the time the greenback was issued there were two or three qualities attached to it, as everybody understands. One was that the Government should issue no more than a limited number of these greenbacks. Another was that at some time, when the Government should become powerful enough, it would redeem those greenbacks in the standard money of the world. Another quality that was attached to the greenback was that no power on earth should tax it. When the greenback was forced into a man's pocket it was forced there with these qualities attaching to it.

Mr. MARSH. Will my friend let me tell him one other condition which was attached to the greenbacks; that is, that they were convertible into interest-bearing bonds?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Certainly.

Mr. MARSH. And that has been violated.

Mr. NORTHWAY. By whom?

Mr. MARSH. And I have not heard a word from the gentleman against that violation.

Mr. NORTHWAY. You can convert these greenbacks into any interest-bearing bond that you may select.

Mr. POWERS. Was not the gentleman in error in saying that this immunity of the greenback from taxation was a part of the law under which the greenback was issued?

Mr. NORTHWAY. I did not say so. I understand that it was not a provision of the law at the time the greenback was issued.

Mr. POWERS. The immunity was not provided by law until several years afterward.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. There was an immunity arising under the Constitution, without reference to any statute: it was so declared twice by Chief Justice John Marshall.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Everybody understood, including my friend from Vermont, that these greenbacks were not taxable. And I want to say another thing. There is not a State of this Union in which an election was held between 1862 and 1870 in which the question of the taxation of the greenback and the national bond was not fought out. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] took the position, and so did I, that they were not taxable. The able gentleman from Ohio [Gen. GROSVENOR] and I have fought campaigns in the State of Ohio, where the platform of one party declared that all property, including greenbacks and Government bonds, should be subject to taxation. In those campaigns we fought to maintain the faith of the Government.

And my friend from Ohio, with his trip-hammer blows as a giant stumper, has carried the people of that State with him many a time on that issue. The battle has been fought in the State of Indiana and the State of Illinois and in all our Northern States. Assault was made upon the greenback and the Government bond alike in many a political platform. It was declared that these obligtions of the Government were taxable and should be taxed. But we have stood like adamant against that position and claimed that the faith of the Government and all its powers were pledged for the exemption of these obligations from taxation, and that we would redeem the pledge or die in the attempt. That is what we said.

When the greenback was issued there was coupled with it the idea that it was not taxable; and the reasons for that are as strong to-day as when the greenback was issued.

Mr. HULICK. That provision was inserted in the statute itself.

Mr. NORTHWAY. It was a part of the statutes of our country that they were to be nontaxable. There can be no question of that; and I submit to-day that they ought not to be taxed, and that Congress should not be called upon to take such action as is proposed here.

Mr. Speaker, I say to you, pass this law if you will; and I tell you this to-day, that inside of three years there will come a time when the question will be presented here whether you will recall or repeal the statute providing that Government bonds shall be exempt from taxation, and making them available in the States for that purpose. You need not say that you do not favor it. It is a well-known fact that there are a great many people in different parts of the country who do favor such action.

Why, in the State of Ohio I have known a party to succeed twice to office who declared in their public platform that they should be taxed, as was stated by an able gentleman from my State on yesterday who made a speech on this floor. And if you break faith with the people in reference to the greenback, and the condition on which it was issued, you may break faith as to the Government bond just as well.

But gentlemen tell us in the course of this discussion that greenbacks are hoarded. Why? Why, the argument shows, if it shows anything, that the people are depending on the good faith of the Government in reference to them. And yet you would violate that faith, although the people are depending upon it. Is that the logic of the situation? Shall the Government go back on its pledges and on its honor because of the fact that the people are relying upon it? I am not arguing on the question of policy, whether the greenbacks should have been made taxable in the first instance or not. That is not at issue here. They were put into existence by the Government with the distinct understanding that they should not be taxed. That pledge, that promise, is still in existence and should remain unbroken. They have been put into existence, and the gentlemen, I presume, have made speeches on the subject of the Government's faith and the Government's credit, and have perhaps written opinions in reference to it; and if they have not, then they have been upon the wrong side of the question in all these years. These obligations of the Government went out to the people with the promise and the pledge of the faith of the Government. That pledge has been in existence for thirty-two years and has never been violated. Why should it be violated now?

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Well, only for a moment; my time is very brief.

Mr. WARNER. Does the gentleman claim that the Government has no right to redeem the greenbacks?

Mr. NORTHWAY. The gentleman certainly has not done me the honor to listen to my remarks. I have made no such claim. I say that it is the duty of the Government to redeem them.

Mr. WARNER. Then if redemption of the greenbacks is provided for, and it is the duty of the Government to redeem them, does the gentleman insist that they shall still remain in existence in order to prevent another form of money from taking their place, which will be liable to the State laws of taxation, or that the greenback itself shall be exempt from its due share of the burdens of taxation?

Mr. NORTHWAY. What I claim, Mr. Speaker, is that the pledge of the Government, made when the greenback was issued, and under which it was taken by the people as money, exists to-day with as much force as it existed on the day they were put into circulation; I say that the pledge remains, and by the strong power of the Government I would maintain it.

Mr. WARNER. Is not the pledge on the face of the greenback that the Government would pay a dollar, and is not that pledge fulfilled when the dollar is put into the Treasury to pay it?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Well, I can not yield to the gentleman for a speech in the few brief minutes that I have.

Of course, the law provides now that as soon as they are redeemed by the Government they shall be reissued again, but that can be repealed, and they can be redeemed or retired at any time the Government sees proper. They can be redeemed in gold or silver.

Let the Government redeem every pledge it made, and then let the tax be levied on what is used to accomplish that redemption. But do not violate the obligations of the Government by attempting to impose a tax upon these notes. I repeat, they were issued under a pledge that they would not be taxed. Do not issue the promises of the Government to pay and force them on an unwilling community, and then, when the promises are outstanding, pass laws which will authorize the States to impose taxation upon the pledge of the Government. Why, Mr. Speaker, to pass such a law is to strike a vital blow at the very credit of the United States. You can not sell your bonds at the present prevailing high rate were it not for the fact that the people understand that the Government will redeem its pledges and that it will stand by its promises in good faith.

These greenbacks are valuable, you say, for orphans and widows and trust companies to hold. Why? Because the Government has pledged its faith relative to them, and that faith is worth something in dollars and cents. And because it is, you propose to take from them that quality or that value that has been given by virtue of the pledge of the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. POWERS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to continue.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I understand the gentleman does not care for any more time. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL].

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Speaker, the few words I shall say on this bill are rather by way of explanation of my vote than for the purpose of influencing the votes of other members. It seems to me that there are two issues involved: one a question of comparatively small magnitude, the other a matter of great importance. The smaller question relates to the general policy of taxation—what property should be taxed, and what should be exempt. Upon that point I take the ground that instead of extending taxation on money it would be the part of wisdom to still further restrict it. We have been asked why national notes should not be taxed if a tax is placed on gold and silver money.

I should say, do not tax gold and silver money. One of the recognized axioms of taxation, which I confess is very often more honored in the breach than in the observance, was laid down by Mr. Enoch Ensley, of Memphis, Tenn., when he said that a State should not tax anything of value to it that could or would run away, or which might or would come to it. Any tax on gold or silver money would have a tendency, first, to drive that money out of the country; and, second, to increase the rates of interest; in which case it would become peculiarly a tax upon the debtor class. England imposes a tax upon bankers' bills, but not upon silver or gold money. Holland, so long as she refrained from taxing coin or money capital, prospered marvelously, and she lost a large share of that prosperity when she adopted an opposite policy.

Money, in and of itself, is not valuable, but a mere fluid which carries the exchanges of a nation. The value of a horse, or an ox, or any other personal chattel, or of a farm, generally springs out of the possession of it. The possessor gets the use and the benefit; but the value of money consists in keeping it in motion. The man who has money derives an income from it by letting it at interest to another, or by paying a debt with it, but the manual possession of money does not generally contribute to his advantage. But this question as to what kind of property should be taxed is one that should ordinarily be left to the separate States to determine, subject, however, to the limitations which is imposed upon them on account of the sovereignty of the National Government. And this leads me to the greater question at issue here—it leads me to consider the fatal objection to this bill.

Should the States or the lesser local governments of this Union be permitted to tax the agencies and instrumentalities of the National Government? Should we permit them to tax the obligations of that Government, which are usually employed by it in emergencies to raise money and to preserve its very existence? The power to tax is the very highest incident of sovereignty. The power to tax involves the power to destroy. If Congress can grant to the States the power to impose a limited tax on our national obligations, it can grant them the power of free and unrestricted taxation. If the authority were granted to the States to tax the bonds or the demand notes of the National Government, they would be given the power, practically, to destroy these obligations, and consequently the Government itself.

I very much question whether Congress can constitutionally grant to the States the power involved in this bill, but I have no question whatever in regard to the absolute impropriety and lack of wisdom of such a grant.

The proposition of this bill is hostile to the public credit. The Government, of course, will be able to borrow money more cheaply if its bonds are not subject to taxation. But you say the greenback is not a bond; it is simply a demand note. The case is then stronger for the nontaxing of the demand note. In the case of a bond, the Government borrows money by paying interest. In the case of a greenback, it borrows money without paying interest. The greenback was a forced loan made in a grave emergency when the Government was in danger of destruction in the time of war, and its value was increased by the pledge of the Government, written upon our statute books, that it should not be subject to taxation.

I say that so far as the exemption from taxation is concerned, the greenback is surrounded with more sacred obligations than the bond, and if in any time of war or disaster that may in the future fall upon this country it should be necessary for it to make another emergency loan and to ask the money of the people without giving them any interest on their debt, it would be vastly to the advantage of the Government if it should religiously have observed every obligation with reference to the greenback.

If the greenback is to be made a permanent form of money, then let every dollar of them that have been issued under existing law be first retired before you subject them to taxation. Through the instrumentality of the national banks their retirement could be easily and speedily effected, and they could be presented for redemption in gold. But, you say, the Government does not have the gold sufficient to pay them. Very well, it is therefore interested in having the greenback continue in circulation among the people. If the greenback has any advantage over the gold into which it is convertible, the present is a very inauspicious time for taking away that advantage when we have in our Treasury less than 20 per cent of the amount of gold necessary to redeem them and applicable for that purpose.

But it is argued that the greenback is used as a means for evading taxation. I have heard no way suggested in this debate in which it has thus been used that does not amount to a most transparent artifice capable of being dealt with by any State law. The same method of evading taxation can be pursued by the use of the bond, and I believe that bonds have been used more commonly for that purpose than greenbacks. I have heard of bonds being sold by banks to their customers on the 29th of April, and bought back again on the 2d of May, after they had been made to figure in the returns of property for the purposes of taxation on the 1st of May. The States can not tax the greenback, but they certainly can punish the fraud involved in the pretense of ownership of the same identical Treasury note at the same moment of time by a dozen different persons.

When we consider the large amount of personal property subject to taxation that is concealed and never taxed, and when we consider further the large amount of greenbacks held by the banks, the amount of property practically added to the tax rolls by this bill, if every State in the Union should pass a law taxing the greenback, would be exceedingly small. Very little is to be gained, even from the view of that one in whose mind the cry of "tax-dodger" will justify any absurdity in legislation.

Little, I say, even from that view is to be gained. But how much is lost in order to effect that little gain? In the first place, you surrender a point vital to the sovereignty of this nation when you subject its obligations to the taxgatherers of the States and municipalities. The fine sentiment for the national honor and the national faith, especially shown in the support of this very greenback, and which stands to the immortal honor of the Republican party, is apparently disregarded, and the flag which has so proudly floated at the mast-head in every storm of war is hauled down after the ship has reached the peaceful port.

Believing, as I do, that this bill is a blow at the sovereignty of the nation, that it disregards our plighted faith that the greenback should not be taxed, and that it could confer in any event a very slight advantage upon the States, I shall record my vote against it.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HULICK].

Mr. HULICK. Mr. Speaker, I would like, if it were possible, to come to a conclusion to vote for this measure. If I were to consult my own wishes I would have all United States Treasury notes subject to taxation as all money or other property is taxed.

In Ohio we have been very greatly embarrassed in our efforts to get a perfect system of taxation, one that will result in the equal taxation of all property. And if it were possible that the $346,000,000 greenbacks could all be withdrawn from circulation and another class of notes issued, payable in gold, or an issue of other paper money upon a statute enacted by Congress, I would cheerfully vote for a measure of that kind, and provide therein for the taxation of United States Treasury notes as other property by the several States.

Mr. Speaker, these Treasury notes were issued at a time and under circumstances familiar to every member of this House, and it is only necessary to refer to them in considering this bill. It was a matter of life and death with the Government. Our armies were in the field, the soldiers had to be paid, the credit of the Government was assailed, not only by the South, but by a powerful influence in the North, and, in order to give currency to the greenbacks, this provision of exemption from taxation was incorporated in the law under which they were issued.

There were three acts of Congress under which these Treasury notes were issued. The first was the act of February 25, 1862. Fifty millions were issued under that act. The second was the act of July 11, 1862, and the third was the act of March 3, 1863. The last act expressly provides that the notes issued thereunder shall be exempt from taxation. The propriety of this was well understood at the time of their issue, and it was part of the consideration that passed to the holder that they were thus exempted, and if it were not for that provision in the law I would vote for this bill.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Now, will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him just here? Do not you recognize this, that whether there had been one or three statutes of 1862, the statute of 1863 exempted specifically these Treasury notes which the two statutes of 1862 did not? Do not you know that they could have been exempted without the statute expressly providing for it?

Mr. HULICK. Certainly.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. And therefore the statute has no power or influence in the matter?

Mr. HULICK. Most certainly. All obligations of the Government are exempt from taxation, whether so expressed in the law of issue or not.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. For the very reason that the law expressly prohibits the State from taxing national obligations without the authority of the National Government.

Mr. HULICK. The law, as gentlemen will remember, provides that all obligations of the Government, whether intended to circulate as currency or to be issued as only an obligation of the Government, are subject to taxation; but the act of 1862 declares that all United States bonds and other securities of the United States held by individuals, associations, or corporations within the United States shall be exempt from taxation by or under State authority. Now, the act of March, 1863——

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Right there, as to the act of March, 1862, that was merely re-enacted.

Mr. HULICK. The amount issued under the several acts was about $346,000,000, in round numbers.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. There were $470,000,000 issued.

Mr. HULICK. Possibly it may be that amount was issued.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. The others were retired.

Mr. HULICK. Now, I understand that some gentlemen on this floor have denied that the law of 1863 expressly exempted United States Treasury notes from taxation. It amends the law of 1862 by striking out "or other securities" and substitutes therefor the words "Treasury notes issued under the provisions of this act."

It is like a law of any municipality, any county or State bonds. The law of issue is a part of the contract, as much so as if it were written upon the face of the note. It is not necessary that it should be written on the face of the greenback itself. Every man who takes a greenback or a Government bond, or anything of that kind, goes to the law to learn what the contract is.

Under this act there were issued $346,381,016 of United States Treasury notes, greenbacks if you please. On the 1st day of July last, in the Treasury of the United States $77,908,645, and the amount in circulation on the 1st day of July, 1894, was $268,772,371. That amount is in the hands of the people of all classes, in circulation which it is now proposed by this bill to authorize the several States and Territories to place on the tax duplicate. Can this be done in the face of the inhibition that exempts them from taxation? I think not without violating an express contract with the holders of these notes.

The Government must be honest with its people with whom it makes contracts and enters into obligations.

Now, the amount in circulation to-day that is to be affected by this bill, if it becomes a law, is over $268,000,000. Why was this bill introduced here? I want to know whether there has been a petition from any man, woman, or child in the United States for the repeal of this exemption?

Mr. COOPER of Indiana. I do not know whether the gentleman would consider that a petition or not, but I stated that the State tax board of Indiana had memorialized Congress in favor of the passage of this bill, and also that the Democratic State convention had demanded that the Representatives and Senators from Indiana should support such a measure.

Mr. HULICK. Oh, yes. I remember, too, that in a good many State Democratic conventions protests were made against these greenbacks when they were first issued. It was said that they were unconstitutional; that they could not be legally issued; that even with these exemptions they were worthless. I heard the declarations made about that time, that a hatful of them would not buy a soldier's breakfast, and I have since heard declarations of Democratic conventions that these greenbacks ought to be taxed.

But those, I apprehend, are voices that we are not bound to listen to here to-day, coming as it does from that party that opposed the issue of the greenback in the first place. There has not been a petition sent to any Representative in this Congress asking for the repeal of this exemption law. But above and beyond all that, we have in this matter a moral as well as a legal obligation. These obligations we can not disregard. The legal obligation is that these notes are exempt from taxation by law.

I care not who is holding them to-day, whether they are held by the gentleman from Indiana or by some trust company, or by some bank, that makes no difference; the contract has been made and a vested right has been created in the holders of these notes. Am I right about this? There is not a lawyer upon this floor who will question the proposition that whenever a right becomes vested the power that vests it can not interfere with it without the consent of the other party that is holding it. Every text-book in the country is clear upon this point. There is no dissenting opinion of any United States or State court from the proposition that a vested right can not be taken away from the party in whom it is vested without his consent.

Now, there is a vested right in the holders of these three hundred and forty-six millions of United States Treasury notes, just as much as a vested right is created by the deed to the gentleman's farm or to mine. What does the Supreme Court say upon this subject? I will read from the decision in the case of the State Bank of Ohio against Knoop, a case in my own State.

That was a suit brought by the treasurer of the county for the taxation of a State bank, a corporation which has been given a charter providing that it should pay 4 per cent upon its profits. Afterwards the State attempted by a subsequent law to subject it to the same taxation as other property in the State of Ohio. The case was taken up to the Supreme Court of the United States and Mr. Justice McLean, who delivered the opinion, said:

> The correctness of this principle so far as respects general Legislation can never be controverted, but if an act be done under a law, a succeeding legislature can not undo it.

That lays down the principle that is presented here. We can not undo here that which was done by Congress in 1863. We can not undo that law by any act of ours to-day, and I give you my opinion for what it is worth that if this bill should pass Congress, the President of the United States, with his views of the law, would be compelled to veto it, or that if it should ever become a law, it will go to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that court will hold, as it held in the opinion of Justice McLean, delivered many years ago. He says further in that case:

> When, then, a law is in its nature a contract—

And this is a point to which I wish to call the special attention of the House—

> When, then, a law is in its nature a contract, the repeal of the law can not divest it of those rights, and the act of annulling them, if legitimate, is rendered so by a power applicable to the case of every individual in the community.—16 Howard S. C. Reports, page 369.

Now, the Government is a party to that contract, and every man who holds a greenback can, if he wishes, go and draw the gold upon it, because that is a part of the contract, or he can hold it as long as the Government gives him the right to hold it unredeemed and uncalled for, and he can hold it free from the power of taxation by the State.

In Fletcher vs. Peck, 6 Cranch, 135, Chief Justice Marshall says:

> The principle asserted is, that one Legislature is competent to repeal any act which a former Legislature was competent to pass, and that one Legislature can not abridge the powers of a succeeding Legislature.
> The correctness of this principle—

He says—

> so far as respects general legislation, can never be controverted. But if an act be done under a law, a succeeding Legislature can not undo it. When, then, a law is in its nature a contract, a repeal of the law can not divest those rights; and the act of annulling them, if legitimate, is rendered so by a power applicable to the case of every individual in the community.

Now, Mr. Speaker, an act has been done by the Government in this instance. It issued the United States Treasury notes, and promised their exemption from State taxation; the people in all conditions and circumstances of life have accepted them, and Congress can not now divest them of their vested rights.

In the case of the State of Ohio vs. The Commercial Bank of Cincinnati (10 Ohio Reports, 535), the supreme court of Ohio say, upon the general principle involved:

> A contract between the State and individuals is as obligatory as any other contract. Until a State is lost to all sense of justice and propriety she will scrupulously abide by her contracts; more scrupulously than she will exact their fulfillment by the opposite contracting party.

Mr. Justice McLean, in commenting upon this, says:

> This opinion commends itself to the judgment, both on account of its sound constitutional views and its elevated morality.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my time has about expired, and I must close. But let us pause before we attempt to pass this bill. If a bill were introduced here to-day to call in all the Treasury notes and issue others in their stead—if that could be done, I would say emphatically let them be subject to taxation, as other money in the hands of the people.

Let the seventy-seven millions now in the banks be canceled and supply their place with gold, silver, or national currency of some kind; but let us above all things keep faith with the creditors of the nation, and thereby maintain the credit of our country and the respect of mankind.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] five minutes or ten minutes if he needs that much time.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be two questions involved in this discussion. One, that of good faith on the part of the Government, has been ably presented by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY]. The laws passed in 1862 and 1863 under which the obligations of the Government were issued—the five twenties and the first greenbacks—provided what the Government pledged its faith to. And it seems to me some gentlemen whose remarks I have heard to-day are under a grave misapprehension when they assume that there can be no violation of good faith if everything written on the face of the instrument is complied with.

The first greenbacks, the first 5-20 bonds, were issued under a law providing that duties on foreign imports should be collected in coin and that the coin so collected should be set apart as a special fund to be used, first to pay the interest on the public debt, and second to pay annually not less than 1 per cent of the principal until it should be paid. It was not written upon the 5-20 bonds that they should be paid in coin, but the repudiators who started the idea in Ohio that the Government might pay them in greenbacks and yet maintain the faith of the Government, were just as false to its honor as the men who are ready to repudiate the obligation which the Government assumed in the issue of these greenback promises.

The law under which the greenback was issued provided that they should not be taxed. But that makes no difference in reality. There is no question with any member of this House, I take it, that without any law no municipal or other local authority could tax the greenbacks or bonds or any other agency or instrumentality of the Government unless Congress conceded that power.

The courts have decided that question fully. It is a question of wise legislation, assuming that it is possible that we can surrender this power. In the first place, the power was granted to the Government of the Union by the States in its formation, and it belongs unqualifiedly and absolutely to that Government. And is it wise for its servants to surrender any of its powers? I do not care how limited the power may be. It becomes a question of wise legislation as to the surrender of any part of the powers granted to the Government of the Union for its safety and its perpetuity.

Suppose the law which we now propose to put on the statute book had been in force in 1861. How many of the States would have taxed these agencies of the Government out of existence, crippled the arm of its power, so that rebellion would have gone forth triumphant? Suppose you put this law on the statute book to-day, surrender this power, assuming that you have the right to do so, which I question, for the powers which are granted by the States are beyond our reach in the way of modification or surrender. If you should undertake to surrender to the States what has been granted to the Union, the Supreme Court of the United States, in my judgment, could not sustain any such acts any more than they could sustain us if we should undertake to infringe one of the rights clearly reserved to the States.

There are sources of taxation which the States are not prohibited from resorting to; and the Government of the Union, I hold, acts in bad faith when it enters into the province of such taxation. Without discussing other questions I will illustrate my idea by an income tax. Congress can impose duties on foreign imports and the State can not. The power is prohibited to the one and authorized in the other. Let the Government of the Union adhere to its exclusive field of taxation and leave open the field that has been left to the States without, however, surrendering to the States any new power of taxation.

Is it wise legislation, even if we had the power, to surrender any attribute of taxation to any local community? If we once put such a provision on the statute book who can say what emergency may arise in which it will give us trouble? Can there not be—I trust I am supposing an impossible case—but may there not be within your lifetime an emergency in which the Legislature of a State and its executive may be in hostile array against the Government of the Union?

In such a case were the power conceded like that in this statute allowing them to tax the agencies of the Government, could they not tax them out of existence, and thus cripple its strong arm by impairing its credit, which is next in importance to the arm of the soldier. Is a servant of the Government of the Union discharging his duty faithfully to the Government he represents, when he surrenders any of the powers, I care not how small, that have been conferred upon the General Government by the consent and approval of the States? for no one can foresee what emergency the future may pr ent or what conditions may confront him even in a few years of his life.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat. He has ample time to answer.

Mr. GROW. Certainly.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Does not the gentleman know that there is in this bill—in reference to his suggestion of a State taxing greenbacks out of existence or Treasury notes—does not he know that in section 1 it is provided:

That any such taxation shall be exercised in the same manner and at the same rate that any such State or Territory shall tax other money within its jurisdiction?

Mr. GROW. It is the beginning of a bad precedent.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. But the fact remains that there is no power under the bill to impose any tax upon the greenbacks that is not imposed upon any other form of money.

Mr. GROW. To-morrow Congress may take that condition off and leave the State unlimited power of control.

My point is, Mr. Speaker, that we have no right to surrender an iota of the power of the Government to the States in taxation; for the taxing power is the vital principle of national existence, whether in the State or the nation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Let me suggest to the gentleman in this connection that a tax that gold or silver would bear with perfect impunity would be sufficient to drive the greenback out of existence.

Mr. GROW. That is true; but my issue is not on the question of expediency, but on the broad principle that the surrender of the power of taxation belonging to the Government can not be made in justice to the Government itself by its servants.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to differ with my distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY], but I am not willing to abide by the suggestion he has made that the Republican party in Ohio, or that he himself, or that I, in my humble capacity as a member of that party, ever took any position which is inconsistent with my vote in favor of the passage of this bill. In a number of campaigns in the State the Democratic party in Ohio placed in their platform a resolution in favor of the taxation of Government bonds and of greenbacks. The answer to that was always made—and I made it myself, and I have heard the gentleman make it eloquently and powerfully—I do not refer to myself in that connection [laughter]. The whole answer to it was, first, that the Government bond could not be taxed, and that an attempt to do so was an invasion of the sovereignty of the General Government; and, second, that so long as this law stood on the statute books the greenbacks could not be taxed. But I never heard any Republican in Ohio argue in favor of maintaining this law on the statute books of the United States.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Will my colleague permit me just there?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I did not interrupt the gentleman, and I got these few minutes time simply because I did not wish to interrupt my friend's speech.

Our answer was a straightforward answer, that here stands the law of Congress under which the greenback was issued, and while it stands, what force is there in the Democratic demand that the greenback shall be taxed? That was the answer, and beyond that would have been simply the assumption of a responsibility not cast on the Republican party either in Ohio or anywhere else, and which it never did assume.

Mr. NORTHWAY. If the gentleman will now permit me to ask him a question, I will endeavor to secure an extension of his time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will answer the question with pleasure, with or without an extension of my time.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Do you wish to be understood as saying that we, as Republicans, simply argued that so long as this law remained on the statute book the States could not tax greenbacks, but that we were willing to repeal it?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did not say that. I said the answer, that which was a sufficient answer, was that the law of Congress under which the greenbacks were issued provided that they should not be taxed, and that there was no force in the demand to impose a tax upon them while that law stood.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Was it not so long as the greenback was in existence that the pledge of the Government went with it?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I never heard of that.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Did not you hear me urge that?

Mr. GROSVENOR (continuing). I want to reply to that suggestion.

The argument of my colleague is that we are about to repudiate some of the value of the greenback; that the greenback has a value higher than gold inherent in it, greater than the national bank currency, greater and more valuable than the silver certificate, more valuable than the gold certificate, more valuable than the silver dollar or than any other dollar of the currency of this country. Therefore, he says he is opposed to the passage of this bill, because it is, in effect, the repudiation of a pledge of the Government that the greenback, in addition to the supplemental and increased and enhanced value of the greenback as compared with all the other currency of the country, is also to remain for all time free from taxation. Is that the position? Is that the position of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. NORTHWAY. That is one of the positions.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, has it not been, and is it not now, the glory of the Republican party that it has proclaimed in all of its platforms, in all of its public utterances, on the stump, in the press, and everywhere, that it had created all the currency of this country by its wisdom and by its fidelity, and that there was no dollar of this circulation that was better or purer or more valuable than any other dollar? Has not that been our claim? [Applause.]

Have we not always said the bondholder shall never have a better dollar than the pensioner; that the laborer shall have as good a dollar as the bondholder? That has been our cry everywhere. Why was it? It was because every dollar of our circulation, created by the legislation of the Republican party—generally in opposition to the denunciation and the votes of the Democratic party—had been so created, so guarded, so environed, that no man could get into his pocket a dollar of money that was better than any other man's dollar of money in this country.

Mr. NORTHWAY. When the gentleman was making that kind of an argument, did he undertake to say to the people that the greenback, because of its nontaxability, was better than the gold dollar?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I never did, and it never was.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Was it not true of the greenback that it was better?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It never was any better than the other. It is simply a dollar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, let me have one minute more——

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I am very sorry, but I have given away pretty much all the time that I had.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Has the time of the gentleman expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I yield to him five minutes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, I wish to address myself to another proposition. The gentleman says that he would be in favor, or he suggests the propriety of the Government in some way putting an end to the greenback dollar, and that it be called in. Will the gentleman, who is a lawyer as well as an experienced banker, tell me how the Government can call in my five-dollar greenback? By what process can the Government issue a greenback as money, clothe it with all the attributes of money, make it a legal tender, and launch it upon the financial sea of this country side by side with the gold dollar, of equal paying power, equal in every respect with gold and silver and silver certificates and national-bank currency, and then undertake to say that I shall surrender it to the Government? Where comes the power of the Government over the greenback dollar greater than and different from its power over a gold dollar?

Mr. NORTHWAY. Has it not the right to pay its debt?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It has not the right to pay its debt, if that is a debt, because it by its own act transforms its debt character into a money character. What would the gentleman have? Let me see where his argument would lead to. First, this is a special benefit conferred by the Government upon the greenback. I am the owner of the greenback. It has upon its face no limitations. There is nothing in the law of its creation that says that the time shall ever come when it shall cease to be currency in this country. Therefore, says the gentleman, it is of increased value. Suddenly comes the Government and passes another law, and says it shall cease to be currency after a certain date.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will my friend allow me a question right there?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If I understand the gentleman, then, the greenbacks have got to circulate forever and forever, and our friends who want to call in the greenbacks and issue something else in place of them can not do it?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman has a happy faculty of injecting his argument into the middle of a sentence of my speech. I want the gentleman, when he assumes the position of the gentleman from Ohio, to get time and tell us what sort of a law would call the greenback out of my pocket without my consent. It is said that it has been put in my hands with a peculiar value. The termination of its existence would put an end to that value. Is the Government going to change the value of my money by a legislative enactment?

Mr. HULICK. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I will suggest to the gentleman that if the law passes here to-day, which the gentleman is arguing in favor of, the Government will change the value of the greenback, while it is in the gentleman's pocket, by that enactment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not a particle, not the slightest in the world. Before the law passes, the greenback dollar is worth $1 and no more. When the law is passed, my greenback is worth $1 and no less. Money is worth what it goes for in the market and what the Government redeems it at.

It is not a question of interest-bearing notes. It is a square question of a piece of money in my pocket, and it would be repudiation and bad faith of the vilest character for the Government to call in my money and cut off the value of it by a species of legislation which would be a little short of repudiation.

Mr. HULICK. Is not the right of exemption from taxation of the greenback a vested right in the holder of that greenback?

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is no such thing as a vested right of immunity from taxation in the world, and the gentleman can not find any such law. It may be that under a contract, while the contract lasts, there may be an exemption, but there must be a consideration for it. There is no consideration for an act like this.

Mr. HULICK. Was there not a consideration to the holder who took the greenback and rendered his service to the Government in return for it?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, yes; and the Government got the full consideration when it issued the note.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Will my colleague [Mr. HENDERSON] be kind enough to yield me five minutes?

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Certainly, if I have that much time left.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the promise which the Government issued in the form of the greenback or Treasury note is in these words: "The United States will pay to bearer $1." That promise was made under a law which made it a legal tender and provided that it should not be subject to taxation. I believed in the greenback when it was issued. I believed in that legislation with all its pledges. That note continued to circulate up to 1879 without provision for its redemption.

Now, this is not a new question. Prior to 1879, people were found throughout the length and breadth of the country who demanded the taxation of the greenback by the States; and in the very white heat of the war one great point made against it was that it was nontaxable, and the demand was made that it should be taxed. I never had any sympathy with that demand. But in the fullness of time, after this greenback had served its purpose as a forced loan, the Government said, "We will redeem that greenback; we will redeem it in gold." And the Government has been from the 1st of January, 1879, down to the present time, and is now ready to redeem the same on presentation.

Now, it does seem to me that when the Government is ready to give a gold dollar for the greenback dollar to any holder of it, the holder of the greenback can not complain that he is not fairly dealt with, because we now give the assent of the United States to the States to tax it as other moneys are taxed. If the holder is not satisfied with the greenback because we now make it taxable, all he has to do is to present it at the Treasury and get his gold dollar for it. In other words, the United States keeps faith with the holder of the greenback when it gives him the gold on demand, and unless he chooses to keep it in preference to the gold he will never be taxed on it. The only question is whether, in justice to the United States, we can permit the State hereafter to tax the greenback. In my judgment, yes.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. In my judgment, no.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. There is no breach of good faith, I take it, in taxing them. So that in my judgment, as I said before, I think it is permissible to allow the States to impose this tax.

But let us look at the other side of the question for a moment. The States, the people of the States, form the National Government. Of the three hundred and forty-six millions of greenbacks two hundred millions or over are in the vaults of the national banks and are counted as a part of their reserves. Therefore, if the State did tax them it could not reach the two hundred millions directly, because the stock of the banks represent the two hundred millions of greenbacks and other assets and is already taxed. The other one hundred and forty-six millions it is possible could be reached just as gold and silver is reached, if men are honest and will make faithful and honest returns of their assets. Now, will the United States Government lose anything by this proposition? Will the States gain anything?

Mr. GROSVENOR. And will the Government credit be impaired?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I would say the States would gain; and, on the other hand, I would say the United States loses nothing, because it is ready to give the gold for the greenbacks, and in my judgment its credit would not be impaired. If it becomes necessary to issue other bonds or greenbacks in future emergencies I would be in favor of exempting them from taxation until maturity. But the moment the United States gets ready to redeem its obligations and they mature and the holder prefers to keep the same to having them redeemed in gold, then I think the United States should not further protect the holder from State taxation; in other words, no interest of the United States is served in so doing.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Will my friend permit me——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SWANSON). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield to me more time——

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I yield two minutes more.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now I shall be very glad to yield for a question.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I will take the floor in my own right after the gentleman concludes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, the complaint is made that people who desire to cheat the State revenues, keeping the letter of the law but not the substance of it, trade their credits at a given period for greenbacks, and so escape assessment of their credits for taxation on the day fixed by law for that purpose, and then buy back their credits and hold them by this juggling free from taxation. I am inclined to think that is true in many of the States. But I say that by vigilant legislation in the States it might be prevented, though in point of fact in many of the States it is not. So that not only are $346,000,000 of greenbacks exempt from State taxation, but it is alleged that this exemption is the vehicle by which several hundred millions of credits besides are exempt. I am inclined to think that is true to a considerable extent.

Therefore, on the best consideration I am able to give this bill, I will vote for it.

[Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. HALL of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What disposition does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] make of his remaining time? The gentleman has twelve minutes remaining.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. I reserve my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] has twenty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. KYLE].

Mr. KYLE. Mr. Speaker, I have listened very attentively to the arguments that have been advanced on both sides of the pending question; and I frankly confess that the most astonishing thing to my mind connected with the whole matter is that any gentleman should oppose the passage of this bill.

The proposition is to repeal a Federal statute which prohibits the respective States from taxing for State, county, and municipal purposes that form of money now in circulation known as greenbacks and Treasury notes, amounting in the aggregate to something like 500,000,000.

Now, let us see what the reasons are that are given by these gentlemen who oppose it. Some of them say we would be acting in bad faith to the Government if we at this late day should permit a tax upon these $346,000,000 of greenbacks especially. Now, the next question is, How would we be acting in bad faith to the Government? Does the Government own this money? Not a dollar of it. It does not belong to the Government. It belongs to the people among whom it circulates. It is a part of their assets. It is their capital in business, and the Government is not interested in it further than its general interest in the prosperity of its citizens. Well, but you say, it would be acting in bad faith to the man that owns the dollar.

Now, let me ask you how it would be acting in bad faith to him? Oh, you say, this money was exempt from taxation when it went into the hands of the citizen and now you propose to tax it. That is true. But the Government says to him, if you are not satisfied with the situation as it is, if you are not satisfied with your greenback dollar you can walk up to the Treasurer's office and get your gold dollar for it, hence he can not be hurt. How, then, is there any bad faith growing out of that? Take the proposition and analyze it. Reduce it down to its last analysis, and then answer the question, how is there any bad faith or an element of bad faith that enters into the proposition?

Now, I have sat here and listened to these speeches, and I have tried to be impartial about this matter. I have tried to analyze the question and to see if I could arrive at any reasonable conclusion why the passage of this bill should be opposed.

Why, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROSIUS] last evening said that money was idle capital and ought not to be taxed. He thought there was some reason in that; that the money that a man had in his pocket that was not engaged in the trade of the country was idle capital, and for that reason ought not to be taxed.

Does that answer? Is that any reason to a thoughtful man? Why, there are thousands and millions of property scattered over this broad land of ours that yield no income to the owners, and yet they are required to pay taxes upon that property. If the reason advanced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that because these greenbacks are idle capital and ought not to be taxed, is a good reason, then why not exempt all money from taxation, and besides this, the same reason would apply to millions of other property in this country that might be enumerated.

But, Mr. Speaker, when I began my purpose was to call the attention of this House to conditions as they exist to-day in Mississippi, growing out of the statutes which this bill proposes to repeal, and if in no other part of this country a reason could be found why such a law as this ought not to be retained upon the statute books, it can be found in Mississippi. And I want to call your attention to these conditions as they exist there with reference to these statutes. And I refer to Mississippi especially because I am more familiar with her affairs.

Much has been said about our supreme court with reference to this matter. The case that went to the supreme court of the State of Mississippi was this:

J. & T. Green, bankers in the city of Jackson, declined to furnish an assessment to the tax assessor as the laws of Mississippi required, and thereupon the assessor listed their property. These bankers defended on the ground that the various funds which had been listed by the assessor were exempt from taxation under the Federal statutes, some of them being United States Treasury notes, and the supreme court upon an appeal sustained the view that they were exempt. The case is reported in 52 Mississippi, page 452.

They said that their capital was invested in Treasury notes in part, and they did not propose to give it in for taxes, and this is the case out of which grew the decision which has been referred to frequently to-day. By it the court held that national-bank notes were exempt from taxation, and there has never been any question as to the exemption of greenbacks. Now, I say to you gentlemen that any statute of this Government that permits, or enables, or makes it possible for parties to convert money which is subject to taxation into a class of money which is exempt just before their property is to be listed for taxes, ought to be swept from the statute books. I do not think there is any doubt about that proposition. Now, I have no doubt but there are instances where parties attempt to evade the force of the statute by going a day or two before the assessor is to list their property for taxation and investing it in these notes.

Now, I mention these things to show the bad policy of this sort of statutes. But there is another element that enters into the reason why this bill should be passed, and that is the element of justice, fairness, and right as between man and man. Why, I ask you, is there any equity or justice in exempting my property from taxation because I have greenbacks or Treasury notes than my neighbor's property because it happens to be invested in gold or silver or national-bank notes?

Now, just take that naked proposition and consider it and then come to your own conclusion. What reason can you give that is a good one for saying that because my neighbor has a thousand dollars in gold and my other neighbor has a thousand dollars in silver, and another a thousand dollars in national-bank notes, and I have a thousand dollars in greenbacks, mine should be exempt and my neighbors' property should be taxed? Why, the very statement of the proposition, gentlemen, carries with it the argument for its own defeat.

The constitution of Mississippi provides that taxation shall be uniform and equal throughout the State. Property shall be taxed in proportion to its value. * * * Property shall be assessed for taxes under general laws and by uniform rules according to its true value.

Now, in pursuance of this provision, the Legislature provides for the taxation of almost every species of property, among which is to be enumerated, when the assessment list is made out for the assessor, the amount of money on hand or on deposit or loan.

Now, if this statute which the pending bill proposes to repeal is permitted to remain, all the taxpayer has to do to avoid the payment of taxes on money on hand or on depbsit is to convert the same into greenbacks or United States Treasury notes just before the 1st day of February, and this will enable him to say that he has no money on hand or on deposit liable to taxation, while at the same time his neighbor who may have gold, silver, or national-bank notes is, under the law, compelled to pay taxes on it.

The existence of such conditions as these, to say the least of them, offers an opportunity and an encouragement for fraud.

But now there is another thing in connection with this, aside from the idea of a want of fairness and right, which is an important element in the argument in favor of this bill, and that is that while this money is exempt from taxation it finds its way into the coffers of people who are able to lay aside and hoard it, and is thereby retired from circulation and fails to answer the necessities of the commerce which it should properly serve. These gentlemen who have been supporting bills for the free and unlimited coinage of silver and other measures that look to a greater supply of currency appreciate the necessity for such legislation as will prevent the possibility of such results as I allude to.

There is involved in this proposition, in my opinion, the unlocking of vaults and turning loose to answer the demands of trade this $346,000,000 that is now hid away and which refuses to perform its function because men who are able to save money have laid it by because it is exempt from taxation.

Now, as to all this talk about the possibility of the States taxing these greenbacks out of existence if they have the power, it is groundless and without reason. These gentlemen talk of greenbacks having come as the result of the war, and attempt apparently to convey the idea that on that account they are too sacred for taxation. One gentleman from Pennsylvania even referred to the rebellion, and said that if an opportunity had been given certain States in the past, this money would have been taxed out of existence.

In reply to that I will say that it is without reason; and, besides, here is the constitution of Mississippi, which prohibits taxation except in a uniform manner; and not only that, but the State of Mississippi, one of the leading States in the rebellion, has gone further than any other State in the Union, according to what has been said on this floor, in protecting these greenbacks and Treasury notes from taxation because her courts understood the Federal statutes required it. So, taking the question all along the line; taking the apprehensions which gentlemen express that there will be bad faith in this matter or that some one will deal unfairly with this money, and sifting all the arguments against this bill from start to finish. I say there has not been one single sound reason presented to my mind why the bill should not pass. What is the proposition involved, naked and cleanly stated? Why, it is that you ought to subject the property of people, where it exists in the form of greenbacks and Treasury notes, to the same taxation that you impose upon any other class of property. That is all there is of it. The only argument that has been brought against the bill is that its passage would be an act of bad faith; but there is no bad faith about it; there can not be any. If any citizen who has his money in greenbacks or Treasury notes does not like it after it is made subject to taxation, he can take it to the Treasury and get gold for it.

Mr. Speaker, I can not help believing that this bill will pass by a large majority, it is so manifestly just and proper.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I will now ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] to use the remainder of his time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SWANSON). The gentleman from Illinois has twelve minutes remaining.

Mr. BROSIUS. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the gentleman from Illinois in his seat at this moment, and I hope the gentleman from Missouri will see the propriety of proceeding with the debate until the gentleman returns.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] have five minutes in his own right, without taking it from the time of either side.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I think the necessity for that can be obviated by my giving the gentleman from Iowa five minutes of my time, which I now do.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that this debate has proceeded erroneously upon the idea that in one way or another there exists a contract between the holder of the Treasury note and the Government. To my mind that is not true. The holder of the greenback does not take it because of any promise that the Government makes that it shall be exempt from taxation, but he takes it because the Government has said that it shall be a legal tender for the payment of debts; he takes it, not as a matter of choice, not because he has assented to it, not because a contract exists, but because of the fiat of the Government that he shall take it as legal tender and that that shall extinguish his debt.

It is true that the Government has said that these greenbacks shall not be taxable, and perhaps that may have added a value, but the individual, even if he took the greenback as a contractor, recognizes the fact that that decree of the Government was an exercise of its sovereignty by which it is in no sense bound, and which it may at any moment change or modify. The Congress of the United States is intrusted with the power of coining gold and silver and regulating the value thereof, and it provides that the gold dollar shall consist of 25 grains and a fraction of gold, but will anybody deny the power of the Government to say to-morrow that a gold dollar shall consist of 20 grains?

Has the man who has taken the more valuable dollar a right to complain? The Government, the State, the proper authority, grants a license to an individual to carry on a particular business, and he pays, perhaps, a thousand dollars for the privilege for a stated period, yet the Government has the power to repeal that law and the individual has no right to complain, nor can he recover a proportionate part of the license fee that he has paid. So it has been decided over and over again. Why? Because these powers are attributes of government, and every individual knows that they are such, and hence the individual has no right to complain, nor does he complain when the Government changes its exercise of these powers.

Now, there was a necessity at one time that this non-taxability should be a quality of the Treasury notes. When they were first emitted there were legislative bodies in this country that would have been glad to have impaired their function as money, would have taxed them out of existence, and it was wise at that time that the exercise of that power should be forbidden the States; but that time has passed. There is no question of that kind now. And, on the other hand, we do find that this non-taxable feature is used improperly by individuals to escape from the payment of their just share of taxes. In certain communities it is the habit in the latter part of the year when the 1st of January is the day for the assessment of taxes, for men to go to their banks and say: "I want my deposit on the 1st day of January to be held in greenbacks."

That serves as a salve to the conscience, which enables the man to make up his list of subjects for taxation, omitting his money, and in that way millions of dollars, a much greater amount, in my judgment, than the whole sum of the greenbacks held by the banks, escapes its just share of taxation.

Now, I do not want anything to be done that militates against the idea of the absolute power of this Government to exempt its notes from taxation, but if the amendment that I had the honor to have read yesterday should be adopted, that will be avoided. I propose this simple sentence: "That the consent of the United States is hereby given to any State or Territory to tax United States notes circulating as money within such State or Territory." That is all the authority that the State wants. That is all the power that need be conferred, and there is in that brief sentence the assertion of the right of the United States, whenever it sees proper, to prevent States and municipalities from exercising this taxing power.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] has five minutes remaining.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I should be glad if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] would now use the rest of his time, if he desires to do so.

Several MEMBERS. He does not.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will call for a vote, simply stating by way of explanation that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] has been agreed upon by the gentlemen on both sides who are in favor of this bill, and is the measure which we desire to be adopted in place of the bill reported by the committee. I ask that that substitute be now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all circulating notes of national banking associations and all United States legal-tender notes, and all other notes and certificates of the United States payable on demand and circulating as currency shall be subject to taxation under the laws of any State or Territory: Provided, That any such taxation shall be exercised in the same manner and at the same rate that any such State or Territory shall tax other money within its jurisdiction.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall not be deemed or held to change existing laws in respect of the taxation of national banking associations.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALL] has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. HALL, of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause down to the word "provided," and inserting:

That the consent of the United States is hereby given to any State or Territory to tax United States notes circulating as money within such State or Territory.

Mr. TERRY. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] whether he intends to include municipal or county taxation?

Mr. HEPBURN. There can be no municipal taxation without the action of the State.

Mr. WARNER. Would there be any objection to inserting after the words "State or Territory," the words "or other local authority?"

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I desire to state that we can not accept the proposed amendment to this substitute, because of the condition of the State of Mississippi, the supreme court of that State having decided that national-bank notes are not taxable as money. It was because of that decision that the substitute of the gentleman from Indiana as just read was drawn.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first taken upon the amendments recommended by the committee to the text of the original bill.

Mr. BROSIUS. Let them be read.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In lines 3 and 4 strike out the words "all circulating notes of national banking associations and all," and insert the word "no."

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "and all other notes and certificates of the United States payable on demand and."

In line 6 strike out the word "not."

The amendments were rejected.

The SPEAKER. The next question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "money," in line 10, insert the words "or currency circulating as money."

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. WARNER. I renew my suggestion that the gentleman from Iowa modify his amendment by inserting after the word "Territory," where it first occurs, the words "or other local authority." I submit to the gentleman that his amendment as it now stands would extend only to State or Territorial taxation; and if so, it would not meet the view which the gentleman himself has suggested.

Mr. GROSVENOR. With the modification proposed, the amendment would then put these notes upon an exact equality with all other property.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have no objection to the modification suggested.

The amendment as modified was again read.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. I desire to state that the only difference between the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the substitute of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER] which we now favor, is that the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa exempts national-bank notes from taxation by States and municipalities, while the substitute which we advocate does not make such exemption, but allows the provision of the bill to extend to Mississippi as to all other States of the Union where money is taxed.

Mr. TERRY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that he can get his point in without interfering with that by putting the language at the beginning: "That the United States hereby consents," and so on. Then let the remainder go on as it is now.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House the previous question is ordered, and the question is first on the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], which has just been read.

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I think we ought to have the yeas and nays on that.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I withdraw the demand.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. On that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana and Mr. HALL of Missouri as tellers at the desk.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 173, nays 41, not voting 138; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CULBERSON with Mr. GROUT.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. MORSE.

Mr. BUNN with Mr. DINGLEY.

Mr. BANKHEAD with Mr. MILLIKEN.

Mr. ENLOE with Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. NEILL with Mr. CHILDS.

Mr. MONTGOMERY with Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois.

Mr. FORMAN with Mr. WHEELER of Illinois.

Mr. MADDOX with Mr. WEVER.

Mr. WHITING with Mr. GILLET of New York.

Mr. OATES with Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. COOPER of Texas with Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts.

Mr. STOCKDALE with Mr. AVERY.

Mr. LAWSON with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. RAYNER with Mr. SCRANTON.

Mr. WOODWARD with Mr. LEFEVER.

Mr. TURPIN with Mr. PHILLIPS.

Mr. GOODNIGHT with Mr. ROBINSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMPBELL with Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee.

Mr. GEISSENHAINER with Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BARNES with Mr. MCCLEARY of Minnesota.

Mr. SICKLES with Mr. DANIELS.

Mr. SCHERMERHORN with Mr. BELDEN.
Mr. SOMERS with Mr. FUNK.
Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas with Mr. PAYNE.
For this day:
Mr. CRAIN with Mr. REED.
Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia with Mr. STORER.
Mr. LIVINGSTON with Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa.
Mr. IKIRT with Mr. HULL.
Mr. BRANCH with Mr. ALDRICH.
Mr. SIPE with Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts.
Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky with Mr. MARVIN.
Mr. GRAHAM with Mr. VAN VOORHIS of New York.
Mr. SPRINGER with Mr. WADSWORTH.
On this question:
Mr. HINES with Mr. CAUSEY
Mr. BROWN with Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana.
Mr. DINSMORE with Mr. MERCER.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee with Mr. BABCOCK.
Mr. WILSON of Washington, with Mr. MCDANNOLD.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I am paired with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MONTGOMERY] on political questions only. My understanding is that this bill is nonpolitical, and I have voted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I voted, but withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK]. If present, he would vote "no" and I should vote "aye."

Mr. GEISSENHAINER. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT], and withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. HALL of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Now, I ask unanimous consent that members who have spoken be given the privilege of extending their remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

VACATION OF SPECIAL ORDER.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order setting apart to-morrow for eulogies on the late George W. Houk be postponed for one week.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DINSMORE, for one day, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask that the House now take the usual recess, instead of waiting until 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, it being now within a few minutes of 5 o'clock, the Chair will declare the House in recess until 8 o'clock, under the rule, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] will perform the duties of the Chair at the evening session.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. BROOKSHIRE, as Speaker pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is in session pursuant to clause 3, Rule XXVI.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole in pursuance of the special order.

OLIVER O'BRIEN.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Chairman, two weeks ago, in regular order, a bill in which I am interested was reached. By inadvertence of the present distinguished occupant of the chair it was ruled to be not in order under the order under which we assemble on Friday evenings. Upon further examination I think the Chairman will agree with me that the bill was properly up for consideration at a Friday evening session. If that was so, the bill lost its right of way, and has lost it for two weeks, by reason of that ruling. And if I am correct, I will now ask the Chair to entertain a motion to consider the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct in his statement. The Chair was in error in deciding that the bill was not in order under the rule, and if there be no objection the bill will be presented at this time.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to so amend the record of Oliver O'Brien as to remove the charge of desertion.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. MCALEER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 650) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Oliver O'Brien, submit the following report:

This bill has been fully considered by your committee. A bill identical in terms with this was considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Fifty-second Congress, and as the conclusions reached in each instance are the same, we adopt said report and earnestly urge the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 2035, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3059) to remove the charge of desertion standing against Oliver O'Brien, having considered the same, report:

It appears from his record of service in the Navy that he enlisted as a seaman at Boston, Mass., August 13, 1862, for three years; served on board the United States steamships Canandaigua and Juniata, and was appointed under date of December 1, 1864, as an acting master's mate on temporary service.

It further appears that while serving on board the latter-named vessel he was granted a leave of absence for thirty days from April 3, 1865, with orders to return to the ship at the expiration of that time. Upon furnishing the Department with a copy of his orders, and being directed by letter of the 25th of said month to obey the same, he failed to report for duty as ordered, and subsequently his name was entered upon the Navy Register as a deserter from the service.

In extenuation and explanation of his failure to return to his command at the expiration of his leave, he has filed with your committee the sworn affidavits of well-known citizens from his home, who severally corroborate his own testimony, which is herewith appended and made part of this report.

In view of the facts as evidenced by these and his previous meritorious record "in face of the enemy," and for which he was commended and promoted as master's mate by Admiral Dahlgren December 1, 1864, your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Application for removal of charge of desertion.

CLAIMANT'S AFFIDAVIT.

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS, County of Essex, ss:

In the matter of claim for removal of charge of desertion of Oliver O'Brien, late acting master's mate of United States steamships Canandaigua and Juniata.

On this — day of February, A. D. 1892, personally appeared before me, a —— in and for the aforesaid county, duly authorized to administer oaths, Oliver O'Brien, aged — years, a resident of Gloucester, in the county of Essex and State of Massachusetts, whose post-office address is 41 Washington street, well known to me to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares each for himself in relation to aforesaid case, as follows:

That he hereby makes application for the removal of charge of desertion standing against his name while serving as acting master's mate on United States steamship Juniata, to which he had been transferred from United States steamship Canandaigua. That I first enlisted in United States Navy October 8, 1860, and served on the United States Cumberland to the time she was sunk by the rebel ram Merrimac, March 8, 1862, and was honorably discharged from the naval service at Norfolk, Va., June 14, 1862, and have my original discharge therefor. In August, 1862, I reënlisted in United States Navy as seaman, and served on board the United States steamship Canandaigua. In 1864 I was promoted to acting master's mate for bravery, over the signature of Admiral Dahlgren, which appointment I file. In 1865 I was transferred to United States steamship Juniata, about April 1, 1865, and was granted thirty days' leave of absence, not being well.

I went home to Boston, Mass.; was taken down with lung fever, and was sick a long time; did not know what was going on for a time, and it was many weeks before I was able to be out; in the meantime my leave of absence had long run out and the war was closed, and I thought it of no use to do anything, as the ship had probably changed places, master, and crew long before. I was also granted a medal of honor and $100 extra for my bravery at the time of my promotion, but I never received them. The doctor that attended me in my sickness is now dead. The only persons that I can think of and find that knew about my sickness and detention are Ellen M. Laughlin and Catharine Murphy, both of Boston, Mass., who were living in the house in 1865, when I was sick, and I furnish their affidavits. I never intended to desert; and surely my long service and previous record, the close of war so near at hand, and my severe sickness should weigh in this case.

OLIVER O'BRIEN.

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS, County of Essex, ss:

Sworn to and subscribed before me this day by the above-named affiant, and I certify that I read said affidavit to said affiant and acquainted him with its contents before he executed the same. I further certify that I am in nowise interested in said case, nor am I concerned in its prosecution; and that said affiant is personally known to me and that he is a credible person.

JOHN C. PIERCE,
Justice of the Peace.

[SEAL.]

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS, County of Essex, ss:

I, Sumner D. York, clerk of the Gloucester police court, in and for aforesaid county and State, do certify that John C. Pierce, who has signed his name to the foregoing declaration and affidavit, was at the time of so doing a justice of the peace in and for said county and State, duly commissioned and sworn; that all his official acts are entitled to full faith and credit, and that his signature thereunto is genuine.

Witness my hand and seal of office this 21 day of February, 1892.

SUMNER D. YORK,
Clerk of the Gloucester Police Court.

[SEAL.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear a statement from the gentleman in charge of this bill. I should like particularly to know if the removal of this charge of desertion will enable this man to apply for a pension from the close of the war to this time, and receive back pension during that period?

Mr. COGSWELL. Not to my knowledge. I do not know what the effect of this bill will be. He has not said anything to me about a pension. The bill is in the regular form of bills correcting military records, and the merits of the case are set forth in the report better than I can state them.

Mr. O'Brien is a man who served five years, who was promoted, who was distinguished for his gallantry; and after the close of the war, or just about the time it was closing, in April, 1865, he went home on a thirty days' leave. He was taken sick with typhoid fever, was out of his head part of the time, and when he came to his senses and to his strength the war had long since closed. He did not know where his ship was, and like a good many others, thinking the war was over, as it was, he remained at home.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. In reply to the question of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], I will say that no pension can date back of the date of the application. An application for a pension is made, and if granted, the pension can not begin earlier than the date of the application.

Mr. COGSWELL. Oh, I supposed we all knew that. Mr. O'Brien never said anything to me about a pension.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. The inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] was whether this man could secure a pension to date from the time of his discharge.

Mr. COGSWELL. I am glad the gentleman from New York has answered the question.

Mr. JONES. I should like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts why it is that this alleged deserter has deferred for nearly thirty years the making of this application for the removal of this charge of desertion against him?

Mr. COGSWELL. I am sure I can not answer that. He brought the matter to my attention in the last Congress, and I introduced the bill, and it was reported so late that no action was taken. I do know that his neighbors—and I know them personally—say that he is a good, reputable citizen, as nice a man as there is in Gloucester, Mass. The first I knew about the case was in the last Congress.

Mr. JONES. The affidavits filed here are, in the first place, the affidavit which the man himself makes, and then another one made by some neighbor of his. Now, if this application had been made twenty-five years ago, some of his comrades, his commander, or somebody who knew about the circumstances of this desertion, would have been able to testify and could have thrown some light upon the subject. All these persons may have died years and years ago; and now, after a lapse of nearly thirty years, when all the available evidence has probably disappeared, this application is made. I desire to offer an amendment providing that no pension shall be granted on account of the removal of this charge of desertion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. COGSWELL. I think that is rather unreasonable. I want this man treated just the same as the others are, no more and no less; but if it weighs heavily on the mind of my friend from Virginia, and I can not get him relieved from this charge in any other way I will take this way if he wants to make a discrimination against this man.

Mr. JONES. I do not want to make a discrimination.

Mr. COGSWELL. But you are making one.

Mr. JONES. I oppose all cases of this kind, for the removal of the charge of desertion; but inasmuch as the gentleman has made the statement he has, I do not propose to fight this case very vigorously if this amendment is adopted.

If this man has lived the honorable life and he is the fine citizen the gentleman describes him to be, I do not think this charge of desertion should rest against him; but if he comes in now and applies for a pension on account of a disability alleged to have been incurred during the war, as I am not at all satisfied he can not get a pension from that time until now, I desire to make the matter sure.

Mr. COGSWELL. Then, why not modify it so as to make the usual provision, "provided that no pay or emolument shall accrue by reason of this act."

Mr. JONES. Or pension prior to this date.

Mr. COGSWELL. I am willing to limit the granting of a pension to this time, if he should apply.

Mr. JONES. Let us limit it so that he shall not receive a pension prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. COGSWELL. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no pay or emolument shall accrue by reason of this act or pension prior to this date.

Mr. COGSWELL. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside, with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The CHAIRMAN. This proceeding has been by unanimous consent. The first business in order is the unfinished business. At the time the committee rose it was dividing on a motion to lay a bill aside with a favorable report, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5260) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Corrigan.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill has been debated in the Committee of the Whole and a motion made to lay aside the bill with a favorable recommendation. On a count by tellers the motion was lost, whereupon the point of no quorum was made, and the committee rose.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the further consideration of unfinished business, the gentleman from Indiana asks that this bill be laid aside without prejudice.

Mr. JONES. I shall have to object to that.

DRUZILLA J. RIGG.

Mr. POST. Mr. Chairman, previous to any action being taken on that, I ask unanimous consent to take up a bill which occurs on the Calendar previous to that, the bill (H. R. 4290). I think unanimous consent will be given to its consideration. It is a bill which has been passed on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the further consideration of the unfinished business, the gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to call up a bill.

Mr. POST. It is on the Calendar previous to this bill which has just been considered.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. POST. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill.

Mr. PICKLER. I will not object in this case, but I shall object to calling up any other by unanimous consent. We want to go on with the Calendar and get through with it.

Mr. POST. This is on the Calendar, and before the bill which has been considered.

Mr. PICKLER. We have a Calendar, and it is only fair that we should go on through with it before we consider these other bills.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. What was the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The request was for unanimous consent to consider a bill. The Clerk will report the bill, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4290) for the relief of Druzilla J. Rigg, of Macomb, Ill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to cause to be paid to Druzilla J. Rigg, of Macomb, Ill., who is the daughter and only heir of James Depoy (who was second lieutenant in Company A in the Fifty-fourth Regiment of Ohio Infantry in the war of the rebellion, to whom pension certificate No. 158723 was issued, and who died previous to the receipt by him of said certificate), the amount due upon said certificate at the time of the death of said James Depoy.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES. I would like to have the report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read, subject to objection.

The report (by Mr. MCDANNOLD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4290) for the relief of Druzilla J. Rigg, having considered the same, submit the following report:

This is a bill to pay Druzilla J. Rigg, the daughter and sole heir of James Depoy, the amount of the pension allowed said soldier by certificate No. 158723, which he did not receive because he died before the certificate reached him. The pension allowed by such certificate was $7.50 per month from February 20, 1863, and $15 per month from October 21, 1878, to December 7, 1878, when he died, amounting to about $1,400.

This bill proposes to pay to Druzilla J. Rigg, his daughter and sole heir, the amount of the pension which had been allowed him. The evidence shows that this daughter had, since she was 12 years old, kept house for her father, and was thereby deprived of proper advantages for education. During the last six years of his life the soldier was bed-ridden, and his devoted daughter was his constant attendant. During his prolonged illness all the soldier's property had been expended in doctors' bills and other expenses, and at his death the daughter was left without means of support. This pension had been adjudged due the soldier, and in view of the fact that the daughter and not the soldier suffered most from the delay in the adjudication, your committee believes that it is only just that she should receive the amount which had been ascertained to be due. Nothing has been paid as reimbursement.

These facts are clearly shown by the papers in the Pension Bureau and by evidence filed with the committee.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. JONES. Before I waive the right of objection I would like to hear some statement from the gentleman. It seems that this is to pay quite a large amount of arrearage.

Mr. LANE. I would like to hear the gentleman on the question also as to whether we have jurisdiction in this case, and whether this is a pension case at all. This bill grants a gross sum of money, and I would like to hear from the gentleman as to whether we have a right to consider the bill under the special order.

Mr JONES. Has this party ever drawn a pension?

Mr. POST. Never. The certificate was issued, but before it reached its destination the pensioner died. He had been bedridden six years, and his daughter had taken care of him.

Mr. JONES. When did he die?

Mr. POST. He died after the certificate had been issued and before it reached his home.

Mr. JONES. How long ago was that?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. The report says it was in 1878.

Mr. POST. It was December, 1878.

Mr. TERRY. It occurs to me that if the certificate had already been issued before the death of the soldier, under the ruling of the Department, his heirs would be entitled to it anyhow.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. POST. His widow would.

Mr. TERRY. But would not his administrator, if the certificate had been issued and started from the Pension Office?

Mr. POST. No. It ought to be so, but it is not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. It would have to be signed by the soldier.

Mr. POST. I trust that no one will object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. LANE. If the committee had no jurisdiction of the bill of course we can not allow this claim. This is really not a pension at all. It is a claim for a gross sum of money that was due this girl's father, but he never received it in his lifetime, and therefore it reverted to the Government. The House, of course, could allow the claim.

Mr. JONES. I think the gentleman from Illinois is clearly correct. This bill ought to have gone to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LANE. Yes. It is not a pension bill at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls attention to paragraph 3 of Rule XXVI, which reads as follows:

The House shall, on each Friday, at 5 o'clock p. m., take a recess until 8 o'clock, which evening session shall be devoted to the consideration of private bills reported from the Committee on Pensions, and the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

The gentleman from Illinois will note the difference between the language of this rule and the language of the old rule. That rule read, as I remember:

The consideration of private bills reported from the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions granting pensions.

The words "granting pensions" seem to be eliminated from the present rule, and therefore this bill would seem to be in order under the rule. This is the first time the Chair has had his attention called to the point. The Chair is quite clear that the old rule limited the consideration of business at these sessions to bills "granting pensions," but there seems to be no such limitation in the present rule.

Mr. LANE. But this bill is for a gross sum of money, and it should have gone to the Committee on Claims instead of to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. If the House should, by mistake, send to the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill which clearly did not come within its jurisdiction, would the Chair hold that the fact that the committee considered and acted on the bill would give this Committee of the Whole jurisdiction of it at these Friday evening sessions?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is before the committee only on a request for unanimous consent for its consideration.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. No objection has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection to consideration, the Chair will consider the question of order.

Mr. JONES. I want to say to the gentleman calling up the bill that I do not propose to object to its consideration, but I do propose to oppose the passage of the bill unless I can know more about it than I know now, and I think the gentleman would do better not to call up this bill for consideration.

Mr. POST. I hope the gentleman will allow the bill to be considered anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [A pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POST. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that any gentleman in this House will object to the consideration of this bill or really oppose its passage when he considers the facts stated in this report. As the report says, the facts are fully set forth in the papers in the Pension Office. This girl took care of her bedridden father for six years.

All their means were exhausted, and finally when the pension certificate came, it was too late for the soldier to sign his name for he was dead. Now, I repeat I can not believe that there is a single member here who will oppose the passage of this bill under the circumstances. These people had no other property, and if the pension certificate had arrived a little sooner this girl would have been entitled to the benefit of it.

Mr. LANE. I have no objection to this pension if it comes under the rule, none in the world, but I think that all people ought to be treated alike. I have had two cases of this kind myself, one that I brought before the committee in a former Congress, but it did not get through.

Mr. HOOKER of New York. Was it reported from the committee?

Mr. LANE. Yes; but it was knocked out in the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls attention to the rule which prevailed in the Fifty-first Congress in regard to these Friday evening sessions. Paragraph 2 of Rule XXVI, the rule under which these Friday evening sessions were held in that Congress, reads as follows, and the Chair asks gentlemen to notice the difference between the language of this rule and the language of the present rule:

The House shall, on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m., take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills to remove the charge of desertion only shall be considered, etc.

That rule limited the Committee of the Whole to the consideration of private pension bills. This rule—perhaps through inadvertence—omits the word "pension" and says "private bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions." The Chair is inclined to think that the spirit of the rule at least would prohibit the consideration of this bill, because it seems to the Chair that it is in the nature of a claim.

Mr. LANE. In the case in which I interested myself, the certificate reached the post-office the very day the person for whom it was intended died. The amount of the allowance, if I remember correctly, was about $800. I brought the case here before the committee, who considered the matter, and finally determined that they would not allow any cases of that class. There are a great many cases of that kind; and we ought not to make "fish of one and flesh of another." If the rule be adopted that this class of cases shall be in order under these circumstances, I have no objection whatever.

In this case if the bill passes there will be allowed a gross sum of perhaps $1,400.

Mr. POST. The bill allows just the amount of the pension that was allowed the soldier.

Mr. LANE. Just the gross sum that was adjudicated as due this party. It is not a pension; it is a sum in gross—so many dollars allowed by a single act of the House. I say there are hundreds of cases of this kind where similar action ought to be taken if this bill be passed.

The law provides that if the certificate be not signed by the applicant the money can not be drawn, but reverts to the Government. As I have said, I have no objection to this class of cases if some general rule be adopted treating them all alike.

Mr. POST. I beg to correct the gentleman on one point. The bill provides that there be paid to the daughter and only heir of James Depoy—to whom pension certificate numbered 158723 was issued, and who died previous to the receipt by him of said certificate, the amount due upon said certificate at the time of the death of said James Depoy.

Mr. LANE. That is just what I have said.

Mr. POST. The Pension Office must decide the amount that was due at that time. The bill does not allow a sum in gross.

Mr. LANE. Why, sir, the pension certificate was issued for a sum in gross—for a certain amount. This man would have received, if he had lived, so many dollars. It was not an accruing pension. There was a certain amount adjudged to be due him, and the certificate was issued to him at that time for that amount. If he had lived he would have drawn that amount. This bill will carry that amount, whatever it may be. As I have said, if this case is allowed, we ought to understand that such is to be the rule, so that other parties in similar cases may have the benefit of the same rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that this bill is really in the nature of a claim.

Mr. LANE. If the bill be brought up in the House I will not object.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I wish to be heard a moment in regard to this matter. If this is not a pension, what is it? This case depends solely on an adjudication by the Pension Office, upon proofs submitted under the general pension law—not under the act of June 27, 1890—the allowance being for disabilities incurred by the soldier in the service, at the rate of $7.50 per month from February 20, 1863. Now, if the Committee on Invalid Pensions has not jurisdiction of this bill, and if this case is not regularly before the Committee of the Whole, how can it ever come up? Will the Chair indicate, if he pleases, on what basis the Committee on Claims could possibly have jurisdiction of this case?

This bill is based simply and entirely on the fact that this soldier rendered service and incurred disability in the service. The case has been regularly adjudicated; the bill was regularly introduced, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and a report made upon it. If it is not in the nature of a pension, then what is it?

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair a claim rather than a bill granting a pension.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make the point of order that this point comes too late. Whether or not this committee had jurisdiction is a question that should have been raised in the House. I admit that under the ruling made several times during this Congress by the Speaker, there would be opportunity to object to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the House on the bill coming up. But the jurisdiction of the committee was not objected to in the House. We have gone into Committee of the Whole and entered upon the consideration of the bill. It is too late now to make the point of order. And I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that unanimous consent was given for the consideration of the bill.

But I insist at any rate that this point against the jurisdiction of the committee comes too late. It might have been made in the House when the bill came up, but at the time no point was made; no objection was raised. We went into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill as well as others, and now it is too late to make the point.

Mr. JONES. And on that point let me say this, Mr. Chairman. While I am not very familiar with the rules of the House, and do not claim to be any authority on parliamentary law, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that a number of bills have been taken up here for consideration from the Committee on Military Affairs, and the point has been made, over and over again in the Committee of the Whole, when I think the present occupant of the chair was presiding, and he invariably held that where it was evident that the committee did not have jurisdiction that reported the bill this Committee of the Whole would refuse to accept it.

Mr. PICKLER. But that had reference to bills that were not admissible for consideration under the rule. The bills the gentleman refers to went out because they were bills that the Friday evening session had no jurisdiction over.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE].

Mr. PICKLER. I understand the gentleman's point to be that the committee that reported the bill had no jurisdiction.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. When a committee having charge of the general subject-matter reports a bill, if the House receives the report, it admits the jurisdiction of the committee.

Mr. JONES. On that point my friend from New York suggests that when bills from the Committee on Invalid Pensions are reported that committee has jurisdiction over them, and that they are in order for consideration on the Friday night sessions. Now, I take issue with the gentleman on that subject. Suppose, for instance, the Committee on Invalid Pensions, or the Committee on Pensions should undertake to report an appropriation bill, or a bill to raise revenue, or any other bill which manifestly did not belong to such committee; I do not suppose they will, of course; but suppose they did, by inadvertence or designedly, make such a report, would the gentleman from New York undertake to claim that because the committee did so that under this rule such report should be considered by this Committee of the Whole?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. That is answered by saying that the rules of the House provide which committees shall have jurisdiction of appropriation bills and of revenue bills, and, therefore the supposition of the gentleman is without foundation. Any bill that is sent by the Speaker, being germane to the duties of a committee and reported by that committee and referred to the Committee of the Whole by the Speaker, properly comes within the scope of this rule, because the wording of the rule is "bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions."

Mr. JONES. Does not the gentleman know that constantly bills are referred to committees not having proper jurisdiction and are afterwards returned?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Oh, yes; and they are invariably returned to the House for a proper reference. But in this case there was no such change of reference.

Mr. JONES. I make this statement to the gentleman, that if by inadvertence or through any other reason in the world a bill be improperly referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and it came up here in the regular way on Friday night, the mere fact that such reference had been made would not give the committee jurisdiction. The mere fact that the committee reports the bill would not give us jurisdiction to consider it.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. But the rules of the House are what we are governed by, and they differ with the gentleman in that regard.

Mr. JONES. The rules of the House would not undertake to confer jurisdiction under such circumstances on any committee in regard to a matter over which it had no control.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. The rule is distinct and plain, as read by the Chair; and there is no committee that could take jurisdiction of the matter now pending before us, except the Invalid Pensions Committee. The matter is before the House, and can not be taken away from the House unless withdrawn or by consent.

Mr. PICKLER. Is not this the status of the bill? Have we not, on motion, gone into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill without objection, and are we not in general debate in Committee of the Whole on the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. PICKLER. We have taken it up by unanimous consent in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The status is this: The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar under the general order for consideration of bills under clause 3 of Rule XXVI. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POST] asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill. The bill was read, as also the report, and, pending that, before unanimous consent was given for consideration of the bill, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] made the point of order that it was not in order for consideration under the rule.

Mr. WEADOCK. No objection was made.

Mr. PICKLER. The Chair stated that there was no objection to the consideration of the bill; and the consideration of the question of order was then before the committee, whether the bill was in order or not.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. The Chair first asked if there was objection, and none being made the bill was before the committee; but Mr. LANE, of Illinois, took the floor to make objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The record, the Chair thinks, will show to the contrary. However, the Chair thinks there is some doubt as to whether the bill is in order or not, but is inclined to hold that the committee can consider it under the rule.

Mr. MCRAE. If the Chair will permit me a moment, the special order or rule, it appears to me, ought to settle the question of jurisdiction. The rule provides that the—evening session shall be devoted to the consideration of private bills reported from the Committee on Pensions, &c.

So that the only jurisdictional fact to be ascertained is whether this is a private bill, and comes from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Both of these facts are conceded, and it appears to me that there can be no question about the committee having jurisdiction.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MCRAE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask the gentleman if a bill were introduced to pay for damages done by troops during the war to a loyal citizen, if by inadvertence such a bill were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that committee reported favorably on it, and it went to the Private Calendar, does the gentleman think that the Committee of the Whole would have the right to consider it at a Friday night session?

Mr. MCRAE. If all those errors were committed, why, it would not be in order, but it is unreasonable to suppose in the first place that the bill would be erroneously referred, and in the second place, erroneously reported from the committee if so referred. This is a private bill and it is properly reported, and that gives jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that the bill is in order under the technical language of the rule, although the question is not entirely free from doubt.

Mr. JONES. I desire to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JONES. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 9.

Accordingly the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. MAHON. Before we consider this bill or any other bill, I should like to have section 6 of Rule XIV read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

6. No member shall speak more than once to the same question without leave of the House, unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer of the matter pending, in which case he shall be permitted to speak in reply, but not until every member choosing to speak shall have spoken.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill——

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be reported to the House, with recommendation that it lie on the table.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. JONES, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. JONES. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 45.

Accordingly the motion of Mr. JONES was rejected.

Mr. POST. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. POST, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JONES. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 8.

Mr. JONES. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. POST].

Mr. POST. Mr. Chairman, is there any way in which I can——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. POST. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. POST. Is there any way in which I can bring this bill up in the House to-morrow morning or at any other time?

The CHAIRMAN. Not except by a report from the Committee of the Whole and the previous question ordered on its passage in the House, or by a request for unanimous consent. The tellers will take their places.

The committee again divided. Pending the division,

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana said: I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing. That motion is not now in order.

The tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 4.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of no quorum insisted upon?

Mr. JONES. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being insisted on, the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not in order, no quorum having been developed in committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask that the roll call be dispensed with, and that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been repeatedly held that the roll must be called when the Committee of the Whole finds itself without a quorum.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

During the roll call,

Mr. POST. Mr. Chairman, can I ask unanimous consent to withdraw this bill?

Mr. RAY. I object.

The call of the roll was resumed and concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BROOKSHIRE resumed the Chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole have had under consideration sundry bills, and finding itself without a quorum I caused the roll to be called, as required by the rule, and herewith report the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reports that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills, and finding itself without a quorum he caused the roll to be called, and now reports the names of the absentees to the House. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. Seventy-eight gentlemen, less than a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. GRAHAM] is sick at his hotel, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, a member of the family of the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] is sick, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. KIEFER] is sick. I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RAY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAY. The chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions now moves that the House adjourn. It is only 9 o'clock, and there is a way, I think, of procuring the attendance of absent members.

Mr. PICKLER. You can not get them.

Mr. RAY. Now, if it is in order, I would like to ask the gentleman to withdraw his motion.

Mr. BRETZ. I insist, Mr. Speaker, on the question being put on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I withdraw that motion.

Mr. PICKLER. I object.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Several members demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 11.

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

By Mr. BALDWIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions: A bill (H. R. 3716) granting a pension to Sarah Potter, dependent daughter of Andrew Potter, deceased. (Report No. 1207.)

By Mr. MARSH, from the Committee on Military Affairs: A bill (S. 142) to remove the charge of desertion from William H. H. Cook. (Report No. 1206.)

By Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs: A supplemental report on the bill (H. R. 6633) for the relief of George W. Harbaugh.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CATCHINGS: A bill (H. R. 7648) to provide for the punishment of larceny in the Indian Territory—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LAYTON: A bill (H. R. 7649) to provide for the erection of a monument at Fort Recovery, Mercer County, Ohio—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. GEAR: A bill (H. R. 7650) fixing the times when, regulating the manner in which, and declaring the character of the accounts which shall be hereafter stated to the Treasury Department for settlement between the United States and the several public land States relative to the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands made and to be made therein by the United States, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SWEET: A resolution fixing a time for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7558—to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. WILSON of West Virginia: A resolution to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the consideration of the bill H. R. 4868 and agree to conference asked by the Senate thereon—to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: A memorial of the Ohio Legislature, asking Congress to aid in building a monument in honor of the treaty of Greenville—to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAIR: A bill (H. R. 7652) granting a pension to Miss Delphine P. Baker, for expenses incurred during the late war and for services performed in originating and founding the National Home for Disabled Soldiers and Sailors of the Army and Navy of the United States—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAUSEY: A bill (H. R. 7653) for the relief of the Southern Railroad Association, lessees of the Mississippi Central Railroad Company—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McDEARMON: A bill (H. R. 7654) for the relief of William B. Booker, of Haywood County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 7655) for the relief of the executors of W. H. McBrayer—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MEYER: A bill (H. R. 7656) for the relief of Offner & Laumar—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 7657) granting a pension to James Doyle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7658) granting a pension to Mary Ann Tippler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. COVERT: Petition of Henry W. Mudge and other citizens of Queens County, N. Y., against an income tax as applicable to fraternal beneficiary orders—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By the SPEAKER (by request): Memorial from the National Prison Association of the United States, asking the passage of the bill now before Congress for the establishment of a bureau in the Department of Justice for the identification, etc., of criminals—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition and resolution of the White Cross University of Science on the subject of sewerage of the city of Washington and the creation of bonded debts—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. DRAPER: Petition of H. D. Rogers and other citizens of Belmont, Mass., in favor of certain amendments to the income tax provisions of pending tariff bill—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. EVERETT: Petition of I. N. Moore and others, praying that benevolent associations be exempted from income tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Memorial of C. W. Super, D. D., and the faculty of the Ohio University, at Athens, Ohio, in favor of more stringent laws against lotteries—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HENDRIX: Petition of citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., asking that fraternal and benefit orders be exempted from income tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HOPKINS of Pennsylvania: Petition of Encampment No. 71, Union Veteran Legion, praying for the passage of the per diem service pension bill—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCREARY of Kentucky: Petition of Rev. William G. Frost, president of Berea College; Rev. John G. Fee, Rev. L. V. Dodge, B. S. Hunting, and others, of Berea, Ky., to prohibit the introduction of lottery matter into the territory of the United States—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McETTRICK: Petition of Michell Dexter and 47 other wholesale dealers in eggs in the city of Boston, Mass., for a duty of at least 3 cents per dozen upon all imported eggs—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Frank W. White and 37 others, of Quincy, Mass., that fraternal beneficiary orders be exempted from the provisions of the income tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McMILLIN: Petition of Nat Witt, of Spring City, Tenn., late lieutenant-colonel Fifth Regiment Infantry Volunteers, for increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 7, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The following prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY:

O Lord, Thou great dispenser of all human events, we come to Thee this morning with hearts bowed with profound sorrow at the loss of our gifted brother, who has been cut off in the prime of his young manhood. O Lord, wilt Thou be gracious to the members of his family; save and comfort them in the hour of thei raffliction; sustain them by Thy Holy Spirit; and may they submit with patient resignation to Thy divine commands. Impress on all hearts the lesson of the hour. May we hear Thy warning voice—be ye also ready. Prepare us for living; prepare us for dying; and save us by Thy grace, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct the RECORD. The report of the proceedings in the RECORD, on page 7163, upon the bill H. R. 4448, does not show all the amendments that were adopted. It only shows those which appeared on the Calendar print of the bill. The following other amendments were moved by the committee and adopted by the House, to wit: The letter "s" was added to the word "declaration," in line 3; the word "has," in line 5, was stricken out and the word "had" inserted; the word "days," in line 8, was stricken out and the word "years" inserted.

The Journal is correct, and the bill has been properly engrossed. I call attention to this, in order that the RECORD may be corrected.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask a moment to say that last evening I was unavoidably absent, on account of sickness in my family, when the vote was taken on the bill authorizing the States to tax greenbacks and other forms of public securities, and I wish to say that had I been present I should have voted for the bill, and that I have always favored the measure.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the Journal and RECORD are incorrect in regard to the substitute to that bill which was finally adopted—the Cooper substitute. The substitute was adopted, but the action on the words "all currency circulating as money" is not printed in the RECORD at least, and the Journal I think is incorrect also. That is the amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], and which it is stated was passed. It was not. It was accepted; and then, in this substitute, it appears that that amendment of the gentleman from Vermont was voted down. It really was not voted down, but was inserted in it.

The SPEAKER. It was voted down as an amendment to the original text of the bill. It was offered as an amendment to the original text of the bill, and was voted down.

Mr. HALL of Missouri. Well, the RECORD has an incorrect report of the bill, Mr. Speaker, and I will ask for a correction of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal as read will be approved.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 879) granting a pension to Josephine F. Kelton, widow of Brig. Gen. John C. Kelton, late adjutant-general United States Army, deceased;

A bill (S. 2070) to provide for the restoration to the State of Michigan two flags carried by the Twenty-second Michigan Infantry Volunteers and now in the War Department; and

A bill (S. 2129) to authorize the entry of land for reservoir purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed under the direction of the Department of State 6,000 copies of the official proceedings of the Tribunal of Arbitration created in pursuance of the treaty of February 29, 1892, between the United States and Great Britain, including all documents, papers, and agreements presented officially to said tribunal by the agents of said Governments, respectively, and also including the written or printed arguments and oral arguments of the counsel on behalf of each said Governments made on said hearing at Paris, and the opinions of the arbitrators, respectively, delivered in said tribunal in conformity with its order admitting the same to constitute a part of said proceedings; of which number 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the use of the Department of State.

THE TARIFF BILL.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report back to the House the bill H. R. 4864, with the Senate amendments thereto, with the recommendation that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia reports back this bill, and states that the Committee on Ways and Means recommends that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the request for a conference. The bill will be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a report from the Committee on Rules.

The report was read, as follows:

Resolved, That after the passage of this resolution the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) with Senate amendments thereto, and the same shall be considered in the House; that after two hours of general debate it shall be in order in the House to move to nonconcur in the Senate amendments to said bill in gross, and to agree to a committee of conference as asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses; and the House shall, without further delay or other motion, proceed to vote upon said motion.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I demand the previous question, Mr Speaker, on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, the Constitution of the United States has a great reverence for the House of Representatives, its dignity and honor. It regards it as fresh from the people, and therefore especially adapted to deal with matters of taxation, including tariff taxation. But the House seems somewhat disposed to step down from the position which the Constitution has assigned to it and to transfer to the other body and to a conference committee the powers which it does not find itself in condition to exercise.

There is evidently a very great difference in principle between the Senate bill and the House bill. They seem to be formed upon different plans. The House bill contained a moderate supply of protection, and the Senate bill, viewed from the standpoint of the opposite side, must be said to contain a considerably larger infusion of protection, not counting even the famous collars and cuffs schedule; and the Senate has also caused to disappear the great principle of free raw material. Notwithstanding that very essential difference between the two bills, the House authorities have seen fit to prevent the House itself from commenting upon the different items which have been presented.

Now, of course, there are some good reasons for this. First, the delay which has taken place in the Senate; and, second, the enormity of the mass of amendments proposed. Six hundred and thirty-four changes the Senate has deemed necessary to make in the bill as it left the House. The differences between the two bills are so radical that anybody would say that it became the duty of the House of Representatives, as the immediate representatives of the people, to discuss the matter and to exercise fully its functions. This is not the same as the case of the McKinley bill, where there was no difference in principle, but merely a difference in rates.

I can understand why the House should adopt the rule which is proposed. It is because of their anxiety to follow Republican precedents, and it marks the highwater of a change of feeling which I desire to commend to the attention of the House, because it may be useful to the nerves and feelings of gentlemen in the next House of Representatives. [Laughter.] I can remember when nobody regarded anything which had been done in the time of the McKinley bill as a thing to be touched even with the assistance of tongs. [Laughter.]

Everybody was overflowing with contempt for the precedents of that period, but we have now arrived at a pitch of repentance at which nothing will satisfy the majority except to follow the very plans and purposes and fashions which in their day and time they denounced. Nothing else will satisfy them; and so, notwithstanding the fact that gentlemen on the other side have always claimed the right of the House of Representatives to rule in matters like this, notwithstanding the exceeding difference in principle and in detail between the bill as it left the House and the bill as it comes back to the House, gentlemen on the other side are so constrained by admiration for Mr. McKinley and his methods that they have to adopt the very rule which was then adopted and which nevertheless will doubtless be denounced again by some gentlemen on this floor. I yield now to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROW].

Mr. BURROWS and Mr. CATCHINGSS rose.

Mr. REED. If agreeable to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], I will reserve my time.

Mr. BURROWS (to Mr. CATCHINGS). The gentleman from Maine reserves his time; I should be glad to hear from the gentleman from Mississippi before proceeding with my remarks.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is necessary that I should make any reply to what the gentleman from Maine has said, because I have not discovered in his remarks anything of substance that calls for a reply. He began by the intimation that the House was proposing to abdicate somewhat its powers by the adoption of this resolution, clearly implying that it is the duty of the House now to proceed deliberately and carefully to the consideration of the various amendments put upon the Wilson bill by the Senate.

But he was confronted by the obstacle that we are proposing to pursue, the same course which was pursued by the House in the Fifty-first Congress when the McKinley bill was returned from the Senate. And the course then pursued was exactly correct; because it is simply impossible (and nobody knows it better than my friend from Maine) for this House, as it was impossible for that House, with any idea of ever securing legislation, to take up and debate seriatim the many amendments put on the bill by the Senate. And I do not remember that there was any criticism or complaint on this side of the House with reference to the order adopted by the Fifty-first Congress by which the tariff bill was then speedily placed in conference.

The gentleman from Maine has said that the cases are different, because then the bill was a protection bill as it passed the House and a protection bill as it passed the Senate; that the change was simply one of degree. Very largely that is true, Mr. Speaker. It was a question of "boodle" from the beginning to the end; and in some respects the "degree" was quite sharply defined. But I call to mind that there was one great and marked difference between the McKinley bill as it passed the House and the bill as it came from the Senate.

I remember, Mr. Speaker, that the reciprocity clause, which afterward became the very slogan of my friends on the other side, was kicked and spurned and despised by the Committee on Ways and Means in this House in the Fifty-first Congress. It was a Senate idea—put upon the bill by the Senate; and it became afterward, in all the political campaigns and is up to this day, the very chiefest claim and merit imputed to that bill.

But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to do a little prophesying, as my friend has done. I wish to make the prophesy now that if so great an evil should befall the American people in the future as to have the administration of this Government return to the hands of the Republican party, we shall never again have a McKinley bill fastened upon the people. The days of extreme high tariffs have gone, and gone never to return; and if you [addressing Mr. REED] were in power to-day, with the experience which you derived from the elections of 1890 and 1892—courageous and bold a man as I believe you to be—you would suffer your right hand to be burned off before you would seek to crowd through again such a bill as the McKinley bill.

The American people, Mr. Speaker, have determined on lower taxation; and they are going to have it: and they will have it whether the Republican or Democratic party is in power. You have learned [addressing the Republican side] that the people felt that you deceived them when, under a pretense of "revising the tariff by its friends," you raised these great high walls of protection which shut off our foreign commerce and inflicted such burdens upon the people. My friend from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] smiles. He will be (if this House should be again Republican) one of the chief actors on the Committee of Ways and Means; and he will come again singing his sweet siren songs; but he will never electrify this House again with a plea for high tariffs.

Mr. Speaker, another reason why we have proposed this order is that the country has got tired of debate on this subject. It wants a little action. [Applause on the Democratic side.] For four long months, because of Republican obstruction at the other end of this Capitol, the suspense and uncertainty which have been inflicted upon this country, paralyzing its business, have gone on. We do not propose, Mr. Speaker, that such a spectacle shall be presented to the country in this Chamber.

We propose that every assistance shall be given to the conferees to move with celerity and expedition. And we propose to reform that bill which has come from the Senate in such a way that it shall be at least very largely acceptable to the best tariff reformers on this side of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] So far as this House is concerned, it intends to see that at least on this great question, which marks the chief dividing line between the parties, the pledges given to the people by the platform of 1892 shall be fulfilled in spirit if not in the exact letter. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. REED. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] is quite correct in saying that the order reported from the Committee on Rules this morning for the consideration of this bill is precisely like the order adopted in the Republican Congress in 1890, when the McKinley tariff bill was under consideration. He is wholly in error, however, when he asserts that that order met with no opposition on the part of the then minority. It not only met with the united vote of the minority in opposition to the rule, but with the severest denunciation of the leaders of that minority.

Now, I quite concur with gentlemen of the majority that such a rule as the one proposed is necessary. I thought so in the Fifty-first Congress, and I think so now. The Republican party thought so then, because, as has been well said by the gentleman from Mississippi, if a bill of this character should take the ordinary course of legislative procedure and receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, subject to general discussion with each one of the 634 amendments, subject to debate and the motion to concur or nonconcur, the time necessary to reach a conclusion would be incalculable.

So we thought in 1890 in consideration of the McKinley bill that such a resolution was appropriate and in order and ought to be adopted, and yet the other side of the House voted solidly against it, and were loud in its denunciation of it.

I desire, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi that this course when proposed in the Fifty-first Congress met with no opposition from the Democratic party, to quote a few extracts from that debate. First, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], when a rule precisely like this was under consideration in the Fifty-first Congress, said:

> The Senate took up the bill and considered it with more of deliberation than we did. Amendments of the utmost importance have been adopted there—four hundred and sixty-four amendments in number. And now, when the bill comes back here, in the absence of any disposition to delay its consideration improperly, with every member of the House ready and willing to give it calm, careful, and expeditious consideration, it is to be again wrested from the Committee of the Whole, it is to be again put into the hands of a small junta, and again the people's voice is to be stifled.

Immediately after this the gentleman from Georgia, now the distinguished occupant of the chair as the Speaker of this House [Mr. CRISP], interrupted with the remark in support of the gentleman from Tennessee:

> The rule takes away the right to concur.

And the gentleman from Tennessee then proceeds:

> Mr. MCMILLIN. Yes, as my friend from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] correctly suggests, the rule takes away the right to concur. It takes away the right to concur with amendment; it takes away from you all individual power and lodges supreme control of the question in the hands of a small junta, who, it is proposed, shall cook up this mess to suit certain particular palates. When the conference report comes, it will embrace all these hundreds of amendments, and you can not get a separate vote. Now, gentlemen, are you ready for this?

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. REED. I would suggest to my friend from Michigan that "Philip is sober" now. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BURROWS. Again, further on, Mr. MCMILLIN uses this language:

> Mr. Speaker, we have been demagoging a good deal—I use plain phraseology; this is no time to mince words—we, as a House of Representatives, have been demagoging a great deal about "free sugar;" and it is proposed by one of the Senate amendments to increase the amount of sugar that shall be consumed that comes through the refineries under control of the trusts. All these things are in this bill; yet you say, "We will shut our eyes to them; we will drive our people from their rights; we will revolutionize this revolutionary House; we will revolutionize revolutionary rules or methods; we will take this bill away from the House and send it to a committee of conference without allowing a vote to concur even in proper amendments."

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

After this, Mr. MCRAE of Arkansas joined in the general condemnation in the following terms:

> Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, to my mind this is a most remarkable proceeding. Here we have several hundred Senate amendments to this extraordinary tariff bill, which was itself railroaded through the House without any opportunity for amendment as to many of the most important schedules, and now by another similar resolution from the Committee on Rules the House is denied the right to consider the amendments separately in the Committee of the Whole, as they ought to be. By this resolution just adopted the bill and amendments are taken out of the committee, and after only two hours' debate the House is required to vote on a motion to nonconcur in all the amendments together.

Then the gentleman from Georgia, the calm, judicial-minded gentleman from Georgia, Mr. TURNER, said:

> I avail myself of the courtesy of my colleague [Mr. MCMILLIN] to emphasize in some sort the peculiar business methods of our Republican associates upon this floor.

[Applause and laughter on Republican side.]

Again, he says we must make—

> A humble appeal to the gentlemen who are to constitute this annex to Congress known as the conference committee.

And again:

> The amendments which were ingrafted on this bill by the Senate as a result of that long and deliberate debate, numbering nearly five hundred, which required two months of steady consideration in the other branch of Congress, the gentleman proposes we shall nonconcur in gross after a debate of two hours.
>
> Think of it, sir! These amendments involve the most important propositions. They propose new departures in our methods and operations in the future. In some of these amendments friends on this side and gentlemen on that desire to concur; as to some of them, gentlemen on both sides desire to nonconcur.
>
> But we are to take them all here in gross and vote upon them as a whole, some of us voting against that which we favor, and some voting for things to which we are opposed. Is that business, sirs? It may be, but after this is accomplished, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that some business member of the Republican party can raise his eyes toward heaven and thank God that the House is not as the Senate is—a deliberative body.

Mr. REED. What was the date of that?

Mr. BURROWS. September 15, 1890. I have called attention to this bit of history in no spirit of opposition to the proposed order, but rather to congratulate the Democratic party, Mr. Speaker, in adopting this necessary Republican method of "transacting business." I wished to direct the attention of the country also to your position, then and now, for the purpose of showing what is the usual course of the Democratic party. It never does a right thing unless it follows the lead of the Republican party. [Applause on the Republican side.] This bill will now go to conference, and I predict you will abandon the House bill and adopt the Senate amendments, because the Wilson bill was a free-trade measure, or a long step in that direction. The Gorman bill is a step in the other direction, away from free trade and towards the Republican policy of protection. For this reason, if for no other, you will adopt it. I heartily congratulate you, therefore, in adopting again Republican methods in this particular, and what Gen. Garfield once said of your party is specially applicable here:

> The Democratic party lags in the rear of the Republican party in its magnificent march in behalf of civilization and human progress, and when in its blindness it loses the way, it sends out a scout to find the trail of the Republican party, and stumbling on to one of its old camp fires, he takes up a smoldering brand, and whirling it over his head exultingly shouts, "Come on, boys, we are all right; they have been here."

[Prolonged applause and cheers on the Republican side.]

Mr. REED. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. REED. I yield that to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I only want a minute.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. You might as well occupy the entire time.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I only want a minute to say that I have not had the privilege of reading the House print of this bill with the Senate amendments, so that I have got to take it on faith; but the majority have the power to compel that. I have looked at it just far enough to see that this "dose" that is to be swallowed this morning temporarily, and a little later on to be swallowed to stay, so far as the Democratic throat and stomach are concerned, is not to be a sweet one. But I can congratulate my Democratic friends upon the other side when I come to notice the oil schedule, that oils are going to be cheaper to grease your throats with when you swallow the Senate amendments down, as you will do a little later on. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution reported from the Committee on Rules was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. In view of the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan, I am tempted to suggest that probably we can nonconcur immediately by unanimous consent and not go any further with the debate. I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur, and dispense with any further debate.

Mr. REED. I can not hear what the distinguished leader of the House is saying.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] asks unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference as asked by the Senate.

Mr. REED. I do not think that is judicious.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine objects.

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] moves that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. The gentleman from West Virginia——

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to make any detailed explanation of the difference between the bill prepared and passed by the House and the bill as returned to us with the amendments of the Senate. After five months pendency in the Senate the bill has been returned to us with some six hundred and thirty-four amendments. Probably four hundred and fifty or more of those are to the tariff schedules, the customs schedules, and the residue to such administrative sections as are left in the bill, and to the internal-revenue sections of the bill. So that the number of amendments to the tariff bill itself are not materially greater than the number proposed by the Senate to the McKinley bill in 1890.

A great many of those amendments are immaterial corrections, or proposed corrections, of phraseology; a slight increase or a slight decrease in some duty which is not of very great importance so far as the taxpayer or the Treasury is concerned; but there are a number of amendments that are very important in themselves, and that make very material changes in the general scheme and idea of the bill as it passed the House and in the burden of taxation upon the people of the country.

It has been said that the bill which passed the House on the 1st day of February last was hastily gotten up, was not a well-considered bill, and that therefore it was incumbent upon the Senate to take the crude bill offered by the House and to perfect it by such amendments as the Senate deemed proper to add or propose to it. So far from that being true, I speak within the bounds of correct statement when I say that no tariff bill ever went from the House of Representatives in all of its history to the other Chamber on which longer and more careful and more detailed and more conscientious work was bestowed than upon the bill which passed this House on the 1st of February.

I say this without saying anything of course as to the character of the bill itself. But I simply want to say for the House of Representatives that in the discharge of their constitutional duty as the immediate representatives of the taxpayers of this country, and in the discharge of the mandate of the people of the country when they sent the members with their commissions to this House, they performed their work honestly, carefully, deliberately, and to the best of their capacity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I perfectly agree, Mr. Speaker, with some of the remarks of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] in the first part of his speech this morning. I agree with him that the duty of framing a revenue bill, a bill to impose taxes upon the people, is both by the express letter of the Constitution and by the very theory of free government a duty peculiarly, and in the first place exclusively, resting upon those who are chosen by the people themselves. It is the very definition of free government that all taxes shall be levied by the votes of those who immediately represent the payers of those taxes. And while under our constitutional system the Senate may propose amendments, it is none the less a duty of this House to endeavor to frame and to secure the passage of a tariff bill as satisfactory to it and as just to the people of the country as if it was the sole framer of such a bill, and as if the sole responsibility rested upon it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, the bill that went from this House, whatever may have been the imperfections of its details, was based upon two clear and intelligent principles.

It was based first upon the principle that in gathering revenue taxes under a tariff, those taxes should be levied and gathered from finished products, and not upon what are called raw materials. Taxes upon raw materials are taxes upon the occupation of the working people of the country; and no country which does not allow its working people free untaxed access to the materials of industry can fully supply its own market or hope to contend for the markets of other countries in the world. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

And so, sir, the bill that passed through the House was based upon that great fundamental Democratic idea that we should gather whatever revenue we need under a tariff system from a revenue tax upon the finished product and not from successive taxes, rolled up and repeated at every stage in the process of manufacture, upon the materials that workingmen have to use in the employment of their labor. The bill that came back to us from the Senate does not recognize that principle. It has transferred to the tax list quite a number of materials of industry which this House desired and desires to give free and untaxed to the working people of this country. Of all the chief free materials provided in the House bill only wool and lumber come back to us undisturbed by the Senate bill.

There was another important and equally Democratic principle in the House bill, and that was that there can be no just or equal system of taxation except a system based upon the value of the thing taxed. There is no open, public, and just system of taxation except that which is levied upon a unit of value, not that which is levied upon a unit of weight, measure, or time. Therefore the House bill in the main sought through all of its schedules to introduce and to extend, as far as it could, the ad valorem system of taxation, instead of a specific or a compound system.

There is not a State in this country that would dare to impose specific taxes on acres of land or on the dwellings of the people, by which a worthless acre would pay as much taxes as the richest in the State, and by which the humblest cottage would pay the same rate of taxation as the most luxurious mansion in the State; and yet specific taxes work out their results in exactly that method wherever they are put into our tariff system, always increasing the burden where it ought to be diminished in justice and equality, and diminishing the burden where it ought to be increased in justice and equality.

Now, sir, we find that the Senate bill has returned very largely to specific taxes, and in many cases, in a considerable number of cases, in that worst and most insidious and prima facie fraudulent form of taxes, a compound duty, made up of a specific tax and an ad valorem tax. Thus the bill comes back to the House with these two great fundamental principles of just taxation and these two great fundamental principles of Democratic policy in a large measure overridden and neglected; and it is for this House, so far as it can, in the performance of its duty to the people, to insist upon their continuance in any tariff bill that is passed by this Congress. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall not go, as I said in opening this discussion, into details as to the specific schedules or as to the specific taxes. I have already stated that the amendments proposed to this bill by the Senate are 634 in number. They are distributed as follows: There are 52 amendments to the chemical schedule; there are 64 amendments to the iron and steel schedule; there are 3 to the wood schedule; 5 to the sugar schedule; 4 to the tobacco schedule; 16 to the cotton schedule; 19 to the flax schedule; 30 to the woolen schedule; 6 to the silk schedule; 8 to the paper schedule; 57 to the sundry schedule; and 89 to the free list; in the latter case, almost always a transfer of something left on the free list by the House or put upon the free list by the House back to the taxable list.

Now, sir, if there were any feeling in this House when we came to deal with the tariff bill, it was that we were dealing too conservatively. There was scarcely any sentiment in this House, except here and there upon some one particular item, that did not make us feel that if we were free to carry out the full mandate of the people who sent us there, we would have sent to the Senate a bill with a lower range of duties than we ventured to suggest or pass in this House.

If these amendments were in the direction of a reduction of the people's taxes, I am sure that this House would agree very quickly to a large number of them; but while a few of them, in one or two important instances, for which I must give due credit, are reductions, the great mass of these changes are in the direction of increasing the taxes upon the American people and increasing the protection of the home makers of the articles thus taxed. This is especially true in the sugar schedule. It is true in the cotton schedule. It is true in the woolen schedule. It is true in the glass schedule, and so on through all the important schedules where the taxes bear most heavily on the people there is an increase in taxation which will not, in my judgment, increase proportionately the revenue of the Government derived from those taxes.

But, Mr. Speaker, I feel that while it is the duty of the House to stand by the people, and while I believe this House is going to stand by the people [applause on the Democratic side], I believe, sir, that we should recognize in the spirit of fairness any difficulties which our colleagues at the other end of the Capitol may have had in the construction of this bill, and that there should be, both in letter and in spirit, "a full and free conference" between the House and the Senate as to all the amendments proposed to the House bill; and I believe that such conferees as may go from this House will go animated with that spirit, prepared to deal fairly and fully and honestly with these successive amendments, but at the same time under the overwhelming sentiment of fidelity to their party pledges and to their duty to the people who sent them here. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, though I do not know that I shall want to say anything further.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel like making any reply to the gentleman from West Virginia. I appreciate what he is pleased to euphemistically call the "difficulties" of the Senate, the nature and character of which, however, he has wisely refrained from telling us. I am glad also to have him utter this note of defiance to the Senate, and yet I am perfectly confident, as is every member of this House, that it is the last outcry that will be uttered by him or by his side. [Laughter.]

The idea of his talking about free raw material being a Democratic principle, and telling us that he was trying to carry it out! Free raw material, in the last essence, is not to be found on the face of the earth. It is a mere chimera; a mere illusion of the schoolmen, which, the moment it got before those practical gentlemen in the Senate, men of business, men with "difficulties" [laughter], vanished, leaving not a rack behind. [Laughter.] And when they get into the conference committee, those practical business men, with their "difficulties," will confront the gentleman from West Virginia, and confront him at shorter range, and will obliterate him more effectually than they have already done. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, think what he has said! He has said that the bill which he presented here was more protectionist than he wanted, more so than he would have made it if he had been at liberty to do right. Well, with 100 Democratic majority, what on earth prevented him from doing what he calls right? He goes into this question with an asseveration that he had already gone too far, and yet the Senate utterly outstrips him. How, then, is he going to meet them in a "spirit of fairness?" How is he going to appreciate their "difficulties?" I am sorry he did not define to the House those difficulties, and yet my regret is mitigated by the fact that the country has defined them and has not needed his assistance. I yield fifteen minutes to my colleague from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, there are not only 634 amendments to this bill, comprising 96 pages of printed matter, but 90 per cent of those amendments are material changes in the bill. As the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has said, nearly every schedule has an increase in duty. The chairman has also informed the House that in the Senate amendments the theory upon which the House bill was formed has been overturned and specific duties have taken the place of ad valorem rates.

That is true, Mr. Speaker. The bill as it comes from the Senate is radically different in almost every particular from the bill as it left the House. There are many amendments upon which I would gladly vote to concur. For instance, the Senate has granted to our magnificent Empire State the concession of protective duties on collars and cuffs and on teasels. [Laughter.] They have restored teasels to the dutiable list. I am glad that at least one member of the Senate representing the State of New York in the other end of the Capitol was not induced to vote for this bill even though they put teasels into it with a duty of 15 per cent. [Laughter.]

The only raw material which is free in the bill now is the farmer's wool. They have made that free, and, as a compensation to the farmer, they have given him free burlaps—free bags. They have left the duty on his fence wire; they have given him a duty of 3 cents a dozen on eggs; they have given him a duty of 15 cents a bushel on potatoes. They have made other magnificent overtures to the farmer to compensate for the destruction of his wool industry; but when it came to the question of free coal and free iron ore, the two principal essentials of the great manufactures of this country, the Senate said, in the language of the gentleman from West Virginia, that those few corporate railroads in the State of West Virginia must be protected by a duty upon those articles.

And so free raw materials have vanished from the bill. Then they have got sugar in. They have adopted my friend's "ad valorem," a rate of 40 per cent on sugar. They have adopted it because it is such a rate as the importer always wants—an ad valorem rate. The importer in this instance was the great sugar trust; and the sugar trust demanded an ad valorem; and of course the sugar trust got it—a rate of 40 per cent on raw sugar, 40 per cent on refined sugar, and because the trust does not import refined sugar, an additional rate of one-eighth of a cent a pound on that.

Well, sir, in the debate elsewhere it has been stated that the difference in price between raw and refined sugar was about 20 cents a hundred, and that the 40 per cent would mean 8 cents, and the eighth of a cent per pound would mean 12½ cents a hundred, and so the differential duty was 20½ cents, equal to the difference in price. Whoever made that statement was deceived by somebody in the interest of the sugar trust. I have before me now a statement from a commercial paper published in the city of New York of the values of sugars on July 4, and the average difference in the values of sugar, accounting for all difference in saccharine strength in the sugars (which I will not go into), is more than a cent a pound, and the differential duty under this Senate schedule is from six-tenths of a cent to 1 cent a pound in favor of the sugar refiner.

Now, I am not going very far into this matter of sugar. I want to wait and see what is going to be done. I want to hear the eloquent gentleman from West Virginia when he comes in here with his report from the conference committee. I want to see what is to be done with sugar. You know what the vote was in the Senate. You know what the action of the Senate was. You know what stands behind the action of the Senate.

Mr. REED. That is, the "difficulties," you mean.

Mr. PAYNE. The "difficulties"—the difficulty of a contribution, not to a Democratic national committee in 1892, but to the Democratic committee of the State of New York in 1892—to their campaign fund. That seems to be the largest——

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, certainly.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to ask the gentleman, who was a member of the Ways and Means Committee in 1890, when the McKinley bill was passed, whether the House committee did not recommend a certain duty amounting only to about two-thirds of that which was finally adopted in conference, and whether his party did not subsequently give, for the benefit of the trust, the high duties that are now imposed by law?

Mr. PAYNE. I will state that matter in a moment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Well, is not that true?

Mr. PAYNE. I would rather state that in my own way.

Mr. MCMILLIN. You allowed the Senate then to have its way against the interests of the people. You had better take care of your own Senate before you go to criticising ours.

Mr. PAYNE. It is true we put a duty on refined sugar; there is no question about that. Mr. Knight, of Philadelphia, appeared before us and made a statement as to his business; and from that statement my own individual judgment was that three-tenths of a cent a pound was ample protection. I favored that duty; and the committee reported four-tenths. Gentlemen appeared before the Senate committee—gentlemen not interested in the trust—and they represented to the Senate committee that a duty of more than six-tenths of a cent a pound was necessary; and the Senate granted a duty of six-tenths of a cent.

The conferees finally put it at half a cent a pound. After that the sugar trust absorbed these outside refiners. The sugar trust went into the campaign in 1892, and went in before the Senate Finance Committee in 1894 and followed that committee about, and invited them to hotels, and met them in private houses; and with the iniquity of the trust spread out before them, with more than 80 per cent of refined sugar the product of the trust, with their eyes open, with the benefit of their experience since 1890, the Senate has put a duty of more than five-tenths of a cent a pound upon every pound of refined sugar in addition to the duty paid upon raw sugar. I simply want to contrast the action of the two Houses.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman yield for a question as to the statement he has just made?

Mr. PAYNE. I would yield, but my time is going very rapidly.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I want to ask the gentleman whether the protective duty of one-half a cent per pound put on in the McKinley bill is not more than that put on by the Senate in this bill, which is one-eighth and one-tenth?

Mr. PAYNE. I will publish the figures with my remarks.

The market price of sugar as published in the Shipping and Commercial List and New York Price Current July 4, 1894, is as follows:

Centrifugal, 96° test, 3¼ cents per pound.
Muscovado, 89°, 2 1/16 cents per pound.
Molasses sugar, 89°, 2 7/16 cents per pound.

Refined.

	Cents per pound.
Granulated	4 1/16–4¼
Powered	4 1/16–4¼
Crushed	4¼ –5 1/16
Cut loaf	4¼ –5 1/16

Dividing the price per pound of the raw sugars by the number of degrees of saccharine strength, the real value of such sugars is:

Centrifugal, at 3¼ cents÷96=3¼ cents.
Muscovado, at 2 1/16 cents÷89=3 cents.
Molasses sugar, at 2 7/16 cents÷89=2¾ cents.
The duty per pound on these prices is:
Centrifugal, 3¼ at 40 per cent, .013 cent per pound.
Muscovado, 3 at 40 per cent, .012 cent per pound.
Molasses sugar, 2¾ at 40 per cent, .011 cent per pound.
On refined:
Granulated, 4 1/16 to 4¼ cents, 40 per cent and ⅛=.0175 to .01825.
Powdered, 4 5/16 to 4¼ cents, 40 per cent and ⅛=.0185 to .01925.
Crushed, 4¼ to 5 1/16 cents, 40 per cent and ⅛=.02075 to .0215.
Cut loaf, 4¼ to 5 1/16 cents, 40 per cent and ⅛=.02075 to .0215.
This makes an average duty per pound on—

Raw sugars	.012
Granulated	.01787
Powdered	.019
Crushed	.02112
Cut loaf	.02112

The lowest differential duty is almost six-tenths of a cent per pound, viz: five hundred and eighty-seven one-thousandths. The highest is more than nine-tenths.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. One other question, and I will not interrupt the gentleman further. Was not the casting vote in favor of the sugar schedule of this bill given by the Republican Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, "the Republican Senator from Pennsylvania" hoped that with the sugar duty on he might defeat the bill in the Senate. He cast his vote in that direction for that purpose. But there did not seem to be enough righteous men left on the Democratic side of the Senate to give more than one vote against the bill on its final passage.

Mr. PENCE. I think I gather better than the gentleman from New York the drift of the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE]. What he means to ask is, whether it is not a fact that it took the vote of the ex-chairman of the national Republican committee to save a Democratic tariff-reform bill upon the sugar question?

Mr. PAYNE. That is a characteristic of the Populist party, which, under the guise of a question, the gentleman from Colorado has succeeded in inserting into my remarks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can get the floor again, I will resume the thread of my discussion. I suppose the gentleman from Colorado has forgotten the fact that even then, even with the vote to which he refers, it took two Populists' votes to put the bill through the Senate.

Mr. PENCE. No; I wish I could forget it.

Mr. PAYNE. But there is another matter to which I wish to address myself for a moment. When this bill was in the House the committee reported a sort of reciprocity or retaliatory clause with reference to petroleum oil. We had some discussion about that, it will be remembered. I mentioned the fact that a representative of the petroleum trust had been in the city a week or two; and the amendment came in; then our committee took it out of the bill. It went to the Senate, and I do not know whether the representative of the petroleum trust was there or not, but in any event that amendment appears to have been incorporated in the petroleum schedule.

I tried very hard in the House to get a similar retaliatory clause with reference to plows and other agricultural implements which come in free of duty under the House bill; but the Democratic side of the House voted me down. However, these "business men" in the Senate for some reason or other have seen the point, and they put that retaliatory provision on plows and agricultural implements.

If I had time to go into all the beauties of the bill I would like to do so. Why, it was beautiful as it left the House, but as it comes back to us from the Senate I am lost in admiration [laughter], it is such a crazy piece from beginning to end, without principle—a single one—unless it be the protection of trusts and combinations; without a single principle, unless it is in violation of the Democratic platform in every one of its particulars; without a single principle, unless it is made sometimes to please Republicans, sometimes Populists, sometimes Democrats, and always to catch votes and for nothing else. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But the bill comes back to us at last, and I am ready to join you gentlemen in voting to disagree with these amendments, though I would like to have an opportunity to vote on some of them separately; but I want it to get into conference, to see what the report of the conference committee is to be.

I want to see what they can make of the two bills, for I believe, sir, that when you see the Senate bill and the House bill coming back here with that conference committee's report, with that sort of a combination, we will have a thing more variegated, more unlike anything in the heavens above and in the earth beneath—I will not except things in the other place [laughter]—than anything that has ever come before the House of Representatives. I hope we will nonconcur, so that we may see what sort of a wrestle we will have on collars and cuffs and on teasels and other things embraced in the 634 different items that the Senate have incorporated in the bill by way of change.

And I am glad to notice another thing. I lifted my warning voice against changing the administrative act, but the House, or the majority on the other side of the House, on some sort of a report from a subordinate in the Treasury, who advised the committee otherwise, made the change. It went to the Senate, and they have stricken out every one of your amendments under that head on the advice and at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury himself. [Applause on the Republican side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. QUIGG]. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I receive the tribute of the other side of the Chamber with a great deal of satisfaction.

Before this bill goes into the conference I should like, if possible, to obtain the sympathy of the conferees on the part of the House in behalf of the great State of New York. It is called, you know, the Empire State, and imperial it truly is; imperial in its resources, imperial in the potentiality of its people, and it has a great deal of interest in the issue of this conference, more, I suspect, than the combined interests of all the States represented by Democrats in the Ways and Means Committee.

Twenty per cent of the manufacturing output of the entire United States is the product of the State of New York. Her factories number 66,000. The value of her output is nearly $2,000,000,000. These factories employ nearly 1,000,000 of people, and pay nearly $500,000,000 in wages annually. Theoretically, at least, New York is very well represented in this Congress in the party that has constructed this tariff bill.

New York has two Senators, and they are both adherents of that party. She has thirty-four Representatives, and nineteen of them are Democrats. But after a careful reading of this bill I am utterly unable to obtain any evidence in the bill of the existence in this Congress of any other son of New York than the Hon. EDWARD MURPHY, jr., of Troy. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I think it will appear that he is the only man who has made a single effective address to the Democrats in charge of this bill.

The Wilson bill left this House, a bill to smash industries; and without in the least losing its character in that respect it has returned to us a bill to protect trusts. [Applause on the Republican side.] My Democratic colleagues from New York have been very divided on this bill, divided among themselves, and in some cases divided among himself. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Some of them have been in favor of it, some of them have been opposed to it, and, as nearly as I can figure out, some of them have been both for it and against it. But, somehow or other, not a man of them has been able to ingraft upon the bill a single word or figure to the advantage of the State of New York, with the exception of the Hon. EDWARD MURPHY, the junior Senator.

When the bill went over to the Senate we know what happened. Every combination of capital in this country rich enough and powerful enough to control or influence a Democratic United States Senator was permitted to write its own schedule. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] has spoken of "difficulties." The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has excused him from the task of indicating what they are, but we all know. A Senator rises in his place and says, "This is a very good bill, an uncommonly good bill, and yet I hardly know whether I can support it or not—yet. I notice one extraordinary omission in the bill. It does not tax"—well, in deference to the gentleman from West Virginia we will say—"coal. I notice that there is no tax on coal."

And then the chorus of Democratic Senators in their seats cry out: "Well, but you see a tax on coal is unconstitutional." And the Senator on the floor says, "Yes, I have heard of that, but you have got to pass this bill, have you not?" And they say, "Yes, we have got to pass it." "And my vote is necessary to its passage?" "Yes, we admit that." "Well, I supposed when you said that a tax on coal was unconstitutional, that you did not quite apprehend my position. My position is, no tax on coal, no vote." And so down goes a tax on coal.

And then another Senator rises in his place and says: "Yes, this is a good bill. I have noticed how excellent a bill it is myself, but I observe that there is no tax on sugar." And they all cry out, "Well, but you see it is impossible to put a tax on sugar, because that is unconstitutional." "Yes," he replies, "I have heard of that. But a tax on sugar goes in this bill, or you do not get my vote." And so down goes a tax on sugar.

Several MEMBERS. Up.

Mr. QUIGG. Yes, up goes the tax on sugar. And so all through the 634 amendments that they have made in this bill, every one of them is the result of the statement of a Democratic Senator, "You don't get my vote unless you violate the Constitution."

Now, when it came New York's turn, Mr. Speaker, the senior Senator from that State, who, as all who have watched his career well know, is opposed to all such things as dickers, who never engaged in a bargain in his life, rose up in his majesty and said, "I have nothing to ask. Eliminate the income tax and I will talk to you." But the income tax stayed there. The junior Senator from that State was the only one who made an effective speech. Realizing that the eyes of eight millions of people were upon him, realizing that he was the sole bulwark against the destruction of their interests, he stood forth among his associates like the mighty gladiator he is, armed cap-a-pie, booted and buckled and belted and spurred, and said in tones that thrilled the American Senate with their passion, "Collars and cuffs, 50 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. Speaker, that was a very simple speech, but it had the strength of simplicity. My Democratic colleague of New York on the Ways and Means Committee of this House [Mr. COCKRAN] has the well-earned reputation of being a very eloquent man, and he spoke on this bill with more than his ordinary fluency. So fluently, indeed, that sometimes I was afraid he would not be able to catch up with himself; but somehow or another he came back from the harvest empty-handed. The senior Senator from New York spoke too, and the country, having nothing else in the world to do, paused and gave him its undivided attention. But somehow or other he was able to accomplish nothing. Only the junior Senator succeeded.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the junior Senator from New York, and I want it perfectly understood that we realize that this is a day of small things and small men. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] If you gentlemen understand the point as well as I do, we are both satisfied.

Mr. CARUTH. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. QUIGG. With great pleasure.

Mr. CARUTH. In what arena, in what country, where is it, that gladiators are booted and spurred? [Great laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Speaker, I should have great pleasure in answering the gentleman's question if I thought it would do anything for the interest of the State of New York, which is my present concern. In our State, with our millions of industry, we are very glad we have obtained this duty on collars and cuffs. We are grateful for it. But I want to ask those gentlemen who are going soon to adjust these "difficulties," when they look over this unnamed and unclassified beast that has come back to us claiming our paternity, mindful of the resources of the State of New York, that even now it is straining at its tether to go among and destroy, that they will clip another claw and draw another tooth in behalf of the State of New York. If I have any further time I return it to the gentleman from Maine. [Applause on the Republican side, and cries of "Vote!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman from West Virginia dispose of some of his time? Two gentlemen have already spoken on this side. [Cries of "Vote!" on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I am ready to take a vote now.

The SPEAKER. The question, then, is upon the motion to nonconcur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. REED. One moment. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. I have no purpose, Mr. Speaker, at this time, and especially in view of the temper the House, to engage in any tariff discussion. My sole purpose in addressing the House will be to find an answer to the inquiry, What is the question that now confronts us? The House has to-day in its custody the most important piece of legislation that is the product of this long and tedious session. It has before it a bill whose title is "to reduce taxation and to provide revenue for the Government," and is to-day in the exercise of the highest function imposed upon it by the Constitution—the function of providing for the raising of revenue to keep in motion the wheels of this great Government.

But that is not the most important aspect of the situation before us. We are to-day to consider under the rule adopted by this House, and in no other way, not simply a revenue bill, but a revenue bill which proposes to overturn the revenue system that for thirty years has prevailed in this country to the enormous enhancement of the prosperity of its people. We are to dispose of, in the brief time allowed to us, a measure which is full of experiment, about which no man can prophesy save as he learns from the past, and about which, prophesying as he learns from the past, he can prophesy nothing but disaster.

Not only have we a revenue bill, and a revenue bill which proposes to establish a new system of raising revenue, but we have in addition what amounts substantially to two alternative bills before us. We have the Wilson bill, which went from this body to the other end of the Capitol embodying not the principles of the Chicago platform of the Democratic party, but embodying, as it is claimed, at least two principles, to wit, free raw material and ad valorem instead of specific duties.

That bill ought to be a proper subject of discussion at this time. Then we have substantially another bill, a bill that comes from the Senate. That bill came to this House the day before yesterday, and already having passed through the Committee on Ways and Means is before the House again to-day. The difference between these two bills, the Wilson bill and the Senate bill, is as the difference between day and night. In the Senate bill the principle of free raw material has disappeared: the principle of ad valorem taxation instead of specific duties has disappeared. The question as to which of these bills ought to be adopted, in whole or in part, as the revenue system of this country, is the question that ought to be discussed by the House to-day.

I do not stop to characterize in my own language the bill that comes from the Senate. I do not stop to characterize in my own language the differences existing between that bill and the bill which is the product of the House, the immediate representatives of the American people. I prefer to characterize it in the terms applied to it by a member of the dominant party responsible for its passage at the other end of the Capitol. I propose to read from the speech of him who has been called, rightly I have no doubt, the greatest living Democrat. Listen, if you please, to the words of the senior Senator from New York describing the Senate bill. He says:

> The Senate bill—the Gorman compromise bill, as it is now generally known in the press and throughout the country—I mean the bill in its present shape, is neither satisfactory to the Democratic party nor to the country. There is no mistaking public sentiment upon this point.
> The true principles of tariff reform have been sacrificed in the effort to insure the retention of an income tax. This the country believes—this the country understands. We promised the people bread and we are giving them a stone. We promised them free raw materials, and we are giving them taxed coal, taxed iron ore, taxed coke, taxed lead ore, and other taxed raw materials.
>
> They expected free sugar, but we are taxing not only that article, but other necessaries of life.
>
> * * * * * * *
> This is not a Democratic bill, I am sure; it is not a distinctly Republican bill: it is not a Populist bill entire, but it is a mixture of all—it is a rag-bag production—it is a crazy-quilt combination—it is a splendid nothing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with the Wilson bill before us and the Senate bill before us, and with the prospect of establishing a new system of revenue, what should be the proper course of legislation? It is the supreme function of this House, under the Constitution of the United States, as we have already heard, to deal with this question of revenue. And the House has made provision for an intelligent consideration of legislation proposed. How do the House rules provide that this great question shall be settled? They provide that these two bills shall pass through the Ways and Means Committee, to the end that they shall there receive consideration, discussion, and deliberation; that then they shall be committed to the Committee of the Whole, where amendment, debate, consideration, are again all possible and in order.

And yet, notwithstanding these House rules, notwithstanding the immense gravity of the situation, notwithstanding the importance of this measure, we find this bill practically without consideration in the Ways and Means Committee because of the lack of necessary information. No estimates have been furnished to us. The effect of the bill it is impossible to tell. Under these circumstances we find ourselves confined in this House to-day in the discussion of this great and important measure to two hours of time. The majority has seen fit to abridge debate, refused the opportunity for amendment, and delegate the powers and duties of the House to a committee of conference. Gentlemen of the majority, you are in the possession of power, not the power of right, but the power of might.

You may override reason. You may stifle debate. Yours is the opportunity to exercise mercilessly the merciless authority of a merciless majority. You may triumph to-day; you will triumph to-day. But you will not triumph for long. I say to you that your doom has already been pronounced. Intoxicated with the seeming victory of 1892, you have never awakened to a realization of the staggering defeat of 1893. Your ears have been deaf to the thunder of the people's voice as in a continuous wave it rolled from Massachusetts through New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio to the prairie lands of Iowa in indignant protest against your misguided conception of the popular will.

Mr. REED. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. You simply await, gentlemen, the registry of the decree of November next, from which there will be no appeal save to the people themselves, the decree of a people whose patience has been exhausted by your incompetence and whose judgment and vengeance will be swift and sure. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Go on, gentlemen of the majority. Complete the assassination of your country's industries; but bear in mind that the hearts of the American people beat true to the interests of the American people, that their clear brains are capable of discerning between friend and foe, that the average common sense of the masses of the plain people, whom you can not deceive, will in the end clothe with power that party, and that party only, whose principles and doctrines are true to the interests of Americans, to the security of the American market for the American producer. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. REED. Does the gentleman from West Virginia desire to use his remaining time now?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. PENCE].

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, duties at a meeting of a committee prevented my being in attendance when the gentleman from West Virginia addressed the House this morning, but I have inquired as to the nature of his remarks and am told that they were a brave and courageous announcement that the majority in this House should stand firm in favor of the bill as it passed the House. If that is true, I desire to congratulate him and the majority in this House.

Mr. REED. That is not quite correct. He said the House conferees would bear in mind the difficulties of the Senate, the troubles in which they found themselves, and would deal with them in a spirit of fairness. [Laughter.]

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I did come into the House in time to hear the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] say that there had been somewhere, by somebody, on some occasion, a suggestion made that there were difficulties surrounding the final solution of this question. [Laughter.] The motion now before the House, as I understand it, is simply that the House shall disagree to the amendments of the Senate and agree to a conference.

We have had no expectation up to this time, Mr. Speaker, however much we may be happily disappointed within the next few hours, that there would be any Populist member amongst the House conferees [laughter], so that we have had no expectation of having one of our members take part in the final adjustment of the frame and form and effect of this tariff bill. We have, however, a sincere desire and hope that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee will deserve, at the moment of final action on this bill, to stand up again and call upon his colleagues as a roll of honor and to be carried out upon their shoulders. It is not a question of sense with him; it is a question of courage, and, for one, I believe he has it.

But that is not what I rose to say. I want to read to the members of this House a few words of genuine and disinterested wisdom, so that they may at least go to the conference, and possibly to the country, with the other remarks made here to-day. On the 4th of July, 1892, the new party of this country in national convention used the language I am about to read, which it seems to me at this moment, witnessing the scene of to-day and recalling the late scenes in the Senate, was inspired by both truth and prophecy:

> We have witnessed for more than a quarter of a century the struggles of the two great political parties for power and plunder, while grievous wrongs have been inflicted upon the suffering people. We charge that the controlling influences dominating both these parties have permitted the dreadful conditions to develop without serious effort to prevent or restrain them.
> Neither do they now promise us any substantial reform. They have agreed together to ignore, in the coming campaign, every issue but one. They propose to drown the outcries of a plundered people with the uproar of a sham battle over the tariff, so that capitalists, corporations, national banks, rings, trusts, watered stock, the demonetization of silver, and the oppressions of the usurers may all be lost sight of.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman from West Virginia does not desire to occupy further time, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in the time allowed for debate there can be no discussion of the schedules of this bill. Therefore I hesitate about even using the five minutes which have been accorded me. But I will briefly say I am glad that this rule was adopted and that the House is about to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and to send the differences between the two Houses to the conference.

This is the 7th day of July. Congress has been in session almost twelve months. In 1892 you Democrats swept the country upon a platform that committed you to a certain policy. You elected the President; you obtained control of the Senate; you secured your 90 majority in this House; and on the 4th day of March, 1893, you inaugurated your President. The country has never regretted the election of 1892 and the subsequent inauguration but once, and that has been ever since the inauguration took place. [Applause on the Republican side.]

A goverment of the people? Yes, thank God, as the years roll around, a law-abiding people, a courageous people, competent for self-government. Making mistakes? Yes; but thank God, upon the whole, making fewer mistakes than any other government on earth. They made a gigantic mistake in 1892. The Republicans knew it then and know it now. All the people know it now. But as the election was held, the burden is cast upon you (addressing the Democratic side). If you can not keep your pledges, you threaten to keep them, as you have since the 4th day of March, 1893, and to come in in the last days of your complete power and legislate and try to convince the country that whatever the product is, that is "tariff reform" and a keeping of your pledges.

Why do you send these differences with the Senate to a conference committee? The decree has gone forth, and while the whirlwind from New York, charged with thunder and lightning—I refer to Mr. WARNER—and while the smooth-tongued gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] may send forth their notes of defiance, with a string to them [laughter]—it is absolutely morally sure that substantially the Senate amendments are to be adopted. You are to open your mouths and swallow them down and call them "tariff reform." In Heaven's name, act as quickly as you can. The country has gone from bad to worse. It is going from bad to worse now. Give us your legislative product, and a little later on this American people, putting down disorder by law, putting their foot upon the Governor of Illinois, putting their foot upon the Governor of Colorado, putting their foot upon the Governor of Missouri, if they fail to do their duty or keep other officials from doing their sworn duty, will enlist the sentiment of the country under the banner of law and order and the enforcement of the law.

To-day ninety-nine out of a hundred of our people are saying, "Under the law we will bear the grievances we have until, in November, 1894, we shall enter upon a different policy, so far as we can, and also by our action at the ballot box give notice that we shall go back to the policy which, under the lead of the Republican party for thirty years, brought prosperity to the country, but which under your lead and threat [addressing the Democratic side] has been taken from it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has twelve minutes remaining.

Mr. REED. Does the gentleman from West Virginia desire to occupy any further time?

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia. I am perfectly willing that the vote shall be taken now.

Mr. REED. All right.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia, that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, a motion that the House reconsider the vote last taken was laid on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces——

Mr. JOHNSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a resolution of instructions——

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the following conferees on the part of the House, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. MCMILLIN of Tennessee, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, Mr. MONTGOMERY of Kentucky, Mr. REED of Maine, Mr. BURROWS of Michigan, Mr. PAYNE of New York.

DEATH OF HON. MARCUS C. LISLE.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to announce to the House of Representatives the death of Hon. Marcus C. Lisle, late a Representative in Congress from the State of Kentucky. He died early this morning at his home near Winchester, Ky.

He was born September 23, 1862, in Clark County, Ky. Though young in years, he had become very prominent as a lawyer, legislator, and business man. In the year 1890 he was elected county judge of the county in which he was born and reared. In 1892 he was elected a Representative in Congress, and was therefore serving his first term at the time of his death.

He was a true friend, a pure patriot, and an accomplished gentleman, and he was loved and respected by all who knew him. In all the positions of honor and trust held by him he was conspicuous for his ability, integrity, and fidelity to duty.

At this time I will not indulge in any extended remarks on the life, character, and public services of our deceased colleague and friend, but in the future I will ask the House of Representatives to set apart a day for the commemoration of his virtues and public services, and for appropriate action in regard to his death. I now ask the adoption of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the members of the House of Representatives have heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. Marcus C. Lisle, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That a committee of seven members of the House be appointed by the Speaker to act with such Senators as may be selected to attend the funeral of the deceased; and that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House shall take proper action for superintending the funeral and for attending the remains of the deceased at the place of burial, and the necessary expense incurred by the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate to the Senate a copy of these resolutions.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Before announcing the result of the vote, the Chair will name the following committee in pursuance of the resolution just adopted:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MCCREARY, Mr. BERRY, Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana, Mr. PAYNTER, Mr. DRAPER, Mr. LUCAS, and Mr. PENCE.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the vote,

Indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. TAWNEY, on account of sickness in his family; and to

Mr. SIPE, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded, and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. STONE of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a resolution to refer to the Court of Claims the bill (H. R. 2382) for the relief of Stephen D. Clark and Miss Emma C. Lovelace, both of Catahoula Parish, La.; which, with the accompanying report (No. 1209), was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills of the following titles were introduced, and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HICKS (by request): A bill (H. R. 7659) granting pensions to soldiers, sailors, and marines who served during the war of the rebellion at any time from March 4, 1861, to July 1, 1865, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and other purposes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MCMILLIN (by request): A bill (H. R. 7661) to regulate the practice of medicine and surgery and to license physicians and surgeons in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. FLYNN: A bill (H. R. 7662) for the relief of homestead settlers in Beaver County, Okla., and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, a private bill of the following title was presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. HALL, of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 7660) for the relief of Hamilton Crews—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ALDERSON: Petition of Sally H. Tompkins, of Kanawha County, W. Va., praying that the claim of Beverly Tompkins, deceased, be referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire: Petition of Charles Winch and other citizens of Langdon and Alstead, N. H., praying that fraternal beneficial societies, etc., may be exempt from the provisions of any law providing for a tax on income—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. COFFEEN: Petition of 63 citizens of Laramie County, Wyo., for suspension of assessments on mining claims—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: Petition of citizens of Arkansas City, Kans., favorable to the Kyle resolution—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. HOOKER of New York: Petition of the president and faculty of Alfred University, Alfred, N. Y., for the suppression of lotteries—to the Chmmittee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri: Papers to accompany House bill 7658, for the relief of Mary Ann Tippler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHAW: Resolutions of John Flynn Post, No. 77, Grand Army of the Republic, of North Lacrosse, Wis., signed by William Grover, post commander, and Charles S. Fourt, adjutant, and 36 members, urging Congress to enact a law making it a treasonable offense, punishable by fine or imprisonment, to raise any foreign flag on any public building of the United States upon any occasion or any time. Also the indorsement of the resolution by North Lacrosse Council, No. 9, American Protective Association, of North Lacrosse, Wis., signed by J. C. Follmer, president, and Horace Norton, secretary, and representing 500 members—to the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 9, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when,

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 26th instant, a letter from the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service, together with a copy of the report by Passed Assistant Surg. James B. Stoner, of the Marine Hospital Service, upon the quarantine administration and facilities at the port of Astoria, at the mouth of the Columbia River; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Attorney-General, submitting a request for a deficiency appropriation to cover the expenses of the judge of the United States court in the Indian Territory during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon. There are on the table two communications from the Secretary of the Interior, an original communication sent last week, and a supplemental communication still later, both in response to a resolution of the Senate adopted some days since, relating to the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon. I move that both communications and accompanying papers be printed together as one document, and that they be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILSON of West Virginia, Mr. MCMILLIN, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, Mr. MONTGOMERY, Mr. REED, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. PAYNE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 307) granting a pension to Earnest C. Emerson; and the bill (S. 920) to pension Mary Brown, of Berlin, Vt.; agreed to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN of Indiana, Mr. HARE, and Mr. PICKLER, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 411) for the relief of Samuel Collins.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 4326) to subject to State taxation national-bank notes and United States Treasury notes;

A bill (H. R. 4322) granting the use of certain land to the town of Castine, Me., for a public park;

A bill (H. R. 4448) for the relief of persons who have filed declarations of intention to enter desert lands;

A bill (H. R. 4952) to amend section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 7020) to readjust the salaries and allowances of the postmasters at Guthrie, Oklahoma City, and Kingfisher, in Oklahoma Territory; and

A bill (H. R. 7335) to grant to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 1758) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Oregon and Washington Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 201) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to continue the employment of certain mechanics and laborers.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present petitions of the Chamber of Commerce and Merchants' Exchange; of the Ohio Mechanics' Institute; of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association; of the Manufacturers' Association; of the Freight Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce; of the Commercial Club, and of the Builders' Exchange, all of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for a fast mail service from Cincinnati to the South. As this matter is pending before the Committee on Appropriations, I move that the petitions be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of 56 citizens of Clark County, Ohio, remonstrating against any appropriations being made for Indian education at sectarian schools; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented the petition of J. B. Corey, of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to punish leaders of labor organizations, etc., for obstructing the civil processes of State and national authority, and remonstrating against the unlawful combinations of capitalists; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GALLINGER. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER], who is absent from the city, I present petitions of Richard Nelson, president, and Ella Nelson, secretary and treasurer, of the Nelson Business College, of Cincinnati, Ohio; of O. E. Fulghum, principal, F. C. Fulghum, assistant principal, W. S. Heiser, penman, Mrs. W. S. Heiser, superintendent shorthand department, and Emma C. Beals, shorthand instructor, all of the Richmond (Ind.) Business College; of U. S. Loofbourrow, superintendent of schools, of Eldorado, Ohio; and David H. Cochran, Ph. D., LL. D., president Polytechnic Institute, of Brooklyn, N. Y., in behalf of and by direction of the faculty of the Institute, praying for the passage of joint resolution (S. R. 65) to encourage better spelling of the English language, etc.

I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. CHANDLER) presented the petition of Charles H. Dimick and sundry other citizens of Lyme, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to enable the States to enforce State laws regulating the sale of substitutes for dairy products; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also (for Mr. CHANDLER) presented the petition of Dr. A. H. Hoyt and 15 other citizens of Penacook, N. H., praying that the pending tariff bill be so amended that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members and dependents of such members shall be exempt from all the provisions of the bill requiring taxation in any form; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of a committee of the Yearly Meeting of Friends for New England, remonstrating against the proposed abolishment of the Board of Indian Commissioners by refusing to make any appropriations for its necessary expenses; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALLEN presented a memorial adopted by the People's party of Charles County, Md., July 4, 1894, remonstrating against any compromise of the rights of the people in connection with the Pacific Railroads, demanding that the mortgages held by the United States on those railroads be foreclosed, and that they be owned and run by the United States in the interest of the people; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

He also presented a memorial of the Woman's National Industrial League of America, of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Everett bill, to encourage the Mongolian race to become naturalized citizens of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BLANCHARD presented a memorial of the Orleans Parish Medical Society, of New Orleans, La., remonstrating against a reduction of the appropriation for the library of the Surgeon-General's Office, United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLATT. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2173) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1889, and an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Oklahoma, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes," approved May 2, 1890; to provide for the redistricting of the Indian Territory for judicial purposes, for an additional judge and more United States commissioners, and to prescribe the jurisdiction, duties, and authority of such judges and commissioners, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I shall call the bill up to-morrow morning with the permission of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Meanwhile the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PLATT. The Committee on Indian Affairs has already reported the amendment providing for the payment of certain claims, submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] on the 26th ultimo, as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill. I am now authorized by the committee to report the same amendment to the bill making appropriations for the expenses of the Indian Department. I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so referred.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3458) extending the time for final proof and payment on lands claimed under the public land laws of the United States, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 92) to print extra copies of the decisions of Interior Department relating to public lands and pensions, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Printing; which was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7097) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

CHARLES IVERSON GRAVES.

Mr. PUGH. The Committee on the Judiciary authorize me to report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 1141) to remove the political disabilities of Charles Iverson Graves, of Rome, in the State of Georgia. The bill has been before our committee for several months. It is all right, and it will take but a few minutes to dispose of it. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. PUGH. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7293) regulating the procedure in criminal cases in the district of Minnesota, to report it favorably without amendment. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] states it is important that the bill shall pass immediately, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all criminal proceedings instituted for the trial of offenses against the laws of the United States arising in the district of Minnesota, shall be brought, had, and prosecuted in the division of said district in which such offenses were committed.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect upon its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. GEORGE. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6447) to fix a term of the Federal district and circuit courts of the Southern judicial district of Mississippi, to be held at Meridian, Miss., to include the counties named, to report it back with some slight verbal amendments. I ask consent that the bill be now considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. From the reading this seems to be a bill embracing a good many things. Of course if it takes no time I shall not object to its consideration.

Mr. GEORGE. The reading is nearly completed, and it is merely a bill establishing a new division of a district.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I do not enter any formal objection to the consideration of the bill at this time. It is reported by the Senator from Mississippi and is for the establishment of a new division in his own State where United States courts are to be held. I think, however, I ought to state that dispatches have been received by Senators from the United States district judge for Mississippi saying that the new place for holding courts ought not to be created. I do not enter any formal objection to the bill, because it is reported by the Senator from Mississippi from the Judiciary Committee and he ought to know about the condition of affairs in his own State, but I felt I ought to say to the Senate that the United States district judge thinks the bill ought not to pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 4, to strike out "embrace" and insert "include;" in line 5, after "Neshoba," to insert a semicolon; in line 6, to strike out "Scott;" in line 7, after the word "Wayne," to insert "and;" and in the same line, after the word "Jones," to strike out "and Smith;" so as to make the section read:

That the southern judicial district of the State of Mississippi be so constituted as to include the counties of Kemper, Noxubee, and Neshoba; and that the counties of Lauderdale, Kemper, Noxubee, Leake, Neshoba, Newton, Jasper, Clarke, Wayne, and Jones shall be known as the eastern division of said southern district, and circuit and district courts for the transaction of business pertaining to the persons and property in said eastern division shall be held at the city of Meridian on the second Mondays of March and September of each year and shall continue for three weeks, or so long as business may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 4, after the word "division," to insert "or district;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That if there be more than one defendant in a cause and the defendants reside in different divisions of the said southern district, or any of the defendants reside in the northern district, the plaintiff may sue in either division or district where any defendant resides, and send duplicate writs for the other defendant or defendants, the other division or district where such defendant or defendants reside, and said writs when executed and returned into the court from which they issued shall constitute one suit and be proceeded in accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 3, after "Newton," to strike out "Scott, Smith;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That all processes issued out of said courts at Meridian against defendants residing in the counties of Lauderdale, Kemper, Noxubee, Leake, Neshoba, Newton, Jasper, Clarke, Wayne, Jones, or any other county, shall be returned to the courts hereby provided to be held in Meridian.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire simply to remark, in response to the objection telegraphed by the Federal judge, that the bar and the people of that portion of the State think that the division ought to be created. My own opinion is that it is very essential to the convenience of the people of that section of the State. It adds nothing to the cost or expenses of the judiciary, and furnishes near to the people of a considerable portion of the State a Federal court.

I desire to offer one amendment which I neglected to present in committee. I move to strike out the last section of the bill, section 10, which provides

That the United States shall not be at any expense in providing for a building or room for holding of the terms of said courts at Meridian.

I desire to say in favor of this amendment that there has been a law passed and is now in progress of execution by which $50,000 was appropriated to erect a Federal building at the town of Meridian. The building has not been yet erected, and the tenth section might prevent the expenditure of a part of the money in fitting up a court-room. It will cost the Government nothing. Therefore, in order to prevent any misconstruction, I move to strike out the last section of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 2190) for the relief of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Bethel Springs, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2191) to regulate the sale of milk in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNTON introduced a bill (S. 2192) granting a pension to Celestia P. Hartt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLANCHARD introduced a bill (S. 2193) for the relief of the estate of Alfred W. Green, late of Carroll Parish, La.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I present the affidavits of Mingo Hopkins and Urias Conn, of the parish of East Carroll, La.; which I move be referred, with the bill, to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 2194) providing for the extension of the coal laws of the United States to the district of Alaska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 2195) making employers liable under certain restrictions for injuries sustained by employés; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 2196) to increase the pension of J. Francis Hopper; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

OBSTRUCTIONS TO RAILWAY TRAINS.

Mr. KYLE. On Friday last I introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 94) defining obstructions to railway trains, which was ordered to lie on the table. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. I believe it is fully covered by the bill introduced by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, in the absence of objection.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. ALLISON submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DOLPH. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the sundry civil appropriation bill. It relates to the matter that was submitted to the Senate by the Secretary of the Treasury this morning. I move that the proposed amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

CONTROL OF RAILROADS, ETC.

Mr. PEFFER. I submit a resolution, and ask that it may be read and lie over under the rule.

The resolution was read, as follows:

In view of existing social and business conditions and by way of suggesting subjects for remedial legislation—

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States—

First. That all public functions ought to be exercised by and through public agencies.

Second. That all railroads employed in interstate commerce ought to be brought into one organization under control and supervision of public officers; that charges for transportation of persons and property ought to be uniform throughout the country; that wages of employés ought to be regulated by law and paid promptly in money.

Third. That all coal beds ought to be owned and worked by the States or by the Federal Government; and the wages of all persons who work in the mines ought to be provided by law and paid in money when due.

Fourth. That all money used by the people ought to be supplied only by the Government of the United States; that the rate of interest ought to be uniform in all the States, not exceeding the net average increase of the permanent wealth of the people.

Fifth. That all revenues of the Government ought to be raised by taxes on real estate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over as requested.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is done with the resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It goes over under the rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

INDIAN ENGAGEMENTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. LINDSAY on the 2d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, requested to furnish for the use of the Senate, as early as practicable, a statement showing fully and in detail all expeditions and engagements had by the military forces of the United States with hostile bands or tribes of Indians, for the period beginning with 1850 and ending with March 3, 1891, showing, whenever possible, the tribe or band engaged or operated against, and submitting with the said statement copies of all correspondence and reports relating to the said expeditions against and engagements with the said Indian bands or tribes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky, who introduced the resolution, requests that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PEARL HARBOR SURVEY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. KYLE on the 2d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to inform the Senate by what authority and for what purpose the United States Government through Admiral Walker is making a survey or exploration of Pearl Harbor on the island of Oahu, Hawaiian Islands, and the result of such survey or exploration.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the absence of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD STRIKE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], coming over from a previous day.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted on the 2d instant by Mr. CALL, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators shall be appointed by the President, who shall inquire and report to the Senate the causes of the existing strike of railroad and Pullman-car employés and the justice of the demands of the workingmen, and report by bill or otherwise such legislation as may secure justice to the workingmen and be reasonable and fair to their employers and secure the transportation of the mails and freight and passengers without interruption; and that such committee be authorized to act with a committee of the House appointed for this purpose, and may report to their respective Houses the result of their joint action.

Mr. COCKRELL. In the absence of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], I ask that the resolution may lie over and be retained on the desk until his return. He is necessarily absent from the Senate to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the course suggested by the Senator from Missouri? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on June 29 approved and signed the joint resolution (S. R. 57) directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission of engineers to examine and report upon the cost of deepening the harbors of Superior and Duluth and their entrances to a uniform depth of 20 feet.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 3d instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2135) to provide that a term of the circuit and district court of the United States for the district of Vermont may be held at Montpelier;

An act (S. 1954) to amend section 1379, chapter 1, Title XV, Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to appointments of asistant paymasters in the Navy; and

An act (S. 1963) for the relief of the sureties of Dennis Murphy.

The message further announced that the President of the United States had on the 6th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 171) granting to the State of North Dakota certain lands heretofore set apart as a wood reservation for Fort Totten military reservation for the use of the militia of North Dakota, and for other purposes; and

An act (S. 2000) granting to the Brainerd and Northern Minnesota Railway Company a right of way through the Leech Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 9th instant approved and signed the act (S. 578) granting an increase of pension to Wells Johnson.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 4326) to subject to State taxation national-bank notes and United States Treasury notes was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 4322) granting the use of certain land to the town of Castine, Me., for a public park was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 7020) to readjust the salaries and allowances of the postmasters at Guthrie, Oklahoma City, and Kingfisher, in Oklahoma Territory, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. 7335) to grant to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. 4448) for the relief of persons who have filed declarations of intention to enter desert lands; and

A bill (H. R. 4952) to amend section 2455 of the Revised Statures of the United States.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6748) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments may be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 8, after the word "Provided," to strike out—

That all officers who have been appointed or who may be appointed to any corps of the Navy after service in a different branch of the Navy, shall have all the benefits of their previous service in the same manner as if said appointments were a reëntry into the Navy. Any alien of the age of 21 years and upward who has enlisted or may enlist in the United States Navy or Marine Corps, and has served or may hereafter serve five consecutive years in the United States Navy or one enlistment in the United States Marine Corps, and has been or may hereafter be honorably discharged, shall be admitted to become a citizen of the United States upon his petition, without any previous declaration of his intention to become such; and the court admitting such alien shall, in addition to proof of good moral character, be satisfied by competent proof of such person's service in and honorable discharge from the United States Navy or Marine Corps.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire on behalf of the committee to withdraw that portion of the amendment beginning in line 12, with the words "any alien," and extending to and including the words "Marine Corps," in line 24.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That course will be pursued in the absence of objection. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Provided," in line 8, on page 2, it is proposed to strike out—

That all officers who have been appointed or who may be appointed to any corps of the Navy after service in a different branch of the Navy, shall have all the benefits of their previous service in the same manner as if said appointments were a reëntry into the Navy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 24, after the words "Marine Corps," to insert:

That hereafter no officer of the Navy shall be deprived of sea-duty pay while attached to a vessel in commission by reason of assignment to duty as a member of a naval court-martial, court of inquiry or board, or to other temporary duty, or by reason of being sent to a naval hospital for temporary treatment: Provided further, That in order to fill vacancies that may exist in the grade of ensign in the Navy and in the grade of assistant engineer in the Navy, the Secretary of the Navy shall, in case the number of vacancies in either of such grades exceeds the number of naval cadets in the line division or in the engineer division of the class of naval cadets finally graduated in the year 1894, or in any one year thereafter, select a number equal to such excess from the final graduates of said class in the engineer division or in the line division, as the case may require, who shall be reported as proficient and be recommended thereto by the Academic Board, and such final graduates shall be appointed to fill vacancies in the grade of ensign in the Navy or in the grade of assistant engineer in the Navy, respectively, and the naval cadets so appointed to fill vacancies in such grades shall take rank in those respective grades next after the naval cadets appointed from the line division or from the engineer division, as the case may be, to fill vacancies in those grades, but among themselves according to merit as determined by the Academic Board.

Mr. ALLEN. I inquire of the Senator from Marylann in charge of the bill whether there is any provision prohibiting aliens from being enlisted in the naval service?

Mr. GORMAN. There is no such provision in the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to offer an amendment on that subject.

Mr. GORMAN. Under the unanimous consent just given that amendment will be in order after the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations have been disposed of.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 7, line 6, after the word "Island," to strike out "cost of instruction," so as to make the clause read:

Naval War College and Torpedo School on Coasters Harbor Island: For maintenance of the Naval War College and Torpedo School on Coasters Harbor Island, and care of grounds for same, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 7, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to purchase for the United States the Ourdan & Kolb letter-engraving machine and the right to manufacture and use, without the payment of royalty, others of said machine and any and every improvement or modification of said machine or applicable to said machine and referred to in the letters patent that have been or may hereafter be granted to the inventors of said machine or their assignees, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 3, to strike out "modern battery for the Hartford, $150,000;" and in line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred and fifty," and insert "two hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

In all, $200,000.

Mr. WHITE. I should like an explanation from the committee with reference to the elimination of the appropriation for a modern battery for the Hartford. I have understood that it was recommended by the Navy Department, and I should like to know something about it if the Senator from Maryland in charge of the bill will give the information.

Mr. GORMAN. This proposed appropriation for a modern battery for the Hartford is, of course, in keeping with the general sentiment to maintain that old historic vessel and have it prepared for some future use, either as a training ship or otherwise. The Navy Department, however, informed the committee that the first thing necessary to be done is the thorough repair of the hull of the Hartford, which will cost some $300,000, in round numbers, and the whole cost of repairing the ship and putting her in a condition for any service whatever with a modern battery would be some four or five or six hundred thousand dollars.

The committee therefore thought that, in the present condition of affairs, it would be very much better to permit the arrangements for the reconstruction of the hull to go on before ordering the battery. There will be time enough hereafter for that; and so the committee reported to strike out the appropriation.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the Senator from Maryland accept an amendment appropriating $150,000 for the hull in lieu of the appropriation which has been stricken out by the committee? The employés at the navy-yard at Mare Island can then proceed at once with repairing the hull; and I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to favorably report an amendment that an appropriation of $150,000 be made for repairing the hull of the Hartford. If the Senator will accept of this amendment in lieu of the appropriation which has been stricken out for the machinery upon the vessel, perhaps we can get along this year. I will state also, in connection therewith, that the Committee on Naval Affairs have a letter addressed by the Secretary of the Navy to the chairman of the committee, saying that this sum can be judiciously expended, and will be perhaps all that will be required for the ensuing year or more.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator from California that after we get through with the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations, the amendment he suggests from the Naval Committee will probably then be in order, and can be considered, but it can not be considered now under the agreement.

Mr. PERKINS. I will permit the amendment to lie over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, after line 3, to insert:

That out of any unexpended balance of the appropriation made for the completion of the dry dock at Port Royal, S. C., there shall be used for paying Justin McCarthy, contractor for building said dry dock, the sum of $18,521.42 in full for loss and damage caused by the cyclone of August 27 and 28, 1893, as ascertained by the Navy Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. At the end of line 11, I offer an amendment from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment submitted by the committee.

The SECRETARY. After line 11, page 21, insert:

Dry dock at Algiers, La.: For the purpose of completing the purchase of additional land necessary for the establishment of a dry dock at Algiers, La., and expenses of judicial proceedings instituted for the condemnation of such additional land, $22,025.03.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, to strike out lines 19, 20, and 21, in the following words:

For the construction of a steam tug at Mare Island navy-yard, California, for the use of said yard, $50,000.

Mr. WHITE. With reference to the amendment proposed by the committee, I think instead of the elimination of the item the appropriation should be increased to $75,000. In this connection I beg leave to submit a communication from the Secretary of the Navy in response to a letter written by me. I desire to have the letter of the Secretary read from the desk for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, July 7, 1894.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 6th instant, requesting my views in regard to the construction of a tugboat adequate to perform the necessary services at the Mare Island (Cal.) navy-yard, I have the honor to inform you that when this matter was referred to the Bureau having cognizance thereof it was returned to the Department with the following indorsement:

"The Bureau would recommend the building of a tug and freight boat for the navy-yard, Mare Island, of about 350 tons displacement, at an estimated cost of $75,000.

"Owing to the location of the yard and the services required a tug for this yard should be seagoing and of greater power and carrying capacity than those at the Eastern navy-yards.

"For two years the navy-yard, Mare Island, has had to depend upon the small navy launches in the handling, mooring, placing, docking, and undocking of ships. It has been a matter of good fortune that no serious accidents have occurred, as, owing to the tides and the small power of the launches employed, the handling of the ships has been extremely hazardous, and grave responsibility has devolved upon those engaged in the operation. Again, the vessels required to be docked have been comparatively of small displacement; but with the Olympia and Oregon nearing completion on the Pacific coast, and other large vessels which will probably soon have to be docked at this yard, the risk will be considerably augmented.

"In addition to the service in handling vessels for docking, etc., the tug at Mare Island is needed for freight service, the carrying of stores, ordnance, and enlisted men to and from San Francisco (about 25 miles distant) and vessels in the harbor, and would also be of great value as a protection against fire along the water front and on ships moored in the stream."

From a personal examination at the Mare Island navy-yard I am convinced that an actual necessity exists for the services of such a tugboat as is recommended by the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair.

Very respectfully,

H. A. HERBERT,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. STEPHEN M. WHITE,
United States Senate.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the situation of affairs at Mare Island is such as certainly to call for the building of an adequate tug. I am personally pretty familiar with the surroundings, having visited the island, and my attention having been specifically directed to this matter. My colleague, who also is familiar with the situation, and more familiar with seagoing matters than I am, agrees with me fully in this regard. The information contained in this letter is of more recent date than any which could have been before the committee, as it has come from the Secretary of the Navy since he has personally inspected the ground. I scarcely think, in view of the statements from that official, that it will be necessary for me to add anything to what I have said. The sum of $75,000, I am told, is a necessary amount to construct a boat adequate for such service.

I submit to the Senator from Maryland whether under the circumstances detailed, and especially upon the information contained in this late communication from the Secretary of the Navy, who has familiarized himself personally with the subject, it will not be well to accord my request.

Mr. GORMAN. The Committee on Appropriations were of course very anxious to reduce the amount of the appropriations to the lowest possible limit consistent with the proper conduct of the business affairs of the Navy Department. It is true that the statement which the Senator from California has just had read was not brought to our attention until this morning, and I am satisfied that the appropriation of $50,000 is necessary for that purpose.

Mr. WHITE. I ask the Senator from Maryland whether it ought not to be made $75,000, in view of the estimate of the Department and the fact stated, that it is necessary to have a stronger and heavier tug—a seagoing tug—at that particular island for the reasons detailed in the letter of the Secretary?

Mr. GORMAN. I think the Senator from California had better let the matter remain as it came from the other House. There is no estimate for it. There is nothing but the letter of the Secretary. I suggest that the Senator had better let the provision remain for the present as it came from the other House. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland withdraws the amendment of the committee striking out the clause. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 22, line 15, after the word "Academy," to strike out "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For buildings and grounds, Naval Academy: Improvement of the water front of the Academy, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 16, to insert:

For repairs to the gas-plant, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 17, to insert:

To pave Hanover street from Maryland avenue to Wagner street, Wagner street from Hanover street to King George street, and King George street from College avenue to College or Graveyard Creek, in the city of Annapolis, Md., $13,000; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to convey to the city of Annapolis, Md., the title to the bed of King George street from College avenue to College or Graveyard Creek.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, line 5, after the word "extended," to strike out "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For grounds and roads: For continuing grading, extending roads and paths, clearing and improving grounds of new Naval Observatory, and filling ravine contiguous to boiler house to Massachusetts avenue extended, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for Naval Observatory, on page 23, line 20, after the word "dollars," to strike out "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

Instruments and accessories: Miscellaneous instruments and accessories, namely: One comet seeker, $400; one standard mercurial barometer, $400; one magnetic theodolite, $800; one dip circle, $250; one earth inductor inclinometer, $300; one galvanometer, $80; one telescope and scale, $50; one quadrant galvanometer, $62; one compensator, $14; glass scales, $100; beam suspensions, $100; one photographic register, $150; one altazimuth instrument, mounted and protected from weather, $6,500; eyepieces and shades, $250; one 12-inch object-glass, $2,000. For freight elevator, $500; in all, $23,956.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 3, before the word "museum," to strike out "and department of instruction;" so as to make the clause read:

Medical Department: For surgeons' necessaries for vessels in commission, navy-yard, naval stations, Marine Corps, and Coast Survey, and for the civil establishment at the several naval hospitals, navy-yards, naval laboratory, museum of hygiene, and Naval Academy, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 8, after the word "dollars," to strike out—

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to use such portion of the naval hospital fund accruing from the sale of naval hospital grounds to the city of Brooklyn, and placed to the credit of the naval hospital fund, in pursuance of the provisions of the act approved July 2, 1890, as may be required to thoroughly repair the United States Naval Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y., and to build, equip, and maintain additional sick quarters of modern construction at that place for the proper care and treatment of sick and wounded officers and men, and to make such further improvements in and about said naval hospital and the grounds thereof as may be commensurate with the requirements of the service: Provided, That the amount so expended shall not exceed the sum placed to the credit of the naval hospital fund as the net proceeds of the sale of naval hospital lands under the provisions of the act approved July 2, 1890.

So as to make the clause read:

Naval hospital fund: For maintenance of the naval hospitals at the various navy-yards and stations and for care and maintenance of patients in other hospitals at home and abroad, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. After the word "dollars," in line 8, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 8, page 21, insert:

For complete renovation of present hospital building at Brooklyn, N. Y., with a view of placing it in a perfect sanitary condition, namely, for erection of retaining and boundary wall, $15,000; for kitchen, mess hall, and smoking room, removed from basement and located apart, conveniently for inmates and attendants of main hospital building and proposed adjacent wards, $3,500; for construction of and operating ward with all modern antiseptic appliances, $1,500; for heating and fire apparatus, enlarged and improved; plumbing renewed, $5,000; for elevator for transporting sick and wounded introduced, $3,000; for apartment fitted in main building for chapel, reading room, and sailors' library, $1,000; in all, $44,000; which sum shall be paid from that portion of the naval hospital fund accruing from the sale of naval hospital grounds to the city of Brooklyn and placed to the credit of the naval hospital fund, in pursuance of the act approved July 2, 1890.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 25, line 18, after the word "dispensary," to strike out "Washington's" and insert "Washington;" and in line 19, after the word "laboratory," to strike out "and department of instruction;" so as to make the clause read:

Contingent, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery: For freight, expressage on medical stores, tolls, ferriages, transportation of sick to hospital, transportation of insane patients; care, transportation, and burial of the dead; advertising; telegraphing; rent of telephones; purchase of books and stationery; binding of medical records, unbound books, and pamphlets; postage and purchase of stamps for foreign service; expenses attending the medical board of examiners; rent of rooms for naval dispensary; hygienic and sanitary investigation and illustration; sanitary and hygienic instruction; purchase and repairs of wagons and harness; purchase of and feed for horses and cows; trees, plants, garden tools, and seeds; furniture and incidental articles for the museum of hygiene, naval dispensary, Washington; naval laboratory, sick quarters at Naval Academy and marine barracks, surgeons' offices and dispensaries at navy-yards and naval stations; washing for medical department at museum of hygiene, naval dispensary, Washington; naval laboratory, sick quarters at Naval Academy and marine barracks, dispensaries at navy-yards and naval stations and ships and rendezvous; for necessary expenses incident to removal of museum of hygiene to old observatory building and grounds, and for such minor repairs on said building and grounds as may be required to properly receive and preserve the exhibits, and all other necessary contingent expenses, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 5, after the word "hospitals," to strike out "and department of instruction," so as to make the clause read:

Repairs, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery: For necessary repairs of naval laboratory, naval hospitals and appendages, including roads, wharves, outhouses, sidewalks, fences, gardens, farms, and cemeteries, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 9, to insert:

That an officer of the pay corps of the Navy may be temporarily detailed as assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts in the Navy Department, and that such officer shall, in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Chief of the Bureau, unless otherwise directed by the President, as provided by section 179 of the Revised Statutes, perform the duties of such chief until his successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 24, to insert:

For the repair of the ship Constitution, now lying at the Portsmouth navy-yard, in the State of New Hampshire, in order that it may be used as a training ship for the naval militia, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, to strike out lines 17, 18, and 19, in the following words:

To commence the construction of new machinery, engines, and boilers of United States steamship Hartford, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 17, before the word "dollars," to strike out "forty-three" and insert "seven;" so as to make the total of appropriations for pay of professors and others at Naval Academy $52,407.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 8, after the word "President," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That every Member or Delegate of Congress whose district or Territory is now unrepresented at the Naval Academy by a cadet who is not an actual resident of the district shall be permitted on or before the 1st day of August, 1894, to recommend a candidate for appointment as a cadet at the Naval Academy, and the Secretary of the Navy shall nominate such candidate for appointment to the Academy, subject to qualifications now prescribed by law. Such cadets when appointed to be in addition to the number of cadets now allowed: Provided, That there shall be but one appointed from the State of South Dakota at large, and the sum of $5,500, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated, for the additional number of cadets herein authorized.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from Maryland will withdraw the amendment. After the word "exists," in line 5, page 38, of the bill, I move to insert:

Who shall have been for at least two years immediately preceding the date of his appointment an actual and bona fide resident of such district in which the vacancy may exist.

Also after the word "President," in line 8, I move to insert:

But must be distributed among the different States of the Union in as nearly equal a manner as is practicable.

I desire to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that the Congressional district in which I reside in the State of Nebraska has an appointee in the Naval Academy who never even saw the State of Nebraska, who knows nothing about it any more than he would know if he had been born in Russia. He was appointed from this District, who has probably never been west of the District, and yet that boy is put in the Naval Academy charged to the Third district of Nebraska, while the boys there, many of whom are amply competent and desirous of filling these positions, are excluded from them.

I hope the Senator from Maryland will consent to the amendment of the proposed law I have suggested, to the end that no abuse may be indulged in in the appointment of cadets to the Military and Naval Academies of the nation. It is perfectly proper that the youth of my State should have an equitable portion of the appointments to the Naval Academy and the Military Academy. Because we reside 1,500 miles from the seaboard furnishes no reason why the President or the Secretary of the Navy or any other person in power should exclude our boys from the privileges and responsibilities of these appointments. I have been informed by those who have had more Congressional experience than I that it has been a custom to abuse these appointments, and that boys from the District of Columbia have been accredited to different districts and States in the Union, which neither they nor their parents ever visited or ever saw. I hope the Senator from Maryland will consent to the amendments I propose.

Mr. GORMAN. I am in entire sympathy with the object the Senator from Nebraska has in view in requiring these appointments to be made from the actual residents of a Congressional district. The provision as the Committee on Appropriations have left it I think amply provides for that. If the Senator desires the further qualification of residence for at least two years in the district I have no objection to that amendment, but in recommending that the proviso shall be stricken out I think the Senator upon reflection will agree the committee were quite right. The law now provides that every member of Congress shall nominate once in four years a candidate for the Naval Academy or West point.

In the event that the members fail to nominate, or fail to nominate a boy who can pass the examination, and after such rejection still neglect to make another appointment, the President and the Secretary of the Navy, or Secretary of War, have a a right to supply the vacancy. The custom has grown up of taking whoever they thought proper, whether the boy be a resident of the District of Columbia or one of the Dakotas or Nebraska.

This provision, as it is proposed to leave it, will prevent that hereafter. The proviso we propose to strike out makes provision that where a lapse has occurred in the past a member of Congress shall now have a right to nominate another person and thus increase in an appropriation act the number of boys in the Academy.

Mr. GEORGE. Why not increase the number?

Mr. GORMAN. There is no necessity for it. It is difficult now to provide for the boys who have already passed. We make in this very bill provision for them. We are now trying to open another door that they may enter the engineer class, a class from which they have not graduated, so that they may have employment hereafter.

We can not correct what is past; we can not go back to give a member of Congress who has failed to do his duty to his constituents an opportunity to make another nomination, and thus increase the force out of proportion, but we do provide that hereafter when a lapse shall occur the appointment shall be made actually from the district to which the appointment belongs.

Mr. ALLEN. I have been informed that in at least one instance a member of Congress who had the appointing power under an act similar to this, was never actually notified by the Navy Department of the desire that the appointment should be made. It occurs to me that an abuse has grown up in this respect. I do not say that the failure to notify was designed or anything of that kind; it was merely an oversight, or it may have been a failure on the part of the mails to reach the member. If the boys of the different States of the Union have been deprived of their equal privileges of appointment to the Naval Academy, and the vacancies have been filled indiscriminately by the President and the Secretary of the Navy from boys around this District, or the sons of naval officers, why not right that wrong by adopting the amendment I have proposed. The appropriation is small.

With reference to the other amendment, I understand the Senator makes no objection to it. I will read the amendment again. After the word "exists," in line 5, I move to insert:

Who shall have been for at least two years immediately preceding the date of his appointment an actual and bona fide resident of such district in which the vacancy may exist.

Then, after the word "President," in line 8, I move to insert the words:

But must be distributed among the different States of the Union in nearly as equal a manner as is practicable.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator to let the vote be first taken on the committee amendment, and his amendments can be offered afterwards. The last amendment the Senator suggests interferes with the existing system. The law now provides that every member of Congress shall nominate one in four years for each Academy, and therefore the distribution is as perfect as it can be made. Then ten shall be appointed by the President at large, who, under the unwritten law always observed, has appointed descendants of persons who had distinguished themselves in the Army or Navy. I do not think the second amendment the Senator suggests would operate at all well. We can not make a more fair distribution than to provide that the appointment shall be made from each Congressional district.

I trust the Senator will allow us to vote on the committee amendment first and then he can offer his amendment as to bona fide residence. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection to the order in which the amendments are offered. I want, however, to see the amendment I offer become a part of the law of this country. I do not want to be required to take the committee amendment first and then have the committee tell me that my amendments are not germane to the bill and ought to be voted down.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator will have no difficulty about offering his amendments. I am not prepared to exclude his amendments, but under the ruling of the Chair the committee amendment must be first voted on.

Mr. ALLEN. I understood the Senator from Maryland to say that he has no objection to my first amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. None in the world, and I will accept it when the time comes.

Mr. ALLEN. My second amendment, which requires that the general appointments made by the President shall be distributed as nearly equitable as possible among the different States, it strikes me is preëminently proper. I do not know what right the President of the United States should have to select ten or twelve young men or boys annually at his mere discretion and place them in the naval service of the United States. It strikes me that, if the States have any rights here, those appointments ought to go to the States as well as those made by members of Congress. The tendency of that practice is simply to build up a naval aristrocracy. It is simply to give a boy an advantage by an appointment in the Naval Academy of the Government because his father may have been a distinguished man, when the boy himself may prove utterly unfit for the appointment he has received.

I have no sympathy with that kind of flunkeyism and aristocracy which recognizes a child simply because the father may have been a great man. Let the boy take his chance in the race of life and depend upon his own merits, Let the appointments which have been accumulating for years through the agency of the President and the Secretary of the Navy go out among the different States of the Union, and let boys be selected who are meritorious and who show mental and physical capacity to perform the duties of the office to which they will be promoted. It is a small thing it is true, but it is one of the small things which added to many other things is building up an aristocracy in the Navy, an aristocracy in the Army, and an aristocracy in all of our great Departments, and thus takes away from the people a part and parcel of their rights.

Now, I hope the Senator from Maryland will permit the second amendment also to be made to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee, to strike out the proviso on page 38.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. The first amendment was accepted, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska was accepted by the committee.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the amendment be read as it stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, line 5, after the word "exist," it is proposed to insert:

Who shall have been for at least two years immediately preceding the date of his appointment an actual and bona fide resident of the district in which the vacancy exists.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the word "and" be inserted at the end of the amendment, so as to read "in which the vacancy exists and of the legal qualifications," etc.

Mr. ALLEN. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "President," in line 8, on page 38, it is proposed to insert—but must be distributed among the States of the Union as nearly equally as practicable.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senate will not adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska. The provision of law from the very beginning of the Government and from the foundation of those two great schools has been that each Representative in Congress should have the power to nominate once in four years a boy as a candidate to each of these two schools, the Naval Academy and the Military Academy. It was also provided, so that exact justice might be done, that the President should have ten appointments at large, and the statute provides that he may select them from any place in the United States. The real object, however, was to give the President an opportunity to select boys, the sons of officers of the Navy and the Army, who had no residence in any of the States, to go into these two great academies.

The Senator from Nebraska is entirely wrong when he intimates that this provision was intended to favor a particular class. It was just the reverse. It was intended to give an opportunity for the appointment of such boys as had no means of reaching a member of Congress by reason of having no legal residence in a State, so as to give them the same opportunity with boys nominated by members of Congress. There can not be, and there never has been heretofore, any charge of favoritism in the examinations. The candidates go before a board and undergo a most rigid examination. Comparatively few boys pass that examination. If they are mentally and physically qualified, they have by this means an opportunity to serve their country as their forefathers have done.

Mr. President, things have certainly not come to such a pass that any considerable number of intelligent people in the United States would deliberately exclude boys from these academies or prevent them from having an opportunity to be nominated for examination simply because the services of their fathers have prevented them from acquiring political influence, for that is what it amounts to.

Instead of the law being such as the Senator from Nebraska intimates, it is a broad and wise provision, placed in the hands of the President of the United States, that that class of meritorious boys may enter the military or naval service, and I think history will bear me out, as is suggested by my friend from Texas on my left [Mr. MILLS], that the unwritten law in this case has been more closely observed than the written law, for I do not believe there has ever been a President who has made an exception to what was the general understanding and determination of Congress when that act was passed, that these appointments should be given to just such young men as I have described. I think it is a wise provision of law, and therefore I can not accept the amendment offered by the Senator, and I trust the Senate will vote it down.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I second heartily the remarks of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], though I can make an exception to one of his statements, that there never was a case in which the young man appointed to West Point or Annapolis was not the son of some officer of the Army or of the Navy.

Mr. GORMAN. Or a descendant.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is one exception within my knowledge to the remark of the Senator from Maryland that the young men appointed under this general provision are all sons or descendants of officers of the Army or of the Navy. They are as a rule. I agree with the Senator in thinking that no provision of law has been more wisely observed, and I think all of the Presidents, so far as I have knowledge, in the last twenty or thirty years have done well in that regard.

I know they have had an active competition in the large number of young men whose fathers, or whose grandfathers, or perhaps their great grandfathers, had served in the Navy or in the Army. In many cases these young men were naturally extremely anxious to get into the service, and the very honorable record of the service of their ancestors is a sufficient guaranty that they will do well. They take great pride in it for the reason that members of their families have been for generations in the service.

The Senator thinks there is a sort of aristocracy here. On the other hand, the fathers and grandfathers of these young men are, as a rule, poor men; and remember also, as a rule, they have practically no political experience, and no President gains anything for his party by making these appointments. I am happy to say I have known of many cases in which party has had nothing to do with such appointments.

In the case of the exception to which I referred, some six or eight years ago I had the pleasure of bringing to the notice of the President a bright young fellow who had been a captain of the High School Cadet Corps in this city, and the President took quite a fancy to him and appointed him. Who was his father? A Republican clerk in one of the Departments. He had been a Connecticut private soldier. The youth had done so well in his school and pleased the President so well in his personal appearance and his bearing, that the President appointed him; but I am sorry to say that, on account of some unknown or unforeseen defect of hearing, he was barred out.

I give that as an example of the fairness of President Cleveland, and I know of many other Presidents who have acted in a similar way. I should be very sorry to see the law changed in this respect.

Mr. MILLS. I can account for the fact that there may be an occasional exception.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is only a single exception. I do not know of another.

Mr. MILLS. That is perhaps the only exception. I can see how the President might be unable to find a suitable person among the sons of officers of the Army and the Navy and be driven to make appointments outside.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland whether the pending amendment relates to persons appointed by Members and Delegates in the House of Representatives or whether it relates to Presidential appointments?

Mr. GORMAN. To Presidential appointments.

Mr. PASCO. If the amendment relates simply to Presidential appointments then I agree entirely with the views of the Senator from Maryland; but I think when vacancies occur, after appointments have been made by Representatives and Delegates in Congress, the fresh appointees should come from the State and the district.

Mr. GORMAN. We have so provided in this bill, and made the law more specific on that point than it has been heretofore.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. President, the statement made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], in answer to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], is a very strong statement of the case, if I could agree with its facts; but it does appear to me that the facts are not as stated by the Senator from Maryland.

The Senator says that this law originated in the fact that there were certain persons, sons of officers of the Army and of the Navy, who would not probably be able to secure appointments either to West Point or to Annapolis because they were not residents of a particular State, and therefore excluded.

But, as I understand, these gentlemen are not cosmopolites; but every officer of the Government, whether he belong to the civil list or the Army or the Navy must have a residence in some State of the Union. I would also further state that I think each one has a legal residence in some State or other, where he has a right to vote, because by reason of the fact that he is in the service of the Government he is not required to remain a certain specific time in any State of the Union in order to entitle him to vote.

If that be true, sir—and I think it is—then these applicants for appointment by the President have two chances. If the President chooses to confine himself to that class in making his appointments, they have the same right as any other persons to go before a member of Congress and fight for the appointment. If they fail there, then they have a right to go before the President. If the law referred to be intended to give these appointments to that class of people, then everybody else is excluded from appointment by the President, and these young men, sons of officers of the Army and Navy, have two chances to the civilian's one.

If I am right in these facts, then I think the law ought to be corrected so as to give all, whether they be sons of officers of the Army or of the Navy, or civilians, the same opportunity and put them upon the same footing, so that all may have an equal chance.

I do not hold because a young man is the son of a distinguished officer of the Army or of the Navy that for that reason he is entitled to any preference over a young man equally well qualified in civil life.

Mr. HAWLEY. Of course, the son of an officer has no right and no especial claim, but as a matter of fact a great many of the older officers of the Army and Navy have no legal residence in any Congressional district. It is hardly possible that they should all be able to get one. The head of the family in the service is oftentimes three years at sea, and the family lives in one place and then in another.

Sometimes he has shore duty, and the family goes and lives with him while he has that duty on shore; but the actual fact is, as the officers will tell you, that a great many of them have never stayed long enough, or taken the pains in any particular place to acquire the right to vote there. Even if they had been for awhile there, what chance has an officer of the Navy who may be in China waters to get an appointment from the Congressman who has scores of political friends around him begging for such appointments for their boys.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTON. Suppose an admiral of the Navy had a home in Connecticut, and his family remained there, just as the Senator's family remains there and mine in Virginia, I ask the Senator if that officer of the Navy could not go home and vote at the polls in the State of Connecticut?

Furthermore, I desire to say that almost all the members of Congress now appoint to Annapolis and West Point upon competitive examinations. When that is the case, the son of the officer of the Army or of the Navy has the same right to compete as any civilian, and I think the officer would have the right under such circumstances to vote in Connecticut, as I am sure he would have in Virginia.

Mr. HAWLEY. The right to vote depends, as the Senator well knows, upon a number of qualifications prescribed by the State. It is not always easy for the officer of the Army or of the Navy to comply with these conditions and save his vote. The actual fact is, as I have stated, that many of them have no place where they can vote.

Mr. HUNTON. If an Army or a Navy officer has a residence in a State he has the right to vote there.

Mr. HAWLEY. I understand that. He may have his wife in Connecticut for a number of years, but when the time comes to register and vote he may be in Havre, or up in the Mediterranean, or in the China seas, and he does not get around, so that he can not vote very often.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I think there is no force whatever in the position of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. In the first place, I think it is absolutely impossible to conceive of a case where a man is a citizen of the United States and has no residence. If any man is a citizen of the United States, he has a legal residence somewhere, in some State, some Territory, some district of this Union. If he is not a citizen of some State and has no residence, or domicile, at least, somewhere in the United States, then he is not a citizen of the United States, and he is entitled to no consideration at the hands of this Govment, and ought not to be in its service.

Whenever you use the words "citizen of the United States," you imply that the individual has a domicile, legal or actual, in some State or Territory of the Union or in the District of Columbia. It may be that he may have been absent from it for years, possibly for nearly all his life—from boyhood until he is an old man—and yet, during all that time, there is some spot, there is some State or Territory or place in the United States of which he is a citizen, and where, if otherwise qualified, he is a legal voter. If such a man voluntarily goes into the naval or military service of this Government in the pursuit of honor, perhaps, or from natural adaptation to that branch of the service, he gives his child an enlarged opportunity for education. If he is in the naval service the child goes with his parents around the world into different countries, and into the various places to which the vessel may sail.

What reason is there why that child should have any superior advantages by law over my child or yours? To give him such advantages cuts off the opportunity of some other boy in some State or some Territory to compete for that position. Why should one be by the enactment of law put in the naval service of this Government and the other made a hewer of wood and a drawer of water?

The same argument applied by the distinguished Senator from Maryland and the distinguished Senator from Connecticut would contend that every military appointment to the Academy at West Point should be made from the sons of some distinguished officer of the Army; and yet, Mr. President, the history of this country has demonstrated that the greatest failures in civil and military life have been the sons of great men. With one or two exceptions, can any Senator stand at his desk in this Chamber and point to the successful son of a distinguished man? Under such a system every officer in our Army twenty-five years from to-day would be the son of some man who had been an officer in the Army preceding him.

The same argument can be applied to the civil list with equal propriety and equal logic. Suppose we had a law to-day that the President or some Cabinet officer might appoint to the civil list of this country boys or girls because they were the sons and daughters of distinguished men. They might lack every qualification of success; they might be on the debatable line between idiocy and sanity, and yet the sole qualification that the law would require them to possess would be that they should be the sons or daughters of distinguished men in the civil department of the Government. How many years would it be until this Government in its civil department, in its naval department, in its military department, and in all its ramifications would be an aristocracy, if not an absolute oligarchy?

No such power should be conferred upon the President of the United States. His office does not call for a concession of this kind. There is no reason existing why these ten offices should not be distributed as nearly equally or equitably as possible between the different States of this Union, so that every honest boy, wherever he may be in the Union, whether he be the son of a commodore or a general, or the son of a hod-carrier or a farmer, may have an equal opportunity by merit to win that position. That is democracy; that is republicanism; that is in the line of a government by the people, and of the people, and for the people, recognizing alone the merit that the individual possesses and not to any inherited privilege.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I would not prolong this discussion if the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] had not implied that I had made a remark from which the inference might be drawn that I was in favor of having the cadets at Annapolis and West Point appointed from the families of distinguished naval and military officers. I never said anything of the kind. I never said anything about having any of these young men taken from military or naval families. The great body of the naval and military cadets are selected by 356 members of the House of Representatives, and there is no better guarantee for their being fairly distributed throughout the Union, and no better guarantee for their being fairly representative, to use the phrase so much used nowadays, of the people at large.

I only advocate giving the President an equitable discretion in the appointment of about ten young men in the Army. How in the world are ten cadets to be distributed proportionately over the Union? The appointments, taking deaths and resignations into account, will amount to about three a year, to be distributed amongst forty-four States.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I do not neglect the opportunity of indorsing so far as I can the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] with so much vehemence and eloquence. As a Democrat I would not deny the equal opportunity for all of advancement in life, for entry into the public service to any man on account of his condition, no matter how humble or how poor that man may be in this world's goods. I do not believe that the son of a commodore or of a general or of a distinguished Senator like the Senator from Nebraska——

Mr. ALLEN. Or the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. Should have any advantage over the son of the hod-carrier, to whom the Senator from Nebraska alluded as one of presumed humble condition in life. I would not, by any vote of mine or by any word of mine, give the least advantage to one over the other.

But, Mr. President, in our consideration and in our care and anxiety to preserve that equality for certain classes in the community, we are sometimes in danger of producing an inequality quite as vicious, quite as undemocratic, and quite as inimical to those conditions of equality which we have sought to preserve from the commencement of our Government until the present time.

Why should the son of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska be deprived of the advantage that his precocity and his ability and his capacity is to give him as an aspiring young man in this great Republic? Why should he, if he happens to be the son of this distinguished man in the service of the United States in such fashion as to deprive him of that residence which is necessary to the great mass of appointments, not have these few and limited opportunities to go abreast with the sons of those who have been fortunate enough to live in the States long enough to acquire this advantage of competing for these appointments at West Point and Annapolis?

Surely, it seems to me that giving the President the appointment of ten out of some three hundred cadets in order to meet this case, and thus remove measurably this inequality which would otherwise exist, ought to commend itself to the democracy and to the sense of fairness of the Senator from Nebraska, as it certainly does commend itself to me.

The Senator must recollect that this supposititious case of his of the feeble-minded son of a distinguished commodore or a distinguished general being placed in the service where only a deserving lad should be placed, is purely imaginary. Every young man, if appointed by a Representative or by the President is subjected to precisely the same examination before entrance into either of the academies; he must stand the same physical test, he must measure up to the same intellectual standard.

There is an absolute equality as to requirements. When they have once entered, I have never heard any charge that there was any favoritism as to the graduation of these lads in the service of their country. On the contrary, I have always believed, as I have heard it asserted, that there were no more democratic institutions in this country, certainly no more democratic educational institutions, than these academies for the naval and military service. There is absolute equality there to-day as to opportunities, as to condition in life, as to instruction, and as to the mode of living between the son of a millionaire or the son of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska and that of the humblest boy who has entered the Academy by the favor of the Representative of his district; and I have never heard any allegation to the contrary.

This is a practical question. I do not think the case quite calls for the vehemence and eloquence of the Senator from Nebraska. If there is a wrong here, I would go with him to right it, and I would go with him to right it on the lines he has marked out for producing equality and absolute equality, and especially equality to those who should be less fortunate in the race of life than their fellows, but it does not seem to me that the occasion exists.

It seems to me that there were wise men and democratic men and men in favor of the rights of the people who made this law before we came here. There were great men before Agamemnon; there were wise legislators before the Senator and I entered this body, and they seem to have provided with a practical good sense and a practical statesmanship for the distribution of these cadets over the Union by allowing the Representative of each district to nominate them.

I quite agree with the Senator in making more stringent the provision that the cadet should be domiciled and have a bona fide residence in the district from which he is appointed.

In addition to that, it seemed necessary to clothe the President—I do not suppose the President desires the power at all, for it is only a trouble and annoyance to him—with this power to appoint these few cadets in order to do away with what seemed to be a condition of things that would produce inequalities and unfairness towards a certain class of our citizens.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I desire to say, in reply to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], that my amendment, as I drew it, is only a provision that affords an equal opportunity to all the people of this country. I do not want to give any special advantage to the son of any particular man or class of men. I want for the humblest citizen in this land who has a bright and intelligent boy, one who is mentally and physically competent to enter the naval service of this Government, as complete an opportunity to do so as the son of any commodore or commander of a vessel or any other man.

The Senator from Delaware says that he agrees with me upon that. I did not think so a moment ago when he said that the President ought to have the power to reward a certain class of men in the naval service.

Mr. GRAY. I did not say that.

Mr. ALLEN. Why not make the son of a commodore—and I speak simply by way of illustration—go into the district where his father has a legal residence, and there come in competition with the boys who live in that Congressional district? Has the Senator from Delaware any objection to that?

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I should have no objection to it. There is nothing in this matter, so far as I view it, except in the matter of practical arrangement, so as to do the least possible injustice and make the greatest possible equality in distributing these appointments.

There would be a very great hardship, it seems to me, if my friend from Nebraska happened to be an officer in the Army out upon the plains, with a little family around him, to compel him to send his son a thousand miles away in order to acquire a domicile somewhere else, and incur expense and trouble in order to get an appointment that he is deprived of getting by reason of his service and the life he is obliged to lead.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Delaware is mistaken. His argument is based upon a false assumption of the law. I think the Senator from Delaware is a good enough lawyer to know that it is impossible for a man to be a citizen of the United States and not possess a legal domicile somewhere. I ask the Senator as to that.

Mr. GRAY. I was speaking as a practical question and not as a legal question about domicile, which the Senator knows is an exceedingly abstruse matter sometimes. But I instanced to him what might very well take place, that an officer of the Navy whose legal domicile was in my State, or the State of New Jersey or the State of New York or on the seaboard, whose whole life during the rearing of his children being out on the plains, even west of the Senator's own State, and it seemed to me depriving him of that equality of opportunities, for which we are both contending, to require him to send his son back to reside for two years at this domicile, at an expense he could illy afford, and deprive him of his society and of the opportunity to train the boy as he wished to do, in order that he might enter the military service.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator does not deny the fact, then, that at some place in the United States, within its territorial jurisdiction, every officer of the Navy and of the Army, although he may be now or may have been for twenty-five years in the heart of Africa, has a legal domicile, and that the domicile of his wife and children follow his domicile. There can be no question about that rule. It is the rule of this country; it is the rule of every civilized country upon the face of the globe to-day, and has been for five hundred years.

Suppose the Senator from Delaware with his family was in the State of California or the State of Washington, and a competitive examination was to be held in the State of Delaware, in which his son desired to enter for appointment to the Naval Academy or to the Military Academy, would the Senator think it was proper, under those circumstances, to have a law which would permit the President to appoint his son, without undergoing that competitive examination with the boys who live in the State of Delaware, which would take him in consequence of his being in California and still having a domicile in the State of Delaware, and place him in the Military Academy or the Naval Academy, and by that means defeat the other good boys of Delaware from an opportunity to compete for that position?

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator wants an answer now, I do not think his supposititious case is a good one. That would not deprive any boy in Delaware of that opportunity who now would be entitled to it, each district having one cadet; and this is entirely a matter of additional appointment given to the President to meet the case which I have tried to describe.

Mr. ALLEN. No, Mr. President, if the Senator from Delaware were in California he would be there by his own volition and would have his family there by his own volition, and that would furnish no reason why his boy should not return to Delaware and undergo a competitive examination before he was selected for a place in the Naval or Military Academy—none whatever. It would be due to the boys in Delaware that they should have an opportunity to enter into competitive examination with him and show, if they could, that they were brighter and fitter for this appointment than his son.

Mr. GRAY. If I may interrupt the Senator for just one moment, I think there is one basis of the Senator's argument which would fail him, for if he will refer to the law as it exists now and as it is proposed it shall exist, he will see that there is no provision requiring a competitive examination.

Mr. ALLEN. I understand that quite well; but in view of the fact that competitive examinations have been instituted by members of Congress throughout the different States and recommended by the War Department, why should not the son of the Senator or the son of a naval or military officer undergo that examination the same as your son, Mr. President, or mine?

Why should the President of the United States have the appointment of ten persons to the Naval Academy, to be appointed from those whom he may himself select, entirely regardless of their distribution over the country? There is nothing about the person of the President of the United States, nothing about the office he holds which should give him this wonderful power. These appointments belong to the people of this country and they should be distributed as equitably and as justly as possible among the different States of the Union.

It is no argument for me, at least, for Senators to stand up and say that here is a custom which has grown up and has existed for forty or fifty or more years. If it is vicious to-day—and I believe it to be so—it was vicious when it was instituted years ago, and it is part and parcel of our duty, if it is wrong and bottomed upon wrong principles, to change it by appropriate legislation.

Mr. President, the amendment I have proposed will not pass. I am not foolish enough to suppose that it will pass. It will not pass not because it ought not to become a law, not because the President should be clothed with power at his caprice to appoint indiscriminately persons to the Naval and Military Academies, not because that can be justified by any process of reasoning, but because the custom has existed so long and the inroads of aristocracy have been so great in the political institutions of this country that enough Senators can not be mustered here to change this law.

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska what is the particular amendment which he offers? I was not in the Chamber at the time it was read.

Mr. ALLEN. On page 38, line 8, after the word "President," I have moved to insert this language: "but must be distributed among the States of the Union as nearly equally as practicable."

Mr. President, I offered this amendment and have made my remarks for the purpose, so far as I am concerned, of setting the seal of condemnation upon this method of transacting the public business. I want every one of these ten officers who are under the control of the President and the others who are under the control of members of the House of Representatives to be distributed over this country as equally and as equitably as possible.

The President has no special interest in the Navy or the Army. True, the Army and the Navy are subject to his control as Commander-in-Chief; but the President has no right in equity or in justice to say who shall enter the military service of this country and who shall not. He has no right to take the son of one man or the sons of one class of men and put them in the Army, and thus build up a military aristocracy, any more than he has the right to take the sons of naval officers and put them in Annapolis, and by that means build up a naval aristocracy. Neither one would be any more justifiable than for us to pass a law or recognize a custom by which the civil-service list should be built up primarily from the sons and daughters of those who have served the Government in its civil branch.

Mr. President, turn to the books and you will find that this District has nearly 4,000 appointments in the civil service of this country. There are but 250,000 people in the District of Columbia, and yet they have three, four, or five times more appointments than the State of New York or the State of Pennsylvania; and there are more appointments in the naval service to-day from the District of Columbia than from any single State in the Union. Where there has been a lapse in appointments in the different States persons have been taken from this District who have never been beyond the State of Maryland or the State of Virginia, and never as far West as the Ohio River, and accredited to States like Kansas, and Nebraska, and other far States in the West.

I hope in the interest of justice that the amendment I have offered will prevail.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, if any such evil has grown up in the country as that described by the Senator from Nebraska, it would not be eradicated or changed or affected a single particle by the amendment which the Senator has proposed.

The power of the President as it now exists is unlimited; it is not confined to any class of citizens; it is not confined to any particular class of young men from which to make the selections. The President can make them from any State, or any Territory, or any Congressional district in the entire United States. He can make them from any class of people whatever. There is no necessity that the appointees should be the sons of Presidents, the sons of Senators, the sons of Representatives in Congress, or the sons of distinguished officers of the Army or the Navy.

The amendment which the Senator offers only makes a change with reference to the geographical limitations. It provides that the appointees must be taken as nearly equally as possible from the different parts of the Union. But that would not change the condition of things which the Senator suggests. It would still be in the power of the President to select the sons of distinguished men or to select young men without reference to the positions that their fathers held. So I do not see that the Senator's remarks have any pertinence whatever to the amendment he has proposed.

It seems to me that this power ought to be in the hands of the President without any limitation, as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] has suggested, to cover any inequalities which may exist in dividing these appointments out among the different districts in the United States. It seems to me that it is a wise provision that this power should vest somewhere, and I see no place where it can more safely or more properly vest than in the President of the United States. Surely he can be trusted now, as he has been since the foundation of the Government, to make these selections wisely and judiciously from the different ranks of the people, if we admit that there are any different ranks among our people, as was indicated by the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska.

The provision of the bill leaves the matter where it has always been. The power has been exercised wisely and judiciously hitherto, and I can see no reason whatever for the amendment which the Senator from Nebraska proposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 41, line 15, after the word "privates," to strike out "and for the expenses of clerks of the United States Marine Corps traveling under orders;" and in line 18, after the word "cents," to strike out—

Provided, That the pay of the drum major shall be the same as that now established, or that may be hereafter established, for first sergeants in the Marine Corps of the same length of service.

So as to make the clause read:

Pay of noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates: For one sergeant-major, one quartermaster-sergeant, one leader of the band, one drum-major, fifty first sergeants, one hundred and forty sergeants, one hundred and eighty corporals, thirty musicians, ninety-six drummers and fifers, and one thousand six hundred privates, $384,294.79.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 10, after the words "District of Columbia," to strike out "or San Francisco, Cal.;" so as to make the clause read:

In the office of the assistant quartermaster, Washington, D. C.: One clerk, at $1,400; in all, for pay of civil force, $17,636.23, and the money herein specifically appropriated for pay of the Marine Corps shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with existing law as pay of the Marine Corps, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 24, after the word "cents," to strike out "and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to transfer balances as may be necessary in the existing accounts of the Paymaster-General of the Navy and the Quartermaster of the Marine Corps;" so as to make the clause read:

Provisions, Marine Corps: For 1,100 noncommissioned officers, musicians, and privates, and for commutation for rations to 11 enlisted men detailed as clerks and messengers, also for payment of board and lodging of recruiting parties, said payment for board not to exceed $2,500, $74,661.55; and no law shall be construed to entitle enlisted marines on shore duty to any rations or commutation therefor other than such as now are or may hereafter be allowed to enlisted men in the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 8, after the word "men," to strike out "and those that may be retired;" so as to make the clause read:

For amount required to be transferred to credit "Pay Marine Corps," on account of rations to retired men, $82.13 each per annum, $5,338.45.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 13, before the word "horses," to strike out "officer's" and insert "officers';" so as to make the clause read:

Forage, Marine Corps: For forage in kind for five horses of the Quartermaster's Department, and the authorized number of officers' horses, $2,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 17, after the word "dollars," to strike out "so much of said sum as may be necessary to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 23, after the word "dollars," to strike out "so much of said sum as may be necessary to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 10, after the word "purposes," to insert:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to remit the time penalties on the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 12, to insert:

To pay the Bath Iron Works for speed premiums on new United States gunboats Machias and Castine, $45,000 each, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 15, to insert:

To pay Samuel L. Moore & Sons Company for speed premium on the new steel practice vessel Bancroft, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. PERKINS. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the bill. I will preface its presentation by saying that I have submitted it to the committee, who have carefully considered it, and I have reason to hope that they will accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from California will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, after line 3, insert:

For the repair of the hull of the United States ship Hartford, to be used as a training ship when repaired, $150,000.

Mr. WHITE. The committee will observe and the Senate will notice that a committee amendment has already been adopted striking out a provision, found in lines 3 and 4, on page 8, with relation to a modern battery for the Hartford. The amendment proposed by my colleague answers, I think, the objection of the committee, which was that there had been no appropriation for the hull. As stated by the Senator from Maryland, there is a general desire to preserve the historic vessel, and it can be done in this manner, and will be useful for the purpose indicated in the amendment of my colleague. I hope the committee will acquiesce in the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I will add that this is the precise amount, $150,000 for the armament, which was stricken out. Therefore it does not increase the gross appropriations in the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senators from California submitted the amendment to myself and the other members of the subcommittee in charge of the bill, and we are inclined to accept it. If the Hartford is to be preserved (and I suppose there is a general sentiment in the country that she ought to be preserved), she would unquestionably be of great use in the service as a training ship on the Pacific coast.

The cost of repairing the hull of the vessel will be, in the end, as estimated by the Department, $276,000 in round numbers. She is now at San Francisco, and this provision will, in all probability, enable sufficient repairs to be made to use her as a training ship. Therefore I have no objection to the amendment being adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to have one of the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole reserved. I refer to the amendment which relates to the appropriation for a dry dock at Algiers, La. I wish to have some information in relation to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment referred to by the Senator from Florida will be reserved. If there be no other reservation, the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the reserved amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 11, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted:

Dry dock at Algiers, La.: For the purpose of completing the purchase of additional land necessary for the establishment of a dry dock at Algiers, La., and expenses of judicial proceedings instituted for the condemnation of such additional land, $22,025.03.

Mr. PASCO. I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland, who is in charge of the bill, to give some explanation with reference to this item. The matter of a dry dock on the Gulf Mexico has been a matter of question for a good many years. Two commissions have reported upon it. Both have been friendly to a location at Algiers, but there are serious objections to that location, and I do not know that any law has ever been passed definitely accepting the last recommendation in favor of this point.

The location at Pensacola, in our State, has been pressed upon the attention of the country and has been noticed favorably in some of the reports which have come from the commissions. A few years ago there was an item in an appropriation act, found on page 722, volume 27 of the Statutes, which made an appropriation looking toward the establishment of a dry dock at Algiers. It is as follows:

Toward the establishment of a dry dock on the Government reservation, near Algiers, La.: For plans and specifications, and for the acquisition of such additional land as may be necessary in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, in accordance with the recommendations of two commissions appointed by the President under the provisions of an act approved September 7, 1888, and the act approved June 30, 1890, respectively, $25,000.

The proposed appropriation seems to be in line with the enactment I have read, and it would seem to indicate that some definite determination has been reached with reference to the location of this dry dock. No law has ever been passed, as I suggested before, fixing the location, and it seems to me that it would be well for the Senator from Maryland to give some explanation of the matter and to let us know whether this is a final determination, and if so, whether it became the final determination by virtue of the clause in the appropriation act which I have just read, or by some other authority. I should be glad to have some explanation.

Mr. GORMAN. By the act of March 3, 1893, as stated by the Senator from Florida, $25,000 was appropriated to acquire the necessary land for the dry dock. The Secretary of the Navy, in pursuance of the authority of that act, attempted to acquire sufficient land by private purchase. Finding that the land could not be obtained in reasonable amount, condemnation proceedings were instituted, and they have been concluded. The amount of this appropriation is the exact sum necessary to pay the award for the land. The Committee on Appropriations in framing the amendment provided only for the payment of the sum so ascertained.

There is nothing in the proposition looking to doing any work there or making plans for a dry dock. That is a matter for Congress to determine hereafter. All that is proposed to be done by the amendment to the bill is to pay for the land which has been condemned.

Mr. PASCO. I should like to ask by what authority the condemnation took place. I understand that there are very serious objections to the location at Algiers, and that when the Mississippi River is very high there are developments at Algiers which indicate a most unfavorable location for a dry dock.

I do not know of any law ever having been passed authorizing the establishment of a dry dock there, or authorizing the condemnation of any land. The section of the statute which I have read is the only authority I have seen which would indicate that the matter was being considered, and that does not fix definitely the location at Algiers. But it seems that the Department has gone on acquiring land by condemnation, and that a further appropriation is now to be made for the payment of the land so acquired. I should think that there ought to be some definite understanding as to whether Algiers is to be the location of the dry dock. The purpose here seems to be simply to purchase land without any determination of that question. It appears to me that in view of the developments which took place at Algiers, disclosing serious if not fatal objections to that place, it would be well, if the matter is still open, to examine it more carefully and completely before making any further appropriation to purchase land, if the place is really unfit for a dry dock.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that under the provisions of the act of 1893, making appropriations for the naval service——

Mr. PASCO. That is the act from which I have just read.

Mr. GORMAN. I take it for granted that it is. The Departments at all events have considered that that was an appropriation which authorized them to acquire this site; and the Secretary of the Navy, in a communication to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], says:

Of this amount—

Twenty-five thousand dollars—

the sum of $735 was expended by this Department in necessary preliminary surveys, borings, etc., and by the Department of Justice for judicial proceedings in connection with the condemnation of the lands in question, including $700 fees of United States attorney, the sum of $1,540.03. The cost of the additional lands required, as determined by the condemnation proceedings, will be $44,750.

It will be seen, therefore, that an additional appropriation of $22,025.03 will be necessary in order to complete the purchase of the additional lands necessary for the dry dock and its appurtenances.

So the amount contained in the amendment now pending is the exact amount that would be necessary to pay the award in that case.

Mr. CAFFERY. I should like to know of the Senator from Florida whether the objections which were originally raised to the location of the dry dock at Algiers have not been removed and whether a report by a later commission is not in favor of that location?

Mr. PASCO. I understand there have been two reports in favor of Algiers; but since the last one was made serious doubts have been raised as to that being a proper location, in consequence of the overflowing of the Mississippi River there, which indicates that it is not a safe, convenient, and proper place for a dry dock. It seems to me that before we invest too much money in the enterprise the matter ought to be thoroughly tested and examined.

Mr. CAFFERY. I will say to the Senator from Florida that the overflow of the Mississippi River has no effect as against the location of the dry dock at Algiers. The Mississippi River overflows annually at that spot, which is protected by levees; and it is proposed to surround the land appropriated and condemned for the purpose of the dry dock by such a levee as will completely protect the dry dock from overflow. There can be no objection on that score.

I understand that the Secretary of the Navy has recommended for the commencement of the work the appropriation of $225,000, but the committee thought perhaps, in view of the extraordinary economy which obtains, that an amount only sufficient to pay for the land condemned would be necessary this year. I understand that the location of the dry dock at Algiers has been decided on, and all that is wanted now to complete the work is sufficient appropriations by Congress.

Mr. PASCO. The Senator from Louisiana says that this location has been decided upon. That is the very point to which I was addressing my inquiry. I have never seen any actual decision fixing upon Algiers as the location. I can find no law that was ever passed fixing the location there. I think that there ought to be some such authority produced, if the Senator from Louisiana can do so, which will satisfy the objections I have been making. My suggestion is that until the Congress of the United States has by some direct action fixed upon Algiers as the location, we should not be appropriating money in one appropriation bill after another for this purpose. The definite location ought to be fixed by authority of law.

The Senator says it is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy. I have never seen any such recommendation, and I think that either the recommendation of a Secretary of the Navy or some actual law passed by the two Houses of Congress ought to be produced before we go on in this way, appropriating money year after year for a dry dock at Algiers.

If the Senator is correct in his view that one or the other of the bases for the appropriation exists, I suggest that he produce them to the Senate now, so that we can see what they are. If the question is an open one, we ought to go slowly with reference to this appropriation.

Mr. CAFFERY. I ask the Senator from Florida whether the act of 1893, authorizing the acquisition of land at Algiers for the purpose of a dry dock, is not virtually and substantially a location of that point for a dry dock? That is what has been done. The report of the commission in favor of Algiers, after the act authorizing the condemnation of land for this public purpose, I think is conclusive of the fact that the location of the dry dock has been agreed on at that point, and that it is sufficiently authorized.

Mr. PASCO. That is precisely what I am trying to ascertain, whether it rests on the appropriation made two years ago, or whether there is some authority of law for it. The Senator now seems to intimate that it rests upon the appropriation in the act of 1893; and if that is all it rests upon then the question may still be regarded as an open one. The appropriation now proposed in an amendment which was not printed in the bill moves indirectly in precisely the same direction.

It strikes me that a matter of such great importance should be settled before these appropriations are made, and that the Government should not, by these appropriations made from time to time, be drawn into a large expenditure to be made sometime in the future, committing the Government in this indirect way to the establishment of a dry dock there. If the question is still an open one, I suggest to add to the amendment the following proviso, to which I call the attention of the Senator from Maryland:

Provided, That before the expenditure of the said appropriation the Secretary of the Navy is satisfied that the location at Algiers is suitable for a dry dock; and if he finds that there are serious objections to the location that they be reported to Congress for its further action before the appropriation is expended.

It seems to me some such action ought to be taken to prevent the Government from going too far in this direction, and that this appropriation should not be made until we definitely determine that the dry dock shall be located at Algiers.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to ask the Senator from Florida a question in this connection. Is it not true that two boards of commissioners have, under instructions from Congress, examined the sites for the proposed dry-dock on the Gulf coast, and have not both of them reported in favor of Algiers?

Mr. PASCO. I so stated before the junior Senator from Louisiana came in. I referred to the act of 1893; I called attention to it and I read it. But still, neither of these reports has ever been confirmed by Congress. The matter, I understand, still remains open. In 1893, after these two reports, there was an appropriation made "toward the establishment of a dry dock," but Congress has never directed that the dry dock shall be established there. My suggestion was, that before any further appropriations or expenditures or arrangements are made the question of location ought to be definitely settled by some action on the part of Congress.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Florida will not press the amendment which he has just offered. If he will look carefully at the act of March 3, 1893, to which he has just referred, he will find the usual provision made:

Toward the establishment of a dry dock on the Government reservation near Algiers, La.; for plans and specifications, and for the acquisition of such additional land as may be necessary in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, in accordance with the recommendations of two commissions appointed by the President under the provisions of an act approved September 7, 1888, and the act approved June 30, 1890, respectively, $25,000.

There was a direct authorization to the Secretary of the Navy to acquire this land and to prepare plans for the construction of a dry dock. No more authority whatever is necessary in any case, and no further provision that I am aware of is ever made for the establishment of a dry dock. The Secretary of the Navy, as I have just shown, under that provision has gone on to acquire land, and did acquire it. He refused to purchase it at the price at which it was offered, $65,000, and condemnation proceedings were had. The jury awarded for the land acquired $44,000. It requires $22,000 more to pay the award, and there the matter will rest. It will hardly be possible for Congress to refuse to make that appropriation at this time.

But to meet the objection of the Senator from Florida and others who may still think it an open question as to the propriety of the establishment of the dry dock at this point, the Committee on Appropriations have deliberately stricken out all provision for even the plans of a dry dock there. So at the next session of Congress or at any other time when the condition of the Treasury is such that we may consider the propriety of entering upon the construction of any new work, the whole question will come up whether this is a proper location. Then all that matter may be gone over and determined. But now it is absolutely necessary that we should make this small appropriation. I trust, therefore, that the Senator from Florida will withdraw the amendment, for it has no relation to the appropriation now being made.

Mr. PASCO. It does seem to me that before any money is paid from the Treasury the location should be fixed. The appropriation of $25,000 in the act of 1893 does not seem to have led to any decisive results. The Secretary has not been able to purchase the land because the appraised valuation of it is nearly double the amount appropriated. They are now going on, apparently committing the Government one step farther, to a second appropriation. It does not seem to me that it is wise, as long as the matter has not yet been closed, as long as the question of the location of the dry dock is still open, to go on appropriating additional amounts of money in the different appropriation bills, and thus indirectly committing the Government to the establishment of the dry dock at Algiers.

The location, as I said, and as the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] just suggested, has been favorably reported upon by two boards, but I will say again what I said before he came in, that very serious doubts have arisen as to whether it is a proper location. The location at Algiers has been flooded with water since then, and everything indicates that when the Mississippi River is high the entire plant may be washed out and ruined altogether. I think it would be very wise to settle by some definite legislation the location of the dry dock before we appropriate any more money.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Florida allow me?

Mr. PASCO. Certainly; I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator as to the doubts whether this is precisely the best place for the dry dock; but the Senator speaks too late. The location has been fixed. Congress fixed it by authorizing the purchase of the land. The Secretary of the Navy has gone on, and not being able to purchase the land, has condemned it, but has not had money enough to pay the whole sum of the condemnation. We are in duty bound to pay the award, because the location has been settled. It never will be settled any more determinately. Whether right or wrong; it has been done.

The only future question, as the Senator from Maryland says, is whether when next year comes Congress shall, with this land upon its hands that it ought to pay for and has to pay for, go on and spend a half a million or a million dollars in building a dry dock. The location has been settled just as much as Pensacola has been settled. It is only a question of future appropriations, just as it is a question of future appropriations for Pensacola. We are in for it. The location has been settled.

Mr. PASCO. I suggest to the Senator from Maine, with all due respect, that he is simply begging the question. The very question I raise is whether the Government is already committed to that project.

Mr. HALE. We have appropriated money for this purpose, and under it the Secretary of the Navy has gone on——

Mr. PASCO. We have appropriated $25,000, and he can not get the land for less than $50,000.

Mr. HALE. No; but the Secretary has gone on under the act and condemned the land for the United States and taken legal process, and thereby has located it. This appropriation is merely necessary to complete the payment for the land. We have to pay for the land even if we abandon it.

Mr. PASCO. But the Secretary of the Navy had no power beyond the $25,000 which was appropriated. If that was insufficient he could close the contract, he could not buy the land; and now he comes here and says, "If you will give me $22,000 more I can do it."

Mr. HALE. This is only to carry out what is recognized by the law as one process. A general statute requires the Government to pay for land which it has condemned. It can not get out of it. It is equivalent to a deed where property has passed from one private party to another—the money can be recovered—and the United Seates is in this situation. I think quite likely we have got into a bad scrape and have got involved in an expenditure down there which will not be at the best place; but we are in for it, so far as the land is concerned.

When the question comes up of placing $1,000,000 worth of work there, that is a matter which Congress has to determine hereafter. We might perhaps better afford to let the land lie than to put more money on it. But we are in for buying the land. That is all this provision applies to. The Senator is wrong in saying it has not been located. That has all been done. Nothing more will ever be done in the way of locating than has been done.

Mr. PASCO. I am not satisfied that the Senator from Maine is correct, because there is no authority here to have any proceedings in condemnation. There is no authority to expend any more than $25,000, and there is no authority here to take any of the steps the Senator from Maine speaks of. It was for that very reason that I opened this debate. I asked whether any authority outside of the statute of 1893 existed. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] thought that some additional authority did exist, but when he was pressed by a question he was obliged to admit that no other authority did exist than that act. Now, this is the extent of the authority in the act of 1893, to which I call the attention of Senators:

Toward the establishment of a dry dock on the Government reservation, near Algiers, La.; for plans and specifications, and for the acquisition of such additional land as may be necessary in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, in accordance with the recommendations of two commissions appointed by the President under the provisions of an act approved September 7, 1888, and the act approved June 30, 1890, respectively, $25,000.

Now there is no authority for condemning any land. There is no definite location of the dry dock.

Mr. HALE. There was a general act passed a few years ago, and a specific application to any case is not necessary. The general authority under the act passed in 1888 as part of an appropriation act lodges the authority in the heads of Departments, and the Secretary of the Navy has gone on in accordance with that act.

Mr. PASCO. To establish this dry dock in accordance with that act?

Mr. HALE. To condemn the land in accordance with the act. Formerly, in every act for a public building, there was a special provision for condemnation proceedings. That was cut short by a general act.

Mr. PASCO. The Senator from Maine understands perfectly well that the authority for the erection of a public building is the limit of cost fixed by the act, and beyond that limit of cost no one has any authority to go. Now here is a limit of cost of $25,000. Beyond that limit of cost the Secretary of the Navy has no power to go, if that doctrine is correct.

Now, taking that view of the matter, it seems to me that there is no committal of the Government to any expenditure there or any location there unless it can be obtained within the limit of the appropriation of $25,000.

Mr. HALE. That does not apply to the purchase of land.

Mr. PASCO. It applies to the purchase of land for Government buildings, and the same principle must be effective everywhere. Now, the Secretary of the Navy, having no power to go beyond that $25,000, is powerless to extend that sum or take an action unless we give him this additional power by appropriating $22,000 more. If there is any special act which the Senator from Maine has referred to, I will make the same inquiry of him that I did of the Senator from Louisiana, to produce the act and let us look over it and see whether the power exists.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, it occurs to me, and it is very clear, that after the report of two commissions favorable to the location of a dry dock at Algiers, after an appropriation in the act of 1893 towards paying for the land for the establishment of a dry dock, that that forms a complete location of a dry dock, and the amount of money mentioned is the initiative payment. If that amount is not sufficient more will be had.

I desire to say that the objection raised by the Senator from Florida to the establishment of a dry dock in Louisiana at Algiers because of possible overflows of the Mississippi River is without any foundation. That particular point has never, in my recollection, been overflowed. That particular point can be entirely and completely protected against overflow.

New Orleans, being the largest city on the Gulf, and the port of New Orleans being a fresh-water port, material and men being more plentiful and the more easily to be had there than at Pensacola, I imagine Algiers is a better point for the location of a dry dock than Pensacola, and so the commission thought. Now, after the finding of these two commissions, after an appropriation of money for the condemnation of land at Algiers and for the establishment of a dry dock, it occurs to me the establishment is a thing settled. I do not share in the fears of the Senator from Maine that it may be a bad selection. I take the report of two commissions that it is a good selection, and I take my personal knowledge that the point is perfectly secure from overflow, which is the only objection that the Senator from Florida has raised.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me? I do not want to interrupt him.

Mr. CAFFERY. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I find the general statute which the Senator from Florida calls for is very clear and distinct. In the first place in the act last year we appropriated so much towards the establishment of a dry dock. We did not limit it. We did not say that the land should cost only so much, but in the very words used, "toward the establishment," indicated that it was only a portion of the appropriation. That is the force of the word "toward" in an appropriation act.

If you appropriate toward the construction of a building or toward the construction of a ship, it is understood, and every common mind can understand it, as being only a portion of the appropriation. Upon that the Secretary of the Navy took the act of August 1, 1888, which provides that—

In every case in which the Secretary of the Treasury or any other officer of the Government has been, or hereafter shall be, authorized to procure real estate for the erection of a public building or for other public uses he shall be, and hereby is, authorized to acquire the same for the United States by condemnation, under judicial process, whenever in his opinion it is necessary or advantageous to the Government to do so.

You can not have any more plenary power than was given by that act to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Navy went on under that authority and used the money appropriated so far as it went toward establishing the dry dock and found it was not sufficient, and then he condemned land enough for the establishment of the dry dock. You can not get anything more complete, more specific, and more conclusive than that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, it has been thought for some years that the establishment of a dry dock somewhere on the Gulf coast was a necessity. So in 1888 a law was passed authorizing the appointment of a board of naval officers to examine the Gulf coast and consider the merits of the several places proposed for the dry dock, and ascertain which was the best location for the dock. The board of 1888 reported, after examining Pensacola, in the State of the Senator from Florida, and after examining Mobile, New Orleans, and other localities, that the best place for a dry dock was at the Government reservation in the town of Algiers, opposite the city of New Orleans.

After that action by the board there was nothing for Congress to do to authorize a dry dock at Algiers except to make an appropriation to begin the work. But rival interests interfered and prevented that being done at that time. So in the next Congress, in 1890, another commission was authorized by law to be appointed for the purpose of reëxamining these competing localities upon the Gulf coast, and again reported to Congress what in their judgment was the best locality for the dry dock. Those of us interested in the establishment of a dry dock at New Orleans submitted to all this.

The second board of naval officers were appointed, and again they examined the several points upon the Gulf coast, Mobile, Pensacola, New Orleans, and other localities, and again they reported that the best locality for the dry dock was the Government reservation in the town of Algiers, opposite the city of New Orleans.

So here we have had two investigations by two different naval boards, each of them reaching the same conclusion, to wit, that the best place for a dry dock is at Algiers. Following the action of these two boards it was not essential that a separate, distinct, formal act of Congress should be enacted locating the dry dock at Algiers.

All that was necessary was that Congress should take some action indicating its purpose to carry into effect the recommendation of the two boards of naval officers. This action was taken when in the naval appropriation bill of 1893 the following provision was inserted:

Dry dock, Algiers, La.: Toward the establishment of a dry dock on the Government reservation, near Algiers, La.; for plans and specifications, and for the acquisition of such additional land as may be necessary in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, in accordance with the recommendations of two commissions by the President under the provisions of an act approved September 7, 1888, and the act approved June 30, 1890, respectively, $25,000.

There could be no more direct assent on the part of Congress to the establishment of the dry dock at Algiers than the incorporation of this appropriation in the Naval appropriation act of 1893. The Senator from Florida, who insists that action locating the dry dock has not yet been taken, is certainly in error. This language could mean nothing else. It was later ascertained that the $25,000 was not sufficient. Additional land, needed to be added to the reservation to make the area sufficiently extensive for a dry-dock, could not be purchased by private agreement, and had to be condemned. It required more money to meet the judgment awarded in the condemnation proceedings, and the proposition now before the Senate is to give this additional money.

It is too late now for the Senator from Florida to raise the objection he has raised. It is in the nature of a demurrer which should have been pleaded in limine. We have passed now to the merits of the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PASCO. I thought the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] rose to address the Senate, and I waited.

Mr. CAFFERY. No.

Mr. PASCO. Mr. President, I have already admitted what the Senator from Louisiana has stated, that this matter has been examined and reported favorably; but it still seems that there has been no definite location of the dry dock at Algiers, and it is manifest that the location is to be made in this indirect way; and that is what I object to.

Mr. HALE. What force does the Senator from Florida put upon the act of Congress appropriating money toward the establishment of a dry dock at Algiers, if that is not a location of it?

Mr. PASCO. There is a good deal of force in the words "toward the establishment" of a dry dock there, but still in my judgment the matter is in fieri; it has not yet been concluded, and I still think the Secretary of the Navy was limited to $25,000; just as when the Secretary of the Treasury is limited to $100,000 for a public building to be erected in a particular place, he has no authority to make any contract beyond the amount actually appropriated. It is in that view of the case that I do not think a matter so important ought to be concluded in this indirect way. The favorable reports that come from these two boards are reasons for regarding Algiers as a suitable place for the establishment of a dry dock.

But these reports are not conclusive. They only bring information to Congress, and since both these reports were made developments have occurred at Algiers showing that it would be a most inappropriate and unfit place, because of the volume of water there, which would threaten the safety of the entire structure, the complete plant. But I do think that while the matter is still in an unsettled condition we should keep it so until a complete and thorough investigation and determination has been made, and we should not locate the dry dock there in this indirect way.

The Chair was about to put the question on the committee amendment, but it will be recollected that there was an amendment pending which I myself offered to the committee amendment, which I think is first in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Florida as offering an amendment.

Mr. PASCO. It was read to the Senate sometime ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator suggested an amendment to the Senator in charge of the bill, but did not send it to the desk. The Chair did not understand it had been offered.

Mr. PASCO. I ask that it be read at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add the following proviso to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole:

Provided, That before the expenditure of the said appropriation the Secretary of the Navy is satisfied that the location at Algiers is suitable for a dry dock; and if he finds that there are serious objections to the location, that they be reported to Congress for its further action before the appropriation is expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HUNTON. I move at the end of line 12, page 49, to add to the clause remitting the time penalties on the dynamite cruiser Vesuvius:

And a sum sufficient for such purpose is hereby appropriated.

This amendment meets with the approbation of the committee, and I offer it in the handwriting of a member of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 48, preceding line 20, for the construction of two steel-armored cruisers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 48, after line 19, add:

That, for the purpose of further increasing the Naval Establishment of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed and completed, at such one or more of the navy-yards of the United States as may be best adapted thereto, and which are to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, two steel-armored cruisers (of the general type of the new United States cruiser Minneapolis, authorized and now building under the act of March 2, 1891). Each of the said cruisers herein authorized to have the highest practicable speed for vessels of their class, and to be furnished with the latest and best types of modern engines, armament, and equipments, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not more than $2,750,000 each. In the construction of each of the said vessels all the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the Naval Establishment," as to material for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of so much of the said act as is therein provided for the construction of the vessels therein named to be built in the navy-yards of the United States, save that in all their parts the vessels herein authorized shall be of domestic manufacture.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Virginia will not press the amendment, but will withdraw it. I am in full sympathy with the purpose he has in view to increase our Navy as rapidly as possible, and for the past six or eight years—indeed ever since I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations—I have advocated the most liberal appropriations. But we have reached a point in our financial affairs where it is almost impossible for us to make an additional appropriation on this account. There are thirteen vessels under way that are being constructed and are not completed. The Secretary of the Navy states that he hopes by 1896 to have those thirteen vessels completed, and they will make us a very respectable Navy.

In the mean time I hope and trust the business conditions of the country will be so improved that we shall be able to take up this matter again and go on with it. There can be no very serious trouble in the delay which the condition of the Treasury seems to demand. I therefore trust that the Senator from Virginia will withdraw the amendment, and not open up a debate which would be long extended, but will permit the matter to remain open until the next session of Congress, when we hope—I hope at least—that we will be in a condition where I may join the Senator from Virginia in making still further provisions for the advancement of our Navy.

Mr. DANIEL. In view of the remarks made by the Senator in charge of the bill as to the condition of the Treasury and the other considerations advanced by him, I shall not urge the amendment at this time. I do not believe that it would be successful in consideration of the statement he has made, notwithstanding the policy of the Government to build up a great navy as rapidly as its resources will allow. I therefore withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia withdraws the amendment.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6016) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Pending the consideration of this bill, I ask the Senator from Kentucky to yield to me, promising him to take but a very short time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege. My attention was called to-day for the first time to an article which appeared in the Washingtom Post of July 5. It appeared under the following heading:

OVER A NARROW BRIDGE—HOW THE TARIFF BILL WAS FINALLY CARRIED TO VICTORY—SOME DEVELOPMENTS PROMISED—SENATOR CAFFERY MAY TELL HOW THE LOUISIANA MEN WERE VICTIMIZED AND THE AGREEMENT UPON WHICH THEY HAD RELIED WAS BROKEN—MR. BLANCHARD'S SILENCE INTERFERRED WITH THE COMBINATION TO BEAT THE BILL AND LED MR. IRBY TO VOTE YES.

I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read that portion of the article which I have marked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Yesterday's aftermath of the passage of the tariff bill by the Senate was worth gleaning. The narowness of the bridge over which the Democratic majority in the Senate passed to safety was shown in the Post yesterday morning, but as the curtain continues to raise the depth of the chasm is more and more revealed. For several hours last Tuesday afternoon and evening the Democratic managers were on the ragged edge of uncertainty, and it is by no means certain that their troubles are yet at an end. The bill will eventually be passed, but some very plain words are liable to be spoken on the Democratic side of the Chamber before the vote is taken which will finally enact the measure into law.

The storm center last Tuesday afternoon ranged around the two Senators from Louisiana. They had surrendered ad valorem to specific duties in the sugar schedule—the former being in favor of the trust and the latter being demanded by the planters—and had accepted in return the proposition of the Finance Committee that the bounty should be allowed to remain operative until the first of next year. Suddenly this extension was revoked, through the affirmative votes of Messrs. COKE, GEORGE, and PUGH, on the Democratic side, who, without any explanation, joined the antagonistic combination of HILL and IRBY.

Their action, alleged to have been in direct violation of the caucus agreement, incensed the sugar Senators and widened the chasm into which the bill seemed for a while to be destined to fall. No opportunity for the sugar men to show their hand, however, came until Senator PALMER, anxious to serve the interests of the Illinois wire-fencing manufacturers, proposed to place this fencing on the dutiable list, removing it from the free list, where it had been placed by the committee as a concession to the Populists, and particularly to Senator ALLEN of Nebraska, who regarded this action as helpful to his political prospects.

A TRUCE PROPOSED IN VAIN.

Having themselves been victimized, as they claimed, by the Finance Committee, the sugar Senators, with a few recruits, now proceeded to do a little guerilla warfare on their own account. They joined with the Republicans in voting against the free barbed wire proposition, as related in the Post yesterday and won their point. With the banner of battle thus hoisted, they came forward, after a conference among themselves, with a flag of truce.

It was an amendment which proposed to delay the repeal of the bounty law until the end of the present year. Even at the muzzle of a loaded gun, so to speak, the Finance Committee refused to be held up, and the amendment failed to pass. More than once was the proposition brought forward, but each time it went down to defeat. Once again, too, the Populist Senator from Nebraska made a gallant fight for free barbed wire fencing, but without success. Disintegration seemed to have set in on the Democratic side, with the Republicans voting first one way and then the other, without any regard for consistency, but only with the one idea of making still more dangerous the quaking bog in which their Democratic opponents were sadly floundering.

MR. BLANCHARD'S SILENCE.

Such was the condition when the vote was taken. The key of the situation rested then with Mr. BLANCHARD of Louisiana, whose name, coming early in the list, preceded that of the other conspirators. But Mr. BLANCHARD did not answer to his name. He was present, but as silent as the grave. Mr. CAFFERY kept the faith. He answered in the negative. Five minutes later the Clerk called the name of Mr. IRBY of South Carolina. In these five minutes Mr. IRBY had done a great deal of thinking. He had noticed the silence of Mr. BLANCHARD and saw no reason why he should throw away his vote. He answered "aye." His response made Mr. CAFFERY start.

A moment later Mr. KYLE, the South Dakota Populist, also voted for the bill. Then Mr. CAFFERY felt the ground sinking from under his feet and began to reach out for the dry land. When the roll call had been concluded but before the result had been announced, he was on his feet. Entering his protest, as told in the Post yesterday, he changed his vote from "no" to "aye" and sat down. Then, and not until then, did Mr. BLANCHARD appear upon the scene. He did the only thing left for him to do, and voted in the affirmative. The tariff bill had crossed the bridge, but through the wide and yawning gaps in the planks there was a glimpse of a bottomless gulf which made the Democratic managers shudder.

WHAT MR. CAFFERY MAY DO.

All this, it is true, was told with some detail in the Post yesterday, and belongs to the might-have-been chapter—a chapter that is now interesting simply as a contribution to history. It is now repeated because there is a possibility that before the final vote is taken Mr. CAFFERY may have more to say upon the subject. If he should tell, as it is said he will, the history of the sugar schedule of the bill; if he should undertake to be the narrator of a story of broken promises, he will be sure to have an audience of interested listeners not only in the Senate, but in the country. It is understood that he has been promised that the matter shall be fixed up in conference, but it would not be surprising if he should now decline to rest any further belief upon promises, but should play the part of a free lance and make things decidedly warm for some of his Democratic colleagues. At any rate, the future is said to hold some developments which will prove a fitting climax to the most remarkable fight which the Senate has ever seen.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, the Washington Post, besides being one of the best newspapers in the country, enjoys an enviable reputation for the fairness and justness with which it usually treats public men whose duties require them to congregate in this capital city. Nor do I believe that the journal referred to had any intention to misrepresent my position in the article which has just been read at the desk. Nevertheless, Mr. President, the information upon which the article is based was erroneous, and the article itself contains statements that reflect upon me in my capacity as a Senator. It states that—

The key of the situation rested then with Mr. BLANCHARD of Louisiana, whose name, coming early in the list, preceded that of the other conspirators.

The word "conspirator," as applied to Senators, is reprehensible, and particularly as applied to me in this connection is without foundation to rest upon; is meaningless and false. In my connection with the tariff bill and with the voting upon that measure I did nothing that should cause me to be referred to as "a conspirator," and I do not believe that any other Senator upon this floor did anything that entitles him to be classed as a conspirator.

The article goes on to say—

But Mr. BLANCHARD did not answer to his name. He was present, but as silent as the grave.

When my name was called on that occasion I was not in the Senate Chamber. But that is immaterial. Had I been present in the Chamber when my name was called, I would, for reasons that were quite sufficient to me, have withheld my vote on the first call.

Mr. CAFFERY kept the faith—

The article goes on to say; and the plain inference is that somebody, who is referred to as one of the conspirators, did not keep the faith. I presume, from the language used connecting my name with this affair, I am the one alluded to as not having kept the faith.

Mr. President, to all of this I have but a word to say. I had no agreement or understanding with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], or any other Senator, that my vote was to be withheld, or that my vote was to be cast "yea" or "nay" upon the bill. From that statement I would except my colleague [Mr. CAFFERY].

He and I are charged here with the care of the same interests, and, in our connection as colleagues, we frequently conferred with each other and consulted with one another as to the proper course to pursue in reference to the tariff bill. But other than my colleague I had no understanding with any Senator that I would at first withhold my vote, or that I would cast it "yea" or "nay;" and when I am put in the category of acting the part of a conspirator to defeat the bill, I denounce the statement as false.

MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Mines and Mining and have passed a short bill for the extension of assessment work on mining claims. It is necessary that it should be done at once. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose he has indicated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEWART. I report back from the Committee on Mines and Mining, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 6558) to amend section numbered 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to mining claims; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Mines and Mining was, in section 1, line 21, after the words "South Dakota," to strike out "and the Second Congressional district of the State of Colorado;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of section numbered 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which require that on each claim located after the 10th day of May, 1872, and until patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year, be suspended for the year 1894, so that no mining claim which has been regularly located and recorded as required by the local laws and mining regulations shall be subject to forfeiture for nonperformance of the annual assessment for the year 1894: Provided, That the claimant or claimants of any mining location, in order to secure the benefits of this act, shall cause to be recorded in the office where the location notice or certificate is filed on or before December 31, 1894, a notice that he or they in good faith intend to hold and work said claim: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the State of South Dakota.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

THE SAMOAN ISLANDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in further response to the Senate resolution of April 6, 1894, a report from the Secretary of State, accompanied by copies of certain correspondence relating to Samoan affairs.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, July 9, 1894.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MORGAN was, on his own request, granted an indefinite leave of absence from the sessions of the Senate.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE LISLE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced the death of Hon. Marcus C. Lisle, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky, and communicated the resolutions of the House thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 7, 1894.

Resolved, That the members of the House of Representatives have heard with deep regret and profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. Marcus C. Lisle, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That a committee of seven members of the House be appointed by the Speaker to act with such Senators as may be selected to attend the funeral of the deceased; and that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House shall take proper action for superintending the funeral and for attending the remains of the deceased at the place of burial, and the necessary expense incurred by the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate to the Senate a copy of these resolutions.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

The Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. MCCREARY, Mr. BERRY, Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana, Mr. PAYNTER, Mr. DRAPER, Mr. LUCAS, and Mr. PENCE, as the committee on the part of the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, if the members of the Senate had known Mr. Lisle as intimately and as well as I knew him, they could appreciate the pain with which I announce his death to this body. One of the youngest men in the other House, serving his first term, I doubt if death could have selected a man who was surrounded by happier conditions or who gave promise of more usefulness in the public service. I do not mean at this time to detain the Senate by any eulogy upon the deceased Representative, but simply ask that the resolutions which I send to the desk may be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Kentucky will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. Marcus C. Lisle, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That a committee consisting of five Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to attend with the committee on the part of the House of Representatives the funeral of the deceased at his late residence in the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives, and that he be further directed to send a duly-attested copy of the same to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolutions, and they were unanimously agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, before announcing the result, appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate under the second resolution, Mr. BLACKBURN, Mr. LINDSAY, Mr. PALMER, Mr. SQUIRE, and Mr. DUBOIS.

Thereupon (at 4 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 10, 1894, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 9, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Rev. JOHN W. HEIDT, D. D., of Atlanta, Ga.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

IMMIGRATION AND CONTRACT LABOR LAWS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to House resolution of June 7, 1864, information relative to the rules and regulations established in connection with the administration of the immigration and contract labor laws; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the Senate of the following titles; which were severally referred as indicated, namely:

A bill (S. 879) granting a pension to Josephine F. Kelton, widow of Brig. Gen. John C. Kelton, late Adjutant-General United States Army, deceased—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 2129) to authorize the entry of land for reservoir purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

COL. JESSE H. STRICKLAND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 838) for the relief of Col. Jesse H. Strickland, Eighth Tennessee Cavalry, United States Volunteers.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill, a similar bill having been reported by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be received subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me ask the gentleman from Kentucky if that has been reported by a committee of the House?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. It has been.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would be glad to have the House report read.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. The House committee has reported a bill exactly like it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report if there be no objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand that this report is quite a lengthy one, and possibly the gentleman from Kentucky may make a brief explanation, which will be sufficient.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to make a brief explanation of the bill.

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this is a case in which Col. Strickland was authorized by President Lincoln to raise a regiment of cavalry during the war. He went into the service, raised a portion of the regiment, and then was compelled to go to a hospital on account of sickness or disability, for which reason he was not mustered with the regiment. After a time there were other companies raised by other people which were consolidated with this regiment while he was still in the hospital, and another man was appointed colonel of the regiment by Mr. Johnson, then governor of the State of Tennessee.

Since that time Mr. Strickland has applied to Congress and a bill has been already passed placing his name on the muster roll as colonel of the Eighth Tennessee Cavalry Regiment, and he received a pension, which he is now drawing.

Mr. DOCKERY. What does the present bill propose?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. What this bill seeks to do is to pay him for about five months' service as a colonel of cavalry, for which he has never been paid because of the fact that he was not mustered.

Mr. BURROWS. What is the amount?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I do not know the exact amount. It is about five months' pay of a colonel of cavalry, whatever that is.

Mr. COX. Who was the colonel of that regiment?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I do not remember the name of the colonel who was appointed by Mr. Johnson.

Mr. COX. Was this a Tennessee regiment?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Yes; the Eighth Tennessee Cavalry.

Mr. BARTLETT. Was he ever in active service?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Oh, yes. The report shows that.

Mr. COX. Does the report show who was the colonel of the regiment?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Yes; the report shows all of the facts in connection with the matter. I have only stated them briefly.

Mr. BYNUM. I understand the gentleman to state that this regiment was made up by the consolidation of other companies while the proposed beneficiary of this bill was sick in the hospital?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Other companies were consolidated with it, but the greater part of the regiment was raised by Col. Strickland.

Mr. BYNUM. I understood the gentleman to state that he was trying to raise the regiment, but that he was taken sick and went to the hospital, and during that time other companies were assigned to the regiment, which was formed in that manner. Was this officer ever in actual service?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. Oh, yes; he was in actual service.

Mr. COX. Was not this Col. Hawkins's regiment?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. I do not think so, but I am not positive about that.

Mr. BARTLETT. How could there have been two colonels of the same regiment?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. There was a colonel, as I have already stated, appointed by the governor of Tennessee. Col. Strickland was commissioned by Mr. Lincoln to raise the regiment, and was always regarded in the orders of the commanding officer as the colonel.

Mr. COX. And was actually the colonel of it?

Mr. STONE of Kentucky. No; because Governor Johnson of Tennessee appointed the colonel. The report shows all the facts.

I will state that I have no special interest in this matter. I have been requested by gentlemen to call it up. It has been before the committee for a long time.

Mr. BURROWS. It ought to pass.

Mr. COOMBS. I think there is no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BYNUM. I think that this should go through the regular course. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill is not before the House.

REPORT ON TYPHOID FEVER, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following House resolution with a Senate amendment:

House resolution providing for the printing of 4,000 extra copies of the report of the select committee of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia on typhoid and malarial fevers and other preventable diseases.

The SPEAKER. This is a House resolution with a Senate amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, that resolution as originally introduced was a House resolution, and it was reported and passed as such. It went to the Senate by inadvertence, and the Senate made it a concurrent resolution and passed it, and the only amendment is the amendment making it a concurrent resolution. There is no change in its provisions. I move to concur in the Senate amendment

The motion of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee was agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS OF BERING SEA ARBITRATION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate resolution, which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed under the direction of the Department of State 6,000 copies of the official proceedings of the Tribunal of Arbitration created in pursuance of the treaty of February 29, 1892, between the United States and Great Britain, including all documents, papers, and agreements presented officially to said tribunal by the agents of said Governments, respectively, and also including the written or printed arguments and oral arguments of the counsel on behalf of each said Governments made on said hearing at Paris, and the opinions of the arbitrators, respectively, delivered in said tribunal in conformity with its order admitting the same to constitute a part of said proceedings; of which number 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the use of the Department of State.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. RANDALL, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. PAYNTER, indefinitely.

ERRONEOUS SURVEY, JEFFERRSON BARRACKS, MO.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 190) for the benefit of sundry persons residing in the vicinity of Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States hereby release whatever title they may have in that part of the United States survey 3,119 lying and being within the boundary lines described in the deed of the town of Carondelet to the United States, dated October 25, 1854, and now claimed as a portion of Jefferson Barracks military reservation, situated in the county of St. Louis and State of Missouri, unto the legal representatives and assigns of John B. Martigny, to whom said survey was confirmed by act of Congress approved July 4, 1836.

SEC. 2. That the United States hereby release whatever title they may have in so much of the land covered by the patent issued by the United States to William H. Jansen, November 1, 1859, under preëmption certificate No. 27866, as lies within the boundary lines described in the deed of the town of Carondelet to the United States, dated October 25, 1854, and now claimed as a portion of said Jefferson Barracks military reservation, unto the legal representatives and assigns of said William H. Jansen.

SEC. 3. That this act shall not affect or impair the title which any person other than the United States may have acquired in any of the lands described herein, adverse to the title of either the aforesaid John B. Martigny or William H. Jansen, or of those claiming under either of them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the report read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be some explanation.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let the report be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report can be read.

The report (by Mr. GORMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 190) for the benefit of sundry persons residing in the vicinity of Jefferson Barracks, Mo., have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

A bill of identical language was favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate in the last Congress, and the bill passed that body. This committee in the last Congress reported favorably, but too late to secure its passage in the House.

For the reasons set forth in House Report No. 2307, second session Fifty-second Congress, this bill is again reported favorably and its passage recommended.

The SPEAKER. This report throws no light upon the matter. It refers to another document.

Mr. BLACK of Illinois. I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] if that bill grants away any of the property now in the possession of the United States at Jefferson Barracks?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. No; not at all. I will state for the information of the gentleman that by an erroneous survey made at Jefferson Barracks a number of people residing in the neighborhood were deprived of certain property rights. These rights were never exercised by the United States, the War Department always recognizing that these people were the rightful owners of the land. The War Department now asks for the passage of this bill.

Mr. COBB of Missouri. The Government makes no claim to it, and recognizes that it was an erroneous survey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTHOLDT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CUMBERLAND FEMALE COLLEGE, OF M'MINNVILLE, TENN.

Mr. SNODGRASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1491) for the relief of Cumberland Female College, of McMinnville, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to consider a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Cumberland Female College, of McMinnville, Tenn., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, in full of all claims of said college for the use, occupation, damage, and destruction of its property during the late war of 1861 to 1865 by the military authorities of the United States in the use of said property during that said period for hospital purposes. And the acceptance of said sum by the said college shall be a complete and absolute bar to any and all claims for damage and destruction of the property of said college or the use and occupation thereof by the armies of the United States.

The Committee on War Claims recommended the following amendment:

In lines 6 and 7 strike out the words "ten thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five thousand."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to hear an explanation of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SNODGRASS] can make a short explanation.

Mr. SNODGRASS. I will ask the Clerk to read the report. It is short and sets forth the facts.

The report (by Mr. HOUK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1491) for the relief of Cumberland Female College, of McMinnville, Tenn., submit the following report:

The facts of this claim are fully set forth in a report made by this committee to the House in the Fifty-first Congress, which is as follows:

"[House Report No. 2647, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9688) for the relief of Cumberland Female College, submit the following report:

"Cumberland Female College, of McMinnville, Tenn., was chartered under the laws of Tennessee in 1851, the cost of the building, etc., being about $25,000. From 1851 to 1861 it was in successful operation. In 1862 the buildings were seized by the Federal forces and converted to hospital use. From its seizure in 1862 until the close of the war the school grounds and buildings were almost continuously used by the Union army for hospital purposes, the town of McMinnville being held as a permanent military post. The property was in fine condition when seized in 1862. When the war ended the buildings and grounds were in a badly wrecked condition, the furniture broken and destroyed, and the apparatus almost entirely ruined.

"The evidence fully shows that a conservative estimate of the damage to the grounds, buildings, furniture, and apparatus would place the loss at not less than $5,000, and that the further sum of $2,500 would be a moderate compensation for the use and occupation of the premises.

"In view of the foregoing your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

"In line 6 strike out 'ten thousand' and insert in lieu thereof 'seven thousand five hundred.'"

In the Fifty-first Congress this claim was not reached on the Calendar, but in the Fifty-second Congress it passed both Houses and went to conference, the two Houses not agreeing as to the amount, and that committee reported as follows:

"The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2122) for the relief of Cumberland Female College, of McMinnville, Tenn., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

"That the Senate recede from its amendments and agree to an amendment, as follows:

"Strike out all after the word 'appropriated,' in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"'The sum of $5,000 for use and occupation of the college buildings and premises as a hospital during the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865, by the military authorities of the United States, the same to be accepted and receipted for in full for all claims of the said Cumberland Female College against the United States,' and the House agree to the same.

"JOHN W. DANIEL,
"S. PASCO,
"W. A. PEFFER,
"Managers on part of Senate.

"B. A. ENLOE,
"W. J. STONE,
"JOHN C. HOUK,
"Managers on part of the House."

The conference report was adopted by both Houses, but the act did not reach the outgoing President in time to be signed on March 4, 1893, failing only by an hour or less to become a law.

The committee recommends the passage of the bill (H. R. 1491), with an amendment striking out the words "ten thousand five hundred," in lines 6 and 7 of the bill, and substituting the words "five thousand," the amount recommended by the conference committee of the Fifty-second Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to receive consideration in the regular way.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

BRIDGE OVER EASTERN BRANCH OF POTOMAC.

Mr. BARTLETT, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1112) providing for a survey for a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and the bill H. R. 4128, on the same subject, was ordered to lie on the table.

REQUIRING RESIDENTS ON BOATS IN INTERIOR WATERS TO OBTAIN LICENSE.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 225) to require persons who make their residence on boats on the interior waters of the United States to obtain license, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FOURTH-CLASS POSTMASTERS TO ADMINISTER OATHS TO PENSIONERS.

Mr. BALDWIN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 7294) empowering fourth-class postmasters to administer oaths to pensioners, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION ACT OF JUNE 27, 1890.

Mr. ERDMAN, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 7574) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act granting pension to soldiers and sailors who are incapacited for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," approved June 27, 1890; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SALE OF BURIAL SITES FOR BENEFIT OF CONGRESSIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. HEARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported with amendments the bill (H. R. 223) granting the right to sell burial sites it parts of certain streets in Washington City to the vestry of Washington Parish for the benefit of the Congressional Cemetery; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of committees.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1141) to remove the political disabilities of Charles Iverson Graves, of Rome, in the State of Georgia; and

A bill (H. R. 7293) regulating the procedure in criminal causes in the district of Minnesota.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 6447) to fix a term of the Federal district and circuit courts of the southern judicial district of Mississippi, to be held at Meridian, Miss., to include the counties named; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (S. 411) for the relief of Samuel Collins; when the Speaker signed the same.

EQUALIZATION OF REAL-ESTATE VALUES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, this being District day, I now call up the bill H. R. 6415, reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6415) to provide an immediate revision and equalization of real-estate values in the District of Columbia; also to provide an assessment of real estate in said District in the year 1896, and every third year thereafter.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, ought not this bill to be considered in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. BURROWS. But it will be read, and then the point can be made.

The SPEAKER. As soon as the House is informed of what it is, the point can be made.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HEARD (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this bill will have to be considered in Committee of the Whole, I move to suspend the further reading, and move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, and the bill can be read in Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask indefinite leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. MOON, who has been called home suddenly by the death of his brother.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

EQUALIZATION OF REAL ESTATE VALUES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The title was again reported.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill may be resumed at the point reached by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill may be resumed at the point at which the reading was suspended in the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that the Committee on the District of Columbia considers this bill one of unusual importance, designed, as it is, to change the system of assessment of property in the District of Columbia. It is a matter in which not only the citizens of the District are concerned, but the Government of the United States, since we are liable for a part of the expense of conducting the government of the District of Columbia. So important was the bill in the estimation of the committee, that they directed that the bill be taken up out of its order and presented first among the bills on our Calendar for the consideration of the House. I now desire to yield the floor to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB], who, as chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, having charge of the bill, has given the matter, in connection with his associates, a very careful consideration, and he is more familiar with its provisions than I am.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman yields, I would like to ask him a few questions.

Mr. HEARD. I will transfer the duty of answering those questions to my friend from Alabama, who is more familiar with the bill than I am.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to yield to the gentleman to answer any questions he may desire.

Mr. RAY. I desire a little information, that is all; and I thought perhaps it would be more agreeable to the gentleman to answer some questions now than to be interrupted after entering on the discussion of the bill.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I am perfectly willing to answer any question.

Mr. RAY. I would like to know whether or not personal property is now taxed in the District of Columbia?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. It is.

Mr. RAY. And is one of the purposes of this bill to exempt personal property from taxation?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Not at all. The tax on personal property is assessed and collected in this District under an entirely different and separate system.

Mr. RAY. Then this bill is not intended to interfere with that at all?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Not in the slightest.

Mr. RAY. Very good. Now, is there any provision made in this bill for giving notice to property owners of the assessments made?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That is provided for by general law. There will be notices given, but the provision for these notices is not incorporated in this bill, because there is already provision for that subject in the existing law.

Mr. RAY. And it is not intended by section 16 to repeal those provisions.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Not at all. There is no conflict between this bill and the existing law on that subject.

Mr. RAY. I notice that in section 2 you provide that three discreet persons shall be appointed as assessors, who shall have been bona fide residents of the District for at least five years, and who shall be conversant with real-estate values therein. These men are to be appointed as a permanent board of assistant assessors, and are to hold office for a term of three years, unless sooner removed. The only qualification required seems to be that these men shall have resided in the District for five years and shall be men conversant with real-estate values. Therefore it would follow, I suppose, that these assessors need not be interested as property owners at all.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. They need not be property owners at all. We think that the determination as to who should be assessors may very well be left to the appointing power, as they will be interested in having suitable persons appointed.

Mr. RAY. Does the gentleman think—of course he can discuss this question hereafter, if he desires—that it is proper or wise to vest in three men, as this bill does, the power to fix the valuation of real estate for the purpose of taxation if those men own no property themselves?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I think we would get perhaps a more equal assessment if discreet and competent persons owning no real estate in the District were appointed.

Mr. RAY. You think it will be better, then, if they are not property owners?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I do, provided the officers are otherwise fit and competent.

Mr. RAY. That is all I care to ask the gentleman now. I am much obliged to him for his courtesy.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary, as I deem, to discuss at any length the provisions of this bill.

Mr. KILGORE. Before the gentleman proceeds will he allow me a suggestion?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the second section of this bill provides that the Commissioners may appoint a board of assistant assessors who can hold their offices for life, each receiving a salary of $3,000 a year. Now, is it not a little out of the usual order for the Commissioners to have authority to appoint officers of the District of Columbia?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Is there anything said about the appointment being for life?

Mr. KILGORE. The bill says "during the pleasure of the Commissioners."

Mr. COBB of Alabama. No; it says "for three years."

Mr. KILGORE. That may be an amendment of the committee.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That will be offered as an amendment.

Mr. KILGORE. The Clerk did not so read the bill. But I want to ask, is it not a little out of the usual order for the Commissioners to appoint officers of the District of Columbia at all?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. We think that the Commissioners would constitute the best appointing power.

Mr. KILGORE. For all the officers of the District?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. No; but this is a matter connected immediately with the management of District affairs—the assessment and collection of taxes of the District—and over these subject-matters the District Commissioners have large control, and ought to have.

Mr. KILGORE. Is it competent for Congress to vest this authority in the Commissioners?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I think so.

Mr. KILGORE. Have you made an investigation with reference to that question?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Well, Congress has exclusive power of legislation in the District of Columbia——

Mr. KILGORE. I know that; but Congress can not provide for the appointment of officers of the District except in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I do not know of any provision that would prevent such a method of appointment as we propose. If there is any obstacle of that kind we could vest the appointing power in the President.

Mr. KILGORE. That would be in the line of the suggestion I have made to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HEARD. I would suggest to the gentleman from Texas that the Commissioners under the existing law have the appointment of most if not all the subordinate officers of the District.

Mr. KILGORE. Policemen and officers of that kind.

Mr. HEARD. Street inspectors and other officers of that sort; and the assessor, I understand, is now appointed by them under existing law.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The officers provided for in this bill do not belong to that class, and we have provided in the bill for the method of their appointment and the term of their office, which is different from the existing law.

Mr. KILGORE. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that, inasmuch as it has been sometimes alleged that some of the officials in the city of Washington are notoriously incompetent, it would be well enough to have somebody else decide as to their appointment rather than the District Commissioners, especially in regard to such offices as have control of the assessment and collection of the taxes.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. We shall make no strenuous opposition——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Texas will give me his attention a moment. If you make these assessors independent of the Commissioners, and have them appointed by the President of the United States, then they could only be removed by him, and so you would take the responsibility away from where it properly belongs. You charge the responsibility upon the Commissioners for the proper government of the District of Columbia, and at the same time take from them that strict oversight that they ought to have and would have if these men were their creatures, appointed by them and subject to removal for cause by them.

Mr. KILGORE. But it would not prevent the Commissioners from supervising their work, although these assessors may be appointed by the President.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. But it is important, as suggested by my colleague, and the committee so thought, that the power should be vested somewhere, and that these parties should be removable by the Commissioners, if necessary, for cause. There is no more important position under the District government than the assessors.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that, too; but they ought to be so organized that they could not degenerate into a "ring," as is frequently the case in cities like Washington and other large cities.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Well, if you can not govern the city of Washington through the District Commissioners without the formation of a ring, I suggest to my friend from Texas that we had better change the form of government for the city.

Mr. KILGORE. That ought to be done in the interest of good government, as well as in the interest of economical government.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Well, that does not come up now. When that question arises as to whether we shall change the form of government or not, the gentleman from Texas may find me alongside of him and traveling the same path.

Mr. KILGORE. I think all of the opportunities for collusions and the organization of rings ought to be removed as far as possible by the legislation of Congress.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I do not believe that there is any danger of ring rule so far as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are concerned.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not wish to be understood as charging that they would enter into any such combination. But, from what we know of human nature, it is no different here from what it is in any other city throughout the country, where such things have been known to prevail.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The trouble with all legislation for the District of Columbia is that the members of the House, or a great many of them, are too prone to think that everything pertaining to the management of District affairs goes into a combination or ring which endeavors to control and manipulate affairs in the District. They even go so far in their uncharitable remarks sometimes as to insinuate that members of the District committee are connected with such matters.

Mr. KILGORE. It is charged as a matter of fact that real estate in this city is only assessed for taxation at about one-fourth of its value.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. And we are proposing by this very bill to correct, as far as practicable, that evil.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that is the purpose of the bill; but the Commissioners must have been somewhat responsible for the default heretofore; and therefore I do not think they ought to be connected with the new assessment.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. They have not been responsible, for they had neither the authority nor the power to control this very question, the assessing and collecting of taxes.

Mr. KILGORE. They had the power to supervise the work of the assessment if they had chosen to do so.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. No, sir; the gentleman is mistaken. They had not control or specific power in that regard. They had general control over the subject, but not the control which this bill seeks to give them.

Mr. KILGORE. It has also been alleged that of millions of dollars' worth of personal property in this city but very little is listed for taxation, and a great deal of revenue is lost thereby.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I will state to the gentleman from Texas that the two systems of collecting taxes on real estate and personal property are entirely different.

Mr. KILGORE. Some one is certainly responsible for the collecting of the taxes on personal property.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Not at all; because the great body of the revenue of the District comes from the taxes on real estate and improvements.

Mr. KILGORE. Because of the defects in the law.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. But we can deal with the question of personal property when we come to that matter. It is not involved here at all.

Mr. Chairman, the little colloquy that has been going on between the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and myself has to some extent brought out the purposes and objects of this bill. It is undoubtedly true, as he suggests, that hitherto there has been great difficulty in having proper assessments made on real property and improvements for purposes of taxation in this District and in collecting those taxes when assessed.

The great difficulty that has been experienced hitherto has been in equalizing values. Under the present law it is almost impossible that that should be done. The tax assessors, as a rule, have been selected to meet the particular emergency and for a short time. They have not acted together, but one assistant assessor has assessed values here, and another there, and another yonder, in different portions of the District. The men have not always been competent to perform the work; because it is almost impossible to get men who are so competent for so short a time and for the compensation allowed.

Taxpayers will usually be content, no matter what value may be put upon their property, if they believe that the assessment is equal, and if they are paying no more in proportion to the value of their property than others are paying. Under the existing assessments that is not the case. In the last assessment numerous errors were committed in this regard. The Congress of the United States, in order to remedy these well-known and well-recognized evils, provided by special law that there should be a board of equalization appointed by the President, to continue in office for a certain length of time, who should go over these assessments, hear proofs, and make an equalization of values, so that the hardships that were pressing upon the people of the District by reason of the inequalities of valuation might be remedied.

These officers went to work under the authority thus conferred, and did to a certain extent accomplish the purposes of their appointment. But before they had gone through with the assessments, or to any considerable extent even entered upon their work, the time limited for their appointment expired, and it leaves now this condition of things, that all over the District of Columbia property owners are coming forward and complaining, and bringing evidence of the justice of their complaints, that their property has been overvalued as compared with the property of their neighbors.

The Commissioners recognize these things as existing. The tax assessors and all the tax officers who have to do with these assessment books know that these inequalities exist, and they know that great hardship is being inflicted on many of the best citizens of this District.

Now, this condition of affairs will always exist until by some permanent system the possibility of its occuring is remedied. We attempt to do that in this bill. We attempt to do it by securing as assessors of value competent men—men skilled in the values of property in this District, men who can afford, by reason of the compensation allowed them, to give their whole time and attention to this work.

The mere question of paying officers for work of this kind amounts to nothing—is a mere trifle compared with the immense importance of the work to be done. Not only do we propose in the bill to provide for a fair assessment, but also to provide for an equal assessment, and this we attempt to secure by requiring these assistant assessors, who are to be permanent officers with a good salary, to go together and inspect every bit of property in this District from one end of it to the other, so that when their work is done, when their assessment has been made, there will be really very little work to do for a board of equalization.

Mr. COX. Is their action final?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. No; I will come to that afterwards. If these men are the men that we will presume they will be—because good and competent men can be secured at a salary of $3,000 per annum for three years, and being required to give their whole time to this work—when their assessment has been completed, going together, viewing the property together, comparing their opinions as they go along and their judgments, you can see at once that when the assessment is returned it is very likely that it will meet the objection as to inequalities.

But now, in order to avoid any possible danger of these complaints hereafter, these three assessors, together with the regular tax assessor, are made to constitute a board of equalization for five months in the year. On the 1st of January these assessors must return their assessment. From the 1st of January until the 1st of June, five months, they are to sit as an equalizing board with the assessor to hear complaints and remedy any defects that may have occurred in the assessment made by the assistant assessors. So that it seems to us a more perfect method could not be devised by which this matter, which is always felt to be of overshadowing proportions, namely, equality in the assessments of value for taxation, shall be remedied in the District of Columbia.

Now, that is the main purpose of the bill, and we sought for and could not find any other method by which we could so thoroughly accomplish it as in the bill now proposed. It may be said that these assessors may in the three years not be employed all the time in making this assessment and in the equalization process after making it. In order to avoid that objection we require that these officers shall be under the control of the District Commissioners for the performance of any labor in connection with the discharge of their duties, in connection with the tax office, that the District Commissioners may prescribe for them, and I am told by the Commissioners that there will be no difficulty in finding an abundance of employment for them at all times, and employment of a character that will require the talent, the ability, and experience of men such as we hope will be appointed on this board of assessors.

In order to provide further employment, we made this board of assessors, and the three assistants of the assessors, the excise board of the District of Columbia, taking that duty, which is now so burdensome to the Commissioners, and which is consuming so much of their time, which would be otherwise employed by the Commissioners, and conferring it upon that board. We do that for two reasons: First, to relieve the Commissioners; secondly, we believe that these four men, going, as they do, at all times all over the District, and becoming of necessity advised of the condition of the District in all its quarters, they can best tell where there may with propriety be allowed a house for the sale of spirituous liquors, and who would be the proper persons to be allowed to sell liquor under license. So, taking all these things in connection, we believe the purpose sought to be accomplished will be done in this bill.

We have given the matter careful consideration, have had many consultations with the tax assessor and the Commissioners, and have attempted to frame a bill with as many safeguards as possible to accomplish the real purpose intended by the passage of the bill.

Mr. COX. Now, will the gentleman explain to us the final action of this board of assessors?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Their final action is on the board of equalization.

Mr. COX. What does the action of the board of assessors do in the matter of granting liquor licenses?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The Commissioners will supervise all that, but they are the men who under the law will best determine all these questions as to the granting of licenses for the sale of liquors, the hearing of complaints, and determining various questions that are continuously arising under the liquor law of the District of Columbia.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. With pleasure.

Mr. KILGORE. Do you propose by this bill to lodge authority in these assistants to the board of assessors to correct assessments? For instance, to enlarge and increase the assessments that have been rendered in years previous.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Of course that is in the bill.

Mr. KILGORE (continuing). And which has been rendered against the wrong party.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. They are given power to take any action that may be found necessary.

Mr. KILGORE. And they can increase assessments?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. They can, most certainly.

Mr. KILGORE. Do you give them specific authority in this bill?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. We give them specific authority in this bill.

Mr. RAY. This seems a good time to make an inquiry of the gentleman without breaking into his argument.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I am ready to answer any question the gentleman desires to ask. We want as perfect a bill as we can get.

Mr. RAY. Does this bill meet the approval of the Commissioners?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. It does. It was prepared by them or under their supervision.

Mr. RAY. I want to inquire of the gentleman as to the proviso inserted as an amendment on page 3 of the bill.

Provided, That any other or future collection of taxes on real property——

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That is not the proviso I am going to offer. Here is the proviso in that connection I will read to the gentleman. It is in the same spirit, but different in language.

Mr. RAY. Well, it struck me that the proviso in the bill would be unconstitutional. Now, as I understand, and I have made some inquiry, while I may be misinformed, I understand there is a tax already assessed and levied which is in process of collection.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Yes; it may be.

Mr. RAY. And some of the taxpayers have paid their taxes under that assessment.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. No; the tax year does not correspond with the calendar year. The tax year commences with November of each year.

Mr. HEARD. If my colleague will allow me, I think he misapprehends the proposition. As my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] says, there are two installments in the payment of taxes—due respectively in May and November—and I think my colleague will correct himself, upon reflection, that it is not designed to operate upon the assessment already made, so far as the equalization is concerned.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The assessment, and not the collection.

Mr. HEARD. Well, the collection is suspended, as I understand.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Of course.

Mr. HEARD. Until an opportunity for equalization may be had; and therefore it is the purpose of the bill to defer the collection until after the date of the November collection.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Oh, yes. In a moment I will make that clear. Under existing law an assessment of property is made, which assessment when returned remains in force for three years, and for three years all collections are made upon this assessment. The taxes are collected upon this assessment twice annually—in November and May of each year—the first collection, for the first half of the tax year, occurring in November, the second collection occurring in May. Now, under the last assessment the taxes due in May have all been collected and paid.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Not all.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. In contemplation of law all have been collected. We do not propose to disturb the law in reference to that matter. If anything remains due on that assessment, the officers of the District will go on and collect it under existing law. We propose to make no distinction as to that matter between those who have paid and those who are yet to pay.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Will the gentleman allow me one suggestion? The tax year of the District of Columbia corresponds exactly with the fiscal year of the United States Government.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I think so.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. That is the fact.

Mr. RAY. Then I understand the arrangement now proposed would not be liable to the objection that a portion of the taxes would be collected under one system or one assessment, and the remainder under another?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Not at all; because no taxes have yet been paid for the immediately coming half of the tax year, the collections for which will be made next November. The taxes which were due and payable in May are not interfered with by the bill. If any of those taxes remain uncollected, they will be collected under existing law, with the penalties that the law attaches.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if there are no further questions——

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I would be glad to have the gentleman explain the proposed amendment to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] called attention.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The proposed amendment which I have in my hand is a little different in form from the provision reported in the bill. But for this amendment, or something equivalent to it, the tax collector would go on and enforce the collection of taxes in November.

Now, inasmuch as we are trying to reach an equalization of values, we think it just that this process of equalization shall apply to all taxes which may be due and collectible hereafter; hence we provide that in November there shall be no collection of taxes, but the collection of taxes which would be due and payable in November will be suspended until the following May, when the taxes already accrued will be collected with the taxes belonging to that half of the fiscal year. This will give to the board of equalization an opportunity meanwhile to equalize all taxes which are to become due and payable in the future.

Mr. RAY. Will not this postponement of the collection of taxes embarrass the District authorities?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Not at all. This amendment was drawn by the assessor with reference to the manner in which he is called upon by law to discharge his duties.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And the revenues of the District will meanwhile be sufficient.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The revenues of the District meanwhile will be sufficient to meet the requirements of the District. That matter was all gone over and ascertained.

Now, if no further debate is desired, I ask that the bill be read by sections for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, general debate will be considered as closed, and the bill will be read by sections for amendment.

There was no objection.

Section 1 was read, and no amendment was offered.

Section 2 was read, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall appoint three discreet persons, who shall have been bona fide residents of the District of Columbia for the period of at least ten years, and conversant with real estate values therein, as a permanent board of assistant assessors, who shall hold office at the pleasure of said Commissioners, and shall each receive a salary of $3,000 annually. Each person so appointed on said board shall, within ten days after receiving notice thereof, take and subscribe an oath to diligently, faithfully, and impartially perform all and singular the duties imposed upon him by this act. If any such appointee shall fail to qualify, as aforesaid, within the time prescribed, or shall fail to enter upon the discharge of his duties within fifteen days after such qualification, the appointment shall be void, and the Commissioners shall forthwith appoint another suitable person, who shall qualify as above provided; and when appointed and qualified as aforesaid, said board of assistant assessors shall immediately proceed to hear and consider such complaints as may be made regarding the assessment returned by the board of three members appointed by the President of the United States under the act of August 5, 1892, revise and equalize said assessment, and make return to the assessor of the District of Columbia of the revision and equalization on or before the first Monday of August, 1894. And said revision and equalization so returned shall be the basis of assessment for the collection of taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and until the next general assessment is made and returned, as provided for in this act. And said Commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to appoint a clerk for said board of assistant assessors at a salary of $1,200 per annum; and said clerk shall also be the clerk for the board of equalization and review hereinafter provided for.

The following amendments reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia were read and agreed to:

In line 4, strike out "ten" and insert "five;" so as to read: "For the period of at least five years."

In line 6, strike out "at the pleasure of said Commissioners" and insert "for a term of three years, unless sooner removed by said Commissioners for cause satisfactory to them."

In line 28, strike out "August, 1894," and insert "January, 1895."

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 33, after the word "act," insert:

"Provided, That the collection of the tax on real property and improvements thereon which will become due and payable in the month of November, 1894, be, and the same is hereby, suspended until the month of May in the year 1895, at which time said tax shall be due and payable and the collection thereof shall be enforced in all respects as provided under then existing law in the collection of the taxes on real property and improvements thereof for the second half of the tax year ending June 30, 1895."

And strike out the amendment proposed by the committee, printed in the bill as follows:

"Provided, That any other or future collection of taxes on real property and improvements thereon during this current year, 1894, be, and the same is hereby, suspended, and the taxes now due or to be due and collected on said property and improvements under existing law in the month of November of this year shall be due and collected at the time and in the manner provided herein for the collection of taxes on real property and improvements thereon for the first half of the year 1895."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I object. I want to hear an explanation from the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The purpose is simply to make it plainer.

Mr. HEPBURN. Why does the committee propose to suspend the collection of the tax which should be paid in November next until May?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. In order that the board of equalization may equalize the taxes and give the benefit to the taxpayers of the amount to be collected in November. That is all.

There is a point to which I wish to call the attention of the committee in this connection. At the end of the section there is a provison in the following words:

And said clerk shall also be the clerk for the board of equalization and review hereinafter provided for.

The assessor tells me that there will be ample work for both of these clerks, and that the clerk of the board of equalization and review ought not to be made the clerk of the board of assessors also. Under the statement that both are needed in the office, I move to strike out all after the words "per annum," in line 45 of section 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the amendment first suggested by the gentleman from Alabama will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, to this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "annually," in line 9, insert:

"And the assessor of the District of Columbia shall hereafter receive a salary of $3,500 per annum."

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Commissioners shall furnish each member of said board of assistant assessors with the necessary maps and field books, which shall contain an accurate list of each tract, together with a pertinent description of the real property situate in the District of Columbia, and, as far as may be known, the owner thereof; and also such blanks, forms, books, surveys, and plats as may be necessary for a systematic statement of the property to be assessed, and shall also furnish the said board of assistant assessors with the necessary conveyance to view said property for assessment. Upon the completion of the assessment the said board of assistant assessors shall deposit with the assessor of the District of Columbia all maps, field books, surveys, and plats, and all notes and memoranda thereof.

Mr. RAY. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 4, page 4, line 14 of the bill add the words: "And the same shall be open to inspection by any taxpayer of said District."

Mr. COBB, of Alabama. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That real estate in Washington and Georgetown shall be assessed according to the number of the squares and lots thereof, parts of lots, and upon the number of square or superficial feet in each square, or lot, or parts of a lot; and in that part of the District outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown lands used for agricultural purposes shall be assessed by the acre, and suburban lots by the square foot, as in the cities of Washington and Georgetown. Provided, That whenever any agricultural lands are platted and the platting recorded, said lands shall be assessed by the square foot.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee propose to strike out this section and insert in lieu of it what the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations touching the manner in which the real property shall be described in the assessments returned by the assessors as they may deem best.

The amendment to strike out and insert was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. With reference to this section, I would like to ask an explanation of why this proposed change is insisted upon by the committee?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. We thought the Commissioners had better be left discretion, so as to prescribe the kind of description that should be used by these officers. The gentleman will understand that the time might come when it would not be advisable to describe it as provided in this section as originally drawn; and therefore to meet any change of conditions that might occur in the District, so far as the description of property is concerned, we thought it better to leave it with the discretion of the Commissioners to prescribe the manner.

Mr. HEPBURN. But does not the amendment go very much further than that?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. It was not so intended.

Mr. HEPBURN. Under the provisions of section 5 there are certain necessary rules that must be observed. Now, you change those entirely. For instance, the act provides that surburban property should be assessed by the square foot. Under the amendment you simply permit the Commissioners to designate other plans.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. We simply intended that that should apply to the manner of description.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is not there more than a mere description in it?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I think not. Certainly such was not the intention in drawing the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That said board of assistant assessors shall, acting collectively in all cases, from actual view and from the best sources of information in its reach, determine the value of each separate tract or lot of real property in the District of Columbia in lawful money, and shall separately estimate the value of all improvements on any tract or lot, and shall note the same in the proper field book, which shall be carried out as part of the value of such tract or lot, and shall also return the dimensions of each tract or lot, and shall perform such other official duties, not inconsistent with the proper discharge of the duties specially imposed by this act, as may be required of them by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. RAY. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 3, after the word "the," insert the words "fair market;" so as to read:

"Determine the fair market value of each separate tract or lot," etc.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will direct his attention to pages 6 and 7, the last lines of page 6 and the first on page 7, he will see that his object is provided for in prescribing the duties of the board of equalization. The words used there are:

So that each lot and tract and the improvements thereon shall be entered upon the tax list at their value in money.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman were to act under this bill, what would he understand is to guide him—the market value in money?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The value in money. "Market value" is a very indefinite term.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. The cash value.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do you mean the present cash value at a forced sale, or present cash value as it would sell in the market?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The cash value at a forced sale is not a proper basis.

Mr. RAY. Well, I think not. Then why not say, at a fair market value?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Because I think the bill provides for that very thing.

Mr. RAY. If that is so, you should have no objection to this amendment.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Where does your amendment come in?

Mr. RAY. It comes in on line 3, page 5, in section 6, and I propose to make it read in this way:

SEC. 6. That said board of assistant assessors shall, acting collectively in all cases, from actual view and from the best sources of information in its reach, determine the fair market value in money of each separate tract or lot of real property in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I submit to the gentleman that the word "value" is expressive enough. That means the actual money value of the property at the time.

Mr. RAY. Yes; but how are you to determine that value in money when you are getting at it not by an actual sale but for purposes of assessment? Different men would have different ideas of the meaning of this language now in the bill. Some would say that it means the cash value at a forced sale, and others would say that it means the fair market value in money. Now, you say you think you have provided for the fair market value in money.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. "Fair value"—that covers everything. Now, you must remember that this assessment is for three years. It may be made at a time of great depression in values here in this District that may pass away before the expiration of the three years, and it would be better to leave this matter to the fair, honest judgment of these assessors than to try to confine them by describing and defining the word value.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentlemen permit me just there to give to the committee the idea of these assessors, or of certain assessors that we have had in this city, as to what should be done in cases of this kind. I read from a report made to the first session of the Fifty-second Congress:

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF ASSESSORS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, April 18, 1892.

HON. SIR: Agreeably to the request of your committee, herewith please find copy of the resolutions adopted by said board July 7, 1891, as its rule of action in making assessments:

"Resolved, That in making the assessment of real property in the District of Columbia for the triennial period beginning with the fiscal year 1893, the terms 'value' and 'true value,' used in the existing law governing it, shall be regarded as meaning one and the same thing, to wit, true or intrinsic value, and that the measure of such true or intrinsic value is that amount in lawful money which such property would probably bring at forced sale under adverse circumstances.

"Resolved, That the above rule of 'value' and 'true value' shall be adhered to equally in all parts of the said District in making the said assessment."

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN F. COOK, Secretary.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Is that the assessor's report?

Mr. HEPBURN. This is the report of assessment of taxes in the District of Columbia made to the first session of the Fifty-second Congress.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Who makes that resolve?

Mr. HEPBURN. This resolve was made by the board of assessors of the District of Columbia on the 7th of July, 1891.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. We propose to have a different board of assessors from any we have ever had before, more competent men.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes; but you are using precisely the same words under which a board, construing the words "value" and "true value," say that they are identical, and say that, as applied to the duties of assessors, they shall mean that value that the property would bring at forced sale under adverse circumstances. Now, do you want to continue that?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. No, I do not.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then ought you not to use such language as that no board can give that kind of construction to it in the future?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I am perfectly willing to do it, but I should like to ask you, do you believe in the first place that this resolution is founded in good plain common sense?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not a thought that it is founded in good common sense; but a board of assessors, possibly of the same class of men as those who will be selected, did exercise that want of good sense with regard to this business proposition.

Now, I want their duties so defined, their instructions so explicit that they can not indulge in idiosyncrasies so closely bordering on idiocy in the future.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Well, now do you not believe that the words "market value" would fit that resolution just as well as the word "value?"

Mr. HEPBURN. I think so.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Then you do not improve it. The truth of the matter is that you can not frame a bill here so as to avoid just such resolutions as those.

Mr. HEPBURN. I am very sorry that this committee, which has given the measure consideration so long ——

Mr. COBB of Alabama. This committee will accept any language that you will put in this bill, the result of which will force the assessors to report the property of the District at its value—uniform value in money.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, have the committee done that, in their judgment?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. We tried to do it. We thought that in using the word "value" here, and further over by the words we used, to which I called the attention of the gentleman from New York, we have expressed the intention of Congress that the worth of this property should be the basis of taxation.

Mr. HEPBURN. You have simply used the word "value," and the board of assessors have given their interpretation of that word "value" as they understand it. You have here an illustration of what they will do with the language you propose to use in the bill. Is it not wise, then, to suggest something else in the way of giving them a fair instruction as to what is meant?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Well, we will take your suggestion if you will give us a good one.

Mr. HEARD. I was going to ask the gentleman from Iowa to suggest such phraseology as will obviate that difficulty.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not given that attention to the matter that ought to be given to it, which would enable me to say precisely how the matter can be properly solved. But the complaint that I make is that the committee is going right along in the old beaten track, a beaten track that has been so disadvantageous to the public heretofore.

Mr. HEARD. I think, if the gentleman will bear with me, that since he is competent to make a criticism of the language used, he ought to be able to make a suggestion as to the improvement that should be made.

Mr. HEPBURN. That does not follow.

Mr. HEARD. We will gladly accept any suggestion made by the gentleman from Iowa, or by other gentlemen on the floor, that will assist us in what the committee thought should be done, and that which I know gentlemen desire, giving a uniform basis of valuation and the use of such a form of expression as will lead the assessors to adopt a fair standard of valuation.

Mr. HEPBURN. I can not be expected to do in an instant that which gentlemen of the committee have failed to do in nine months; but if you will give me nine days I will undertake to furnish something that will not pursue the very course that has been pursued heretofore and with such disadvantageous results. Give me nine days and I will give you something.

Mr. HEARD. I would have no objection to giving the gentleman nine days if it did not interfere with the progress of the business of the House. The committee has not had this matter before it for nine months, but we have had it before us long enough to incline us to the belief that the language we have suggested would answer the purpose. If any gentleman here is prepared to make suggestions to assist us, we will cheerfully take the benefit of his suggestions, and if the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York will accomplish the result which he thinks, we will not object to its adoption, if the House approves it.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my proposed amendment and submit the following in lieu of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection that will be done. The Clerk will report the modified amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, page 5, after the word "the," insert, "full and actual cash;" so as to read, "determine the full and actual cash value."

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if it is not a fact that complaint has been made that the assessment has been placed much lower than it ought to be.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That is usually the case.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Is it the object of this bill to have it raised to a higher rate?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Now, I call the attention of my friends to this language on line 3, page 5. Now, I assert that it is the experience of all men that the more you attempt to define the value to be fixed upon property for the purpose of taxation the more difficulty you make about a proper assessment of the value. That is the experience everywhere, I think. Whenever you say cash value or market value, or use any other qualifying word to value, you not only do not diminish the difficulties, but you increase them, because in covering it with this qualifying adjective you have a multiplication of points, and each man attempts to define for himself what that qualification means.

I submit it is best to leave this matter to the fair discretion of these assessors, after advising them with as much emphasis as possible that we intend they shall return the property they assess at an amount which will be a fair equivalent. You must leave something to these officers.

No argument is to be drawn from the resolution which has been referred to. In my opening remarks I stated to the House the difficulties heretofore experienced in assessing property in this District for taxation; and one of the most pronounced difficulties was the apparent impossibility of getting the right kind of men to do the work. We now propose to make a change; we propose to establish a permanent system with three intelligent men as assessors at a salary of $3,000 each. These men are to devote their whole time to this work; and the presumption may reasonably be indulged that in the exercise of their discretion they will put a proper construction upon the language used in this act.

The discretion and the responsibility must be upon them at last. You can not, by introducing qualifying terms, as the gentleman from New York proposes, destroy the discretion that must be lodged in these assessors. If the English language were perfect enough not to be distorted or misconstrued—if it were possible to find words of such a character as to convey beyond question the very idea that we are attempting to impress upon this system—the committee would willingly accept an amendment. But I do not believe that the amendment here suggested will accomplish the end aimed at by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Iowa—an end which the House desires to accomplish, and in the desirability of which the committee fully concur. My firm conviction is, we had better leave the language of the bill just as it is.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On June 29, 1894:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

An act (H. R. 5806) to authorize the city of Hastings, Minn., to construct and maintain a wagon bridge over the Mississippi River.

EQUALIZATION OF REAL ESTATE VALUES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. ARNOLD in the chair.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the argument of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] is not properly based. Look at the real situation. Here was a statute conferring authority upon certain officers, who construed their authority in the way shown by the resolution I read a few moments ago. The gentleman from Alabama agrees that this construction was all wrong, faulty in the extreme, just the kind of construction that we did not want put upon the law. He is now called upon to reform the law, yet he introduces provisions precisely similar to those which have thus been construed. So that this language if enacted will be, not a condemnation of the construction heretofore given, but a legislative warrant to those men who are to be appointed under this bill to adopt the same construction which was given to the same words when used in a previous statute.

I am not called upon, nor is it my place, to show the remedy. This matter was referred to the committee for the purpose of providing, among other things, a remedy; and instead of that they reproduce the language of the old law, knowing the construction which has heretofore been given to that language.

Now, let me call attention for a moment to some of the outrages that were committed by the old board under their method of construing the identical words which are used in the present bill. In certain squares which will be found named in a table, marked 10, page 18, of the report I have referred to, the assessed value of certain blocks was $18,742,000, while the sworn value of the lots making up those blocks was $42,575,000.

The assessment, in other words, was upon a basis of 44 per cent of the sworn value of the property. Again, in certain other squares, named in table 11, the assessed value for 1892 and 1893 was $3,063,000, while the sworn valuation was $6,532,000, the assessed value being 47 per cent of the sworn valuation.

In certain other squares, named in table 12 (the first two tables are tables showing the valuation of business property, and these other tables show the valuation of residence property), the assessments were 68 per cent of the sworn valuation; and in one other table the assessment was 70 per cent of the whole value as sworn to.

Now, all I want to suggest is that we ought not to adopt precisely the same language which has received that faulty construction, and which will make possible a repetition of similar discriminations.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] should say it is not his business to suggest anything with reference to this matter. The committee have done their best work; and if it does not meet with the assent of the judgment of my friend, he ought to aid us in good faith to do what we want to do; that is, to present to the House a perfect bill.

The gentleman is at fault in another respect. The passage of this bill will not be an indorsement of the resolution to which he has referred. It was no function of those assessors to pass such a resolution as that; there was no law requiring them to do it. I never saw it before, and never heard of it. An act of the Legislature employing given language does not indorse a construction previously given to such language unless that construction has been given by judicial authority. That is the rule.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, you know better than that.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. No; I do not know better than that. That is the law: the construction must have been given by judicial authority or by some one authorized by law to make the construction and to announce it as the law of the land.

Now, I am perfectly willing to insert any language here that will more effectually accomplish the purpose—"actual value," if that will do. The only objection I have to the language proposed by the gentleman from New York is that it will, I think, defeat the purpose of this measure rather than aid in its accomplishment. I want the language of this statute to be such that property will be returned, as it ought to be returned, at a reasonable value—the actual value. Why not insert those words "actual value," or "real value," or "value in money," or "true value?" Let gentlemen suggest something that will make the language clearer, and we will cheerfully accept it.

But there is no form of expression in my opinion so objectionable as the form the gentleman proposes—"market value." It is indefinite; hard to determine. There would be as many opinions about it as there are individuals. It depends not only on the market, but on the man who construes the words. What do you mean by "market value?" Market value when? What is the standard? Who is to determine it? Who is to describe what it means? You must define some standard when you use the term "market value," and some mode of determining what that standard is to be. The only objection I have is that it makes the bill worse than it is now, not better. It seems to me that in its present form it is sufficiently clear.

Mr. RAY. I wanted to suggest to the gentleman that I have withdrawn the amendment which proposes to insert the words "fair market value" and substituted the words "full, actual cost value."

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Well, I do not know that that is very much better.

Mr. HULL. Does that mean anything more than value after all?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Nothing whatever.

Mr. HULL. It simply takes more words to express it.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Simply takes more words to express it and simply tends to make it ambiguous.

Mr. HULL. And the parties who have to define the meaning of the words "full, actual cash value" would be compelled to say that they mean only the same as the word "value."

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. The "full, actual cash value" is, after all, only the "value" of the property.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HULL. Then what is the use of multiplying words?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Not the least. I shall of course endeavor to accommodate myself to the wishes of gentlemen——

Mr. HULL. What is gained by using so many words and making the meaning ambiguous?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That is my opinion. I would suggest to my friend from New York [Mr. RAY] to let it go as it is. I think we have determined on the best term that can be used there.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who now has the floor admits that heretofore under the precise language used here——

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I do not know that it was the precise language. The gentleman from Iowa said so.

Mr. RAY (continuing). Well, I understand it to be admitted that it is the precise language, and that under that language now used here persons charged with making the assessment on real estate in this city have adopted a concededly nonsensical idea in regard to the meaning of the term used in the law. I believe that in the assessment of real estate the value fixed should be the worth of the property to a purchaser thereof, having the ability and desire to purchase for the use or uses for which the property is available, location and surroundings considered. That is what I think the rule should be; that is the rule adopted in my State, and of course I believe in it.

I do not believe in the idea of having the value of property fixed on the basis of a forced sale—especially a forced sale under adverse circumstances.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Let me ask the gentleman, as an experienced lawyer, do not you know, and do not the law writers teach you, that in framing legislation the fewer words used the better to express the idea?

Mr. RAY. That is all true, I admit, when a few words will express the idea.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. And especially when it comes to the question of determining and defining the meaning of words that are used in a statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the gentleman will have that consent.

There was no objection.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Now, I wish to call my friend's attention to another fact; that the value which will be fixed on this property by the assessors will not be final. It is true they constitute afterwards the board of assessment, but with the assessor added to them, and these four will finally determine the question as to what value ought to be fixed on property. When you give to them the power that is embodied in the bill, to which I have heretofore called your attention, you will find that the lot or tract and the improvements thereon shall be entered on the tax list at their "value in money." That is the exact text of the bill. Now, you can not make it any stronger than that. You may put the value in money all through the bill if you please, but that is what it means after all.

Mr. RAY. That you have in the bill now. In lawful money it reads, I think.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Well, I do not believe you can better it, and I think you are in danger, let me say to the gentleman, if you undertake to amend the bill, of increasing the very difficulties that you seek to remedy.

You can not do better than leave it as it is. We want a good bill, and I hope the gentleman will not insist in putting anything into the bill that will destroy or tend to impair the clearness of the terms now used.

Mr. RAY. My only purpose, I will state to the gentleman, is to avoid, if possible, an erroneous construction of the bill by those who are to enforce it.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I do not care a straw for the construction. That has no force with anybody. Do you suppose that the assessors are going to learn their duty by something that has been done heretofore in that direction?

Mr. RAY. The gentleman knows that we are in the habit, in determining matters of law in the construction of statutes, to look for precedents and see what construction has been placed upon them or like statutes in the past.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Oh, well, it depends upon who makes the precedents entirely.

Mr. RAY. And there is nothing that this House is so prone to do as to follow tradition, you know.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Yes, and sometimes we get into trouble in that way.

Mr. RAY. If these assessors would exercise their best judgment and do right I should have no objection to the bill as it is, but I fear they will follow the precedent quoted by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have a proposition here, to insert at the proper place the following:

It being the intent of this provision to require the assessment of all property to be based on the true value thereof, such value as said property would sell for on terms usual in sales of real property in the District of Columbia.

Now, there is a method of sale here in this District that is almost universal—one-third cash, the balance upon one and two years' time. It seems to me that if you will indicate that as the criterion, it will be much better than to leave this board to act as they please, in view of the resolution that the previous board adopted in construing language identical with the language you have now in this bill.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The gentleman will perceive at once that he is increasing the difficulty. What are the "usual terms of sale" in the District of Columbia? That at once becomes a question. The assessors are approached to change their valuation. The taxpayer says: "You have not complied with the law. I am prepared to show you that the term usual in this District would result quite differently from the result which you have achieved." You increase the difficulties whenever you attempt to multiply words in defining this term "value." You can not reach language that will be more expressive than this: "Value in lawful money."

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me just a moment?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Have you presented any language in your bill that will prevent this board from duplicating the resolution adopted by the board on the 7th of July, 1891?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I think so.

Mr. HEPBURN. You have precisely the same words that were in that law. You have presented the very words for construction that the old board had. You have done more than that, because here is a legislative effort, and that legislative effort has failed, to give prohibition to those men to indulge in that construction, and by failure to do that you have given legislative acquiescence in that construction, and substantially said that was correct.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Oh, the gentleman is not correct about that.

Mr. RAY. In order that this other proposition, that of the gentleman from Iowa, may come before the House properly, I will withdraw my proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 7. That said board of assistant assessors shall, on or before the first Monday of February, 1896, and every third year thereafter, make out and deliver to the assessor of the District of Columbia a return in tabular form, contained in a book to be furnished by the Commissioners, of the amount, description, and value of the real property subject to be listed for taxation in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in line 2 the word "February," and insert the word "January."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, page 5, strike out the word "February," and insert the word "January."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 9. That the assessor of the District of Columbia and the said board of assistant assessors herein provided for, with the assessor as chairman, shall compose a board of equalization and review, and as such board of equalization and review they shall convene in a room, to be provided for them by the Commissioners, on the first Monday of February, 1896, and every third year thereafter. It shall be the duty of said board of equalization and review to fairly and impartially equalize the value of real property made by the board of assistant assessors as the basis for assessment. Any three of said board of equalization and review shall constitute a quorum for business, and in the absence of the assessor a temporary chairman may be selected. They shall immediately proceed to equalize the valuations made by the board of assistant assessors so that each lot and tract and the improvements thereon shall be entered upon the tax list at their assessed value in money; and for this purpose they shall hear such complaints as may be made in respect of said assessments, and in determining them they may raise the valuations of such tracts or lots as, in their opinion, may have been returned below their value, and reduce the valuations of such as they may believe to have been returned above their value to such sum as, in their opinion, may be the value thereof.

The Committee on the District of Columbia recommended the following amendment:

In line 17, strike out the word "assessed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, on page 6, line 6, section 9, I move to strike out the word "February" and insert the word "January."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to add at the end of section 9, the following words:

It being the intent of this provision to require the assessment of all property to be based on the true value of the property, such value as said property would sell for on the terms usual in sales of real property in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I have nothing more to say about that, in addition to what I have said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at the end of section 9, the following:

It being the intent of this provision to require the assessment of all property to be based on the true value of the property, such value as said property would sell for on the terms usual in sales of real property in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing further to say in addition to what I have said. I merely insist that that amendment is not only unnecessary but that it leads to confusion. It does not simplify the bill, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it does not present the difficulty to my mind that it seems to present to the gentleman in charge of the bill. Here are four citizens of this city, long residents here, familiar with real estate values and real estate transactions. They constitute a tribunal selected because of their peculiar and special familiarity with the subject of real estate, real estate sales, and real estate values in this District. Now, they know what the usual methods of sale are. They know the usual terms of all real estate transactions. They will have no difficulty in determining what that language means. If it is the truth that the majority of sales are made on the payment of one-third down and the balance of the purchase money in equal parts in one and two years, they are conversant with that fact.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Is that a fair method of assessment of value?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think it is a fair method. I can conceive of no fairer method. That is what the property will bring in the market, under the terms and in the manner in which the sales are usually affected. That is much fairer than the old method. It is better than leaving it to the mere caprice and the mere whim of the board. Here is an indication of what the legislative purpose is, and here is an indication of the method in which they shall, in our estimation at least, seek to arrive at a finality of their duties. I can see no serious objection to this that could not be urged with equal cogency against any other form of words that you can adopt. It is an improvement on the old law. It will have the effect of teaching this board that they are not to adopt the old resolution against which I have tried to inveigh.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 12.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the announcement, and I call for tellers on that vote.

The question was taken on ordering tellers.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ARNOLD). Eight gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 23, add the words:

"But no assessment shall be increased until notice of the proposed increase shall have been given to the owner or his agent, and opportunity given to oppose the same."

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman in charge of the bill will see the propriety of that. You have provided that they may increase the assessments. This simply guards it so that no assessment shall be increased until the owner of the property or his agent shall have been notified of the proposed increase and had an opportunity to be heard on the subject.

Mr. HEARD. Does the gentleman propose only to apply that to the assessment already made?

Mr. RAY. That applies only to the board of assessors on their review of propositions to increase the assessment.

Mr. HEARD. That is on equalization; I thought your language would apply to future assessments. I think if you would say, "As the result of such equalization," that you would give it the proper limit you want it to have.

Mr. RAY. In section 9 you say of this board:

They shall immediately proceed to equalize the valuations made by the board of assistant assessors so that each lot and tract and the improvements thereon shall be entered upon the tax list at their assessed value in money; and for this purpose they shall hear such complaints as may be made in respect of said assessments, and in determining them they may raise the valuations of such tracts or lots as in their opinion may have been returned below their value.

Now, having provided that which permits the raising of assessments, I suggest this amendment, that no such increase shall be made until the owner or agent has had notice and an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. HEARD. I see the gentleman suggests that the language which precedes the amendment limits it to the real purpose intended.

Mr. RAY. That is right.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to have the amendment reported again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The amendment ought not to be adopted, I submit, exactly in that form. If the owner happens to be a nonresident and has not an agent it would be absolutely impossible to raise the value of his property under that amendment.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. Make it "him or them."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But it does not say so. The amendment of the gentleman says the agent or owner must have notice. If he is a nonresident you can not give him notice, and if has no agent you can not raise the value, however improper the assessment may have been.

Mr. RAY. If that is the objection, I suggest that there be added to the amendment the words, "and such notice may be given by mailing a notice of the proposed action to the owner or agent."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The difficulty, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, is that you can not make an amendment of this kind practicable. The taxpayer or the owner has notice in the first place of the assessment.

Now, if it be found by the board of equalization that a piece of property has been assessed a little lower than another piece in the same block, or if for any other cause they should deem it proper to raise the assessment previously made, in order that the taxation may be equal, why is it necessary that they should give the property owner notice? He has had no notice in the first place; he may not know at what figure his property has been assessed before. It seems to me the amendment is wholly unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment as now modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

But no assessment shall be increased until notice of the proposed increase shall have been given to the owner or his agent, and an opportunity given to oppose the same; and such notice may be given by mailing a notice of the proposed action to the owner or agent.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, this action of the board of assessment sitting in revision is supposed to be final. The gentleman from Tennessee says that no notice will be given of the assessment in the first place. That is undoubtedly true; but every owner of property in the District of Columbia will know that the assessors are at work, and that at a certain time the result of this work is to be filed with the District Commissioners; that he may then go and ascertain what has been done with reference to his property. Or he can make inquiry as the work progresses and ascertain from the assessors the valuation placed on his property. With that he may be content.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why, then, is it necessary to give this notice?

Mr. RAY. Because, after all that is done—after the owner of the property or his agent has ascertained from the assessor, or from the records filed with the District Commissioners, the valuation placed upon his property, this bill provides that these men composing the board of assessment may get together and without any notice whatever to the owner increase that assessment. Here in section 9 you provide that without any notice to the owner or his agent this board may double, treble, or quadruple the assessment previously made—it may be without any notice to him.

Is that just or proper? Clearly not. When this board of assessment meets for the purpose of equalization and proposes to make any changes by increasing the valuation of property, the owner of the property affected should have notice in some way of the proposed action, and should have the right to appear and be heard upon that question. That is the law in all the States, or in nearly all of them. It is a rule of justice and equity. If it be necessary to obviate the objection that the owner of the property may not be in the city or may not have an agent residing here, let it be provided that notice be served, if deemed best, by leaving it on the premises or by posting it on the front door, if the building is unoccupied. But in any event we should give the owner the right to be heard before the assessment of his property is increased.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Chairman, so far as I understand the operation of laws providing for equalization of assessments in the different States, my impression is that if any notice is given, it is not given to the individual taxpayer further than by the publication of the fact that the board of equalization will sit at a certain time. This plan is pursued in some of the States, I know. The existence of this board of equalization is notice to every taxpayer that the valuation of his property may, by the process of equalization, be raised or lowered. And this bill provides in section 11 that—

Said board of equalization and review may also, on appeal, at any time within six months after the completion of the assessments, revise and correct any errors or inequalities in the assessment of any lots or parts of land and the improvements thereon.

Therefore every taxpayer will have a knowledge of the time when the equalization is to be made and as to when he may appeal for relief, and if he believes himself wronged by the action of the equalizing board he can make his appeal to the board for the correction of any inequality or injustice at any time within six months after the assessment has been made.

It occurs to me that in the first place the existence of the law providing for equalization is notice enough to the taxpayer so that he may see whether the valuation of his property is raised or lowered; but in the second place, if notice is to be given at all, all that is necessary, it seems to me, is to provide for the publication of the notice that at a certain time the board will sit for the purpose of equalization, and that parties who deem themselves aggrieved may apply for relief against any action of the board. I submit that we should not require so expensive and troublesome a process as that each individual taxpayer should be notified by letter of the result of the equalization so far as it may affect his property.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, as will readily be seen by section 9 of this bill, the action of this equalizing board is to be final. Now, let me put to the gentleman from Missouri this case: Suppose he is the owner of property in this city, occupied or unoccupied; he has learned the valuation put upon that property by the board of assessors; he is content with it; he departs from the city, leaving his property entirely unoccupied. Now, would the gentleman be willing under such circumstances to be at the mercy of this board of equalization? Does he desire to place upon the statute book a law which would permit this board, in making its equalization, to increase at its will the valuation of his property? It seems to me not. In the State of New York and in most of the States of this Union such action is absolutely prohibited by law.

Mr. HEARD. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to say that I have no desire to be captious about this matter, and as I understand that my colleague [Mr. COBB of Alabama] in charge of the bill has expressed himself willing to accept the amendment, I will withdraw any objection I have made.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Let us hear the amendment read.

The amendment of Mr. RAY, as modified, was again read.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Suppose there is no owner to be found in the District, and no agent; then what?

Mr. RAY. Well, add to it, then, in order to cover all objections, "by posting a notice on the front door of the premises."

Mr. HEARD. Suppose there is no front door? Suppose it is an unoccupied lot?

Mr. RAY. Well, by posting a notice on the premises.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Conspicuously on the premises?

Mr. RAY. Anything to meet the objections; simply give notice to the party.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment as modified will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 23, add:

"But no assessment shall be increased until notice of the proposed increase shall have been given to the owner or his agent, and an opportunity given to oppose the same; and such notice may be given by mailing a notice of the proposed action to the owner or agent, or by posting a notice of such proposed increase on the premises."

Mr. POWERS. I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in line 7, section 9, by adding after the word "thereafter," the words:

"Public notice of the time and place of such meeting shall be given by publication for ten successive days in two daily papers in the District."

Mr. RAY. That won't help it any.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The difficulty is that the gentleman is offering his amendment at a different place in the section from the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. POWERS. I think this is the proper place for it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That may be; but it would have to be offered as an independent amendment to come in at its proper place in the paragraph of the bill, and not as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New York, which relates to another part of the same section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it can not be offered as a substitute.

Mr. POWERS. Then I offer it as an independent amendment.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. If the gentleman from New York is willing to accept the amendment, I am willing that it shall be adopted in order to avoid further controversy.

Mr. RAY. I do not think it meets the point at all.

Mr. POWERS. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama in charge of this bill to the fact that as a matter of law it strikes me there must be always a method of appeal provided in connection with each tax law, by which the taxpayer who believes himself aggrieved, or has objection to the assessment on his property, whether real or personal, may have an opportunity to appeal from the assessment and be heard in the premises.

Section 9 of this bill undertakes to provide a board of appeals. It specifies that the assistant assessors, together with the assessor himself, shall compose a board of equalization and review. Of course they can review nothing unless they have power to change the assessment as made by the assistant assessor. So I take it that they are to exercise the functions of a court of appeals on that subject.

This section further provides that they shall convene in a room to be provided for that purpose on a certain day. Now, the taxpayers of the District of Columbia have no means of learning where the room is that this board is to convene in, and it strikes me that there should be some public notice of the time and place where the board will meet to hear grievances on the part of persons who complain of their assessments. I am sure that is the usual course under our State laws, and it strikes me that it is the proper one to adopt here.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I would like to hear the substitute of the gentleman read.

The proposed substitute of Mr. POWERS was again reported.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. At each meeting, this provides. You see the meeting will be continuous for some five months.

Mr. POWERS. Of course after they have received notice of the time and place of meeting they are bound to take notice of the adjournment themselves. They are simply given notice of the time when the hearings are to take place, and they must take notice of the adjournments of the board.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. RAY. I do not understand that this is offered as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated it as an amendment to the amendment; and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. RAY. What has become of my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is still pending.

Mr. RAY. Mine was offered first.

Mr. POWERS. But it applies to later part of the section.

Mr. RAY. It is immaterial to me, however, in what order the vote is taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first submit the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. RAY. Only it seems to me, however, that this is making the last first, and first last.

The CHAIRMAN. It does look somewhat that way.

Mr. RAY. If the Chair will indulge me for a moment, I do not want the impression to go out that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] at all cures the defect at which I am aiming in the bill. Now, this meeting of the assessors sitting in revision is to be continuous for five months. What good does it do the taxpayers of the District of Columbia if you notify them of the first day of a meeting which is to continue for five months? Do you propose to have the taxpayers of the District attending before the Commissioners continually for five months to ascertain what has been done or is to be done with their property, and whether the tax upon it has been or is to be increased or diminished.

The taxpayer must attend continuously or submit to have his assessment increased without notice, and this increase may be very large and might be very unjust and oppressive. Notice of this proposed action will impose no burden on the assessors. It can be easily given and will make the exercise of the taxing power just and equitable, and remove cause for complaints in cases of increase. The object of my amendment is to provide for notice to each taxpayer when the Commissioners have determined that his assessment ought to be raised. I do not want the board of assessors to be overrun by all the taxpayers in the District inquiring whether or not their assessments are to be raised.

The board of assessors do not want these taxpayers there unless they have grievances; and when the board of assessors have determined to raise an assessment, then let them notify the owner of the property, by mail or by posting a notice on the premises, that they propose to increase the assessment, and then if the property owner desires he can come and oppose the increase. That is my object. I do not wish to have the taxpayers swarming about the board for five months, and it will be unjust to the taxpayers to compel them to be constantly on the watch for the purpose of ascertaining whether their assessments are to be increased or not. The Commissioners ought to be willing to give this notice, and afford ample opportunity to the owner to be heard.

Mr. POWERS. My friend from New York [Mr. RAY] thinks that there is a practical difficulty in carrying out this amendment which I have offered. The amendment simply provides that the time and place for the sitting of this board of review to hear persons who are aggrieved shall be advertised by publication. The gentleman intimates that the rooms of the assessors will be invaded by all the taxpayers of the District. That is an extreme view to take of this matter, Mr. Chairman. It is hardly probable that all the taxpayers of this District will be aggrieved by the assessments of their property. It is only the occasional man who complains. And suppose there are a large number of them, it is entirely within the power of this board to make such regulations for hearings as will accommodate people without putting them to great trouble to be in attendance at all times. Congress meets on the first Monday in December, and anybody having any business to do with it must take notice of the fact that Congress meets on that day and will be in continuous session for eight or ten months, so that people are obliged to hang on and wait for the convenience of Congress.

A term of court in our State is appointed to assemble on a certain Tuesday in the month, but it continues for a long time, and people having business with that court are obliged to make some arrangement by which they can be accommodated. It is so here. The same difficulty exists in the States that have precisely this proceeding, and because of the fact that I have first suggested, that only comparatively a few men have occasion to raise an objection to their assessments, it seems to me there would be no difficulty whatever on this score.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first put the question on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RAY. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes 23.

Mr. RAY. No quorum.

The Chairman appointed Mr. RAY and Mr. COBB of Alabama as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 10, noes 37.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will direct the Clerk, as required by the rule, to call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration the bill H. R. 6415, found itself without a quorum. I caused the roll to be called, as required by the rule, and herewith report the absentees to be entered on the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reports that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 6415, found itself without a quorum, whereupon he caused the roll to be called and herewith reports the names of the absentees to the House. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. One hundred and ninety having answered to their names, the committee will resume its session without intervening motion.

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. MORGAN, was obliged to leave the House on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain any motion or request. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers will resume their places.

The committee again divided; and tellers reported—ayes 31, noes 154.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS], which will be again reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, section 9, after the word "thereafter," insert "public notice of the time and place of such meeting shall be given by publication for two successive days in two daily papers in the District of Columbia."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That the valuation of the real property made and equalized as aforesaid shall be completed on or before the first Monday of June, 1896, and of every third year thereafter, and when approved by the Commissioners shall constitute the basis of taxation for the next succeeding period of three years and until another valuation is made according to law, except as hereinafter provided.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I offer an amendment in line 2, section 10.

After the word "completed" insert "as nearly as practicable," and then strike out the words "or before" in the second line.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, page 7, after the word "completed," insert the words "as nearly as practicable," and in the same line strike out the words "or before."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Then I offer another amendment. After the word "thereafter," in line 4, insert "after which date no other or further complaints of overassessment shall be received."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, after the word "thereafter," insert "after which date no other or further complaints of over assessment shall be received."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That annually, on or prior to July 1 of each year, the board of assistant assessors herein provided for shall make a list of all real property which shall have become subject to taxation, and which is not then on the tax list, and affix a value thereon, according to the rules prescribed for assessing real estate; shall make return of all new structures erected or roofed, and additions to or improvements of old structures of over $200 in value, which shall not have been theretofore assessed, specifying the tract or lot of land on which each of such structures has been erected, and the value of such structure, and they shall add such valuation to the assessment made on such tract or lot. When the improvements on any lot or tract of land shall become damaged or be destroyed from any cause, the said board shall reduce the assessment on such property to the extent of such damage. Said board may also, on appeal, at any time revise and correct any errors or inequalities in the assessment of any lots or parts of land and the improvements thereon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment recommended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "five;" so as to read, "$500 in value."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to withdraw all the amendments proposed after line 16, and to strike out from section 11 all after the word "damaged," so as to conform to the provision that has been inserted closing up these assessments on the 1st day of June of each year.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 8, line 16, strike out the following:

"Said board may also, on appeal, at any time revise and correct any errors or inequalities in the assessment of any lots or parts of land and the improvements thereon."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Now, I offer this provision as an amendment to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 11, on page 8, line 16, after the word "damage" insert the following: "Provided, That the board of equalization and review shall hear such complaints as may be made in respect of said assessments, and determine the same between the first and third Mondays of July of the same year.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That if said board of assistant assessors shall learn that any property liable to taxation has been omitted from the assessment for any previous year or years, or has been so assessed that the assessment was void, it shall be their duty at once to reassess such property for each and every year after the passage of this act for which it has escaped assessment and taxation and report the same, through the assessor, to the collector of taxes, who shall at once proceed to collect the taxes so in arrears as other taxes are collected: Provided, That no property which has escaped taxation shall be liable under this section for a period of more than three years prior to such assessment, except in the case of property involved in litigation.

Mr. RAY. I move to strike out the last word. I desire the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill. I notice that you provide here for the reassessment of property which has been omitted at any time within three years. You do not provide whether the reassessment of it shall be at its value at the time it was omitted or its value at the time the reassessment is made.

Now, suppose that for three successive years a vacant lot has been omitted from the assessment, and this year when the property is reassessed a building has been put upon it. At what period is its value to be determined?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The value would be determined for each year according to its value that year.

Mr. RAY. Then should not this section be amended so as to provide that the valuation shall be made as of the time when the property was omitted from the assessment?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I think that is the meaning of the section now. But I have no objection to any amendment which will make the meaning clearer.

Mr. RAY. I do not wish to offer an amendment if the gentleman thinks that is the effect of the present language.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I think it is. That was the intention of the committee, and I think that would be the effect of the bill as drawn. Of course no assessment should tax property for a given year when that property did not exist at the time.

Mr. RAY. The language is: "It shall be their duty at once to reassess such property for each and every year after the passage of this act."

Mr. COBB of Alabama. That language means that they shall assess the property as of the year to which the assessment applies. There can be no doubt about that.

Mr. RAY. If the gentleman thinks the meaning is clear, I do not care to offer an amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Section 15 was read, as follows:

SEC. 15. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all of the section after the word "fifteen," and insert the following:

"That said board of assessors shall hereafter constitute the excise board of the District of Columbia, and shall perform all the duties of said board according to law, and that so much of the act entitled "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquor in the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1893, as imposes that duty upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I wish the gentleman in charge of this bill would explain the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Under existing law the District Commissioners are a board of excise. They find that their duties as such are at certain times onerous; and they have enough work without performing such duty. They desire not to have imposed upon them any longer the labor connected with the granting of licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors. That is one reason for the amendment.

Another reason is that, as the committee believe, and in the view also of the District Commissioners, these tax assessors, who must necessarily become very familiar with the condition and wants of all parts of the city of Washington, will be better fitted for the discharge of these excise duties. There is no objection, so far as I have heard, by anyone to this change. The Commissioners want it, and we believe these duties will be better performed by this board than by the Commissioners themselves.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"SEC. 16. That this act shall be in force from and after its passage, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to go back to section 2 in order to make a correction. I made a mistake in asking the Committee of the Whole to strike out in that section the words following "per annum" in line 45, page 3. Those words should have been retained, and I desire to ask that they be restored to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment indicated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now, Shall the bill as amended be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6415) to provide an immediate revision and equalization of real estate values in the District of Columbia; also to provide an assessment of real estate in said District in the year 1896 and every third year thereafter; and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, and a recommendation that the bill as amended be passed.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I move the previous question on the amendments, and on the bill to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COBB of Alabama, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama the propriety of amending the title of this bill by adding the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. COBB of Alabama. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

BELT RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEARD. I desire now to call up the bill (H. R. 6596), which has been twice before the House for consideration.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6596) to amend the act approved February 18, 1893, changing the name of the Capitol, North O Street, and South Washington Railway Company to the Belt Railway Company, and granting additional power to said company.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEARD. I was about to state that fact; and the bill has been partially considered in Committee of the Whole, and was being read by sections. Before the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole to resume its consideration, I wish to state that when the bill was last before the House, and at the adjournment of the House was withdrawn, an amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] was pending, for which a substitute had been offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

It was the judgment of the committee that the bill just passed, the assessment bill, should to-day be taken up out of its order, to be presented first to the House, and I am glad that the House in passing that bill has approved of our recommendation thereon. It was further agreed that then the remaining bills, in the order in which they had been reported and stand on the Calendar, should be called up. The bill which I have now brought before the House is the first of these bills. There are two others in a similar position—the bill to amend the charter of the suburban railroad, and the bill with reference to the extension of the Washington and Georgetown road.

All three of these bills have heretofore been before the House and withdrawn on account of opposition. I wish to say now on behalf of the committee that we present this bill with the hope that the House will dispose of it in some way, either favorably or adversely. The chairman of the committee will not feel authorized to withdraw from the consideration of the House any of these bills after they are respectively presented. We will ask the House to give them consideration and dispose of them finally, so that other measures may in their turn have consideration.

I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill the title of which has been read.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. MCRAE in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6596) to amend the act approved February 18, 1893, changing the name of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company to the Belt Railway Company, and granting additional powers to said company.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 1 the following:

"Provided, That horse power may be used on the lines as herein granted for traction purposes: Provided further, however, That if said power is not abandoned on or before two years from the date of the approval of this act, and either an underground system or mechanical surface motor, excluding the overhead trolley, substituted therefor, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby empowered to order and compel the railway company to adopt some underground system or surface motor, excluding the overhead trolley: Provided, They (the Commissioners) are satisfied that there is a practical one in existence, to be selected by said company and approved by said Commissioners. And if such change is not completed within one year from the date of said order the railway company shall pay to the District of Columbia, in addition to all other taxes now required to be paid by said company, an annual tax of $250 for each and every car operated by horse on that portion of its line as herein granted."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was last under consideration the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] had offered an amendment, and to that I had offered the substitute which has just been read. I will now withdraw the amendment I offered, and let the vote be taken directly on that of the gentleman from Iowa, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of Section 1:

"Provided, That all of the cars of the said Belt Railway Company shall after the 1st day of January, 1896, be operated by an underground electric or cable motive power."

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is that the only amendment now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is so informed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is all, and the debate was exhausted. We had commenced to vote on the amendment and no quorum was present.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct. The question is on the amendment first read.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. COOMBS), there were—ayes 46, noes 4.

Mr. COOMBS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. COOMBS and Mr. HEARD as tellers.

The committee proceeded to divide——

Mr. COOMBS (one of the tellers). Mr. Chairman, I have arranged with the committee to withdraw the point of no quorum, they agreeing to accept this addition to the amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is withdrawn.

Mr. HAINES. I renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places.

The tellers reported—ayes 127, noes 1.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum has voted, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called; when the following-named members failed to answer to their names:

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCRAE reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6596, had found itself without a quorum, whereupon he had directed the roll to be called, and now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. One hundred and ninety-two members, more than a quorum, having answered to their names, the committee will resume its session.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 132, noes 1.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am quite well satisfied that the members present did not hear the announcement of the Chair.

Mr. REED. Perhaps a double enforcement of section 40, to which officers of the House would undoubtedly consent, might have a beneficial effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will continue the count.

The tellers reported—ayes 151, noes 1.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum has voted.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask the enforcement of the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

During the roll call—

Mr. HAINES withdrew the point of no quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk resumed and completed the calling of the roll.

Mr. COOMBS. The gentleman from Missouri, Mr. MORGAN, is sick.

The committe rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCRAE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 6596, had found itself without a quorum, and that he had thereupon caused the roll to be called in accordance with the rule, and herewith reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. One hundred and ninety-one gentlemen, more than a quorum, being present, the committee will resume its session.

The committee accordingly resumed its session, and took up the consideration of the bill H. R. 6593, with Mr. MCRAE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The committee divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 125, noes 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll; when the following members failed to answer to their names:

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House, having under consideration the bill H. R. 6596, again finding itself without a quorum, I caused the roll to be called, and herewith report the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas, chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reports that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 6596, found itself without a quorum, that he caused the roll to be called, and now reports the absentees to the House. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. One hundred and sixty-seven gentlemen have answered to their names.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, as the roll call discloses the fact that a quorum is not present, I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. RICHARDS, from the Committee on Claims, reported adversely the bill (H. R. 2719) referring the claims of certain banks of the city of San Francisco, Cal., to the Court of Claims; which, with the accompanying report (No. 1215), was ordered to be printed and lie on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5403) to remove the charge of desertion against Thomas William Lynch, alias William Stevens, United States Navy, and the same was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and a resolution of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. STRAUS: A bill (H. R. 7663) to regulate railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WEADOCK: A bill (H. R. 7664) to amend Rule 12 of section 4233, relative to lights on rowboats in Detroit River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7666) to amend and re-enact section 3877 of the Revised Statutes, relating to second-class mail matter—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HEARD (by request): A bill (H. R. 7665) to regulate the sale of milk in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BALDWIN: A bill (H. R. 7667) for locating and constructing a ship canal from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: A bill (H. R. 7668) to authorize the St. Louis, Avoyelles and Southwestern Railway Company to bridge Bayou Des Glaises and the Atchafalaya River, in the State of Louisiana—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HALL of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 7669) for the protection of trade-marks and labels—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DRAPER: A resolution authorizing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire what increase, if any, should be made in the Army of the United States, and to report the recommendation to the House—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELL of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 7670) for the relief of Barbary Brooks—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYES: A bill (H. R. 7671) granting a pension to Elizabeth L. Markham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 7672) pensioning soldiers who served in the Cayuse Indian war—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PRICE: A bill (H. R. 7673) for the relief of the estate of Dr. Joseph H. Pugh—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TURNER of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 7674) for the relief of Reuben A. Finnell—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7675) to pension Isabell Noonan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7676) for the relief of Henry Neff—to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALDWIN: Protest of citizens of Brainard, Minn., against appropriations for support of Indian schools—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BLAIR: Papers to accompany House bill 7652—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOEN: Petition of citizens of Hennepin County, Minn., for a special election to decide the questions of money, tariff, and an income tax by a direct vote of the people—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BROSIUS: Two petitions of citizens of Lancaster, Pa., in favor of Manderson-Hainer bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of J. B. Corey, a citizen of Pittsburg, Pa., praying for legislation with respect to unlawful organizations—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRAHAM: Petition of Arthur J. Audett, chairman of Tariff Committee Subordinate Association, No. 1, of the Lithographers' International Protective and Insurance Association of the United States and Canada, indorsing an amendment to the Wilson tariff bill passed by the Senate—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HOUK: Petition of the Life Insurance Association of Tennessee, against the tax upon life insurance companies, etc.—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PENCE: Resolution of the People's party of Charles County, Md., opposing any compromise with the Pacific Railroads and urging the foreclosure of the mortgages on said roads, and that the same be owned by the United States and run in the interest of the people—to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Also, resolution by the Western Slope Congress of Colorado, praying that the reservations of the western slope of the State of Colorado be abolished in the interest of the commerce and development of the State—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: Papers to accompany claim of Seth Barnes, of Washington Parish, La.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE: Petition of citizens of Ohio, for passage of bill restricting immigration—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STORER: Memorial of Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Cincinnati, Manufacturers' Association of Cincinnati and Hamilton County, Cincinnati Freight Bureau, Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, Young Men's Business Club of Cincinnati, Cincinnati Real Estate and Stock Exchange, Builders' Exchange, Ohio Mechanics' Institute, Cincinnati Board of Trade and Transportation, and the Commercial Club of Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring appropriation for fast mail service between Cincinnati and the South—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. STRAUS: Petition of John M. Fuchs, of New York City, asking that he be granted a pension, to accompany House bill 778—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 10, 1894.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when,

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 190) for the benefit of sundry persons residing in the vicinity of Jefferson Barracks, Mo.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the resolution to print 4,000 extra copies of the report of the select committee of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia on typhoid and malarial fevers and other preventable diseases.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 441) for the relief of Samuel Collins, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the memorial of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, of New York, remonstrating against the ratification of the Chinese treaty; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PEFFER. I am in receipt of a communication from sundry citizens of Indian Territory, inwhich they complain very bitterly of certain alleged cruelties practiced upon them by United States troops and persons in the employ of corporations—railway corporations I suppose, they are not mentioned—and asking an investigation thereof upon the part of Congress. There is no evidence of the cruelties alleged to have been practiced accompanying the petition. I think, therefore, that the petition had better be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and their attention having been called to the matter in this way, I hope they will look into it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill., praying that the rate of duty on laces and embroideries made wholly or in part of metal, cotton, flax, silk, or wool, be not less than 60 per cent ad valorem; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Cook County, Ill., and a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Illinois, praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Waukegan, Ill., and a petition of sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McMILLAN presented the petition of R. McKinnel and sundry other citizens of Detroit, Mich., and the petition of Fred Z. Zimmerman and sundry other citizens of Saginaw, Mich., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a petition signed by E. C. Keene and 98 other voters of Hayes County, Nebr., praying that an appropriation of $25,000 be made for the purpose of sinking experimental artesian wells. My inclination would be to send the petition to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, but the matter is of such great importance to that section of the country that I hope the Committee on Appropriations may give it consideration in connection with one of the appropriation bills. I therefore move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DOLPH. To what section of country does the matter refer?

Mr. MANDERSON. To the western part of Nebraska, known as the semiarid section.

Mr. DOLPH. It is confined to the State of Nebraska?

Mr. MANDERSON. The petition is so confined. I should be very glad to see the experiment made very general.

Mr. DOLPH. I thought the Senator was offering an amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. No; it is a petition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection the petition will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VILAS presented the petition of J. B. Weigand and sundry other citizens of Soldiers Grove, Wis., and a petition of Camp No. 1151, Modern Woodmen of America, of Soldiers Grove, Wis., praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McLAURIN, from the Select Committee to Investigate the Geological Survey, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. MARTIN, on the 23d of April last, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6080) granting a certain military reservation to Oklahoma City, Okla., to aid the public free schools thereof, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 995) donating the military reservation at Oklahoma City, in Oklahoma Territory, to said city for the use and benefit of the free public schools thereof, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PASCO, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7334) to sell certain lands in Montgomery County, Ark., to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. KYLE, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 94) providing for an investigation relative to the work and wages of women and children, reported it without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

TARIFF BULLETINS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I report from the Committee on Finance Tariff Bulletins Nos. 52, 53, and 54 inclusive, being replies to tariff inquiries in regard to wool and manufactures of wool. I ask that the bulletins be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 2197) granting an increase of pension to Andrew T. Bovard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2198) relating to the witnessing of wills in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2199) granting a pension to Charles F. Holly; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2200) granting an increase of pension to Isaiah Mitchell; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2201) to incorporate the National Rapid Transit Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KYLE introduced a bill (S. 2202) to repeal an act entitled "An act to amend the laws relative to shipping commissioners," approved August 19, 1890; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 2203) for the relief of Arthur Connell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SQUIRE introduced a bill (S. 2204) to set apart certain lands now known as Pacific forest reserve, as a public park, to be known as Washington National Park; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 2205) for the relief of the legal representatives of William H. and Sarah M. Dunbar, late of Adams County, Miss.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SQUIRE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DUBOIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLANCHARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC AGENCIES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], coming over from a previous day.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PEFFER was read, as follows:

In view of existing social and business conditions and by way of suggesting subjects for remedial legislation—

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States—

First. That all public functions ought to be exercised by and through public agencies.

Second. That all railroads employed in interstate commerce ought to be brought into one organization under control and supervision of public officers; that charges for transportation of persons and property ought to be uniform throughout the country; that wages of employés ought to be regulated by law and paid promptly in money.

Third. That all coal beds ought to be owned and worked by the States or by the Federal Government; and the wages of all persons who work in the mines ought to be provided by law and paid in money when due.

Fourth. That all money used by the people ought to be supplied only by the Government of the United States; that the rate of interest ought to be uniform in all the States, not exceeding the net average increase of the permanent wealth of the people.

Fifth. That all revenues of the Government ought to be raised by taxes on great wealth, incomes, and real values.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACKBURN rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. I yield for morning business.

Mr. BLACKBURN. May I ask the Senator from Kansas——

Mr. PEFFER. I yield for any morning business.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not morning business.

Mr. PEFFER. Then I prefer to proceed. I shall not detain the Senate very long.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rose to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the general appropriation bill which was taken up yesterday.

Mr. PEFFER. I prefer to say what little I have to say now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kentucky that the Senator from Kansas has been recognized upon a resolution coming over from a previous day as a part of the morning business.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I merely ask the Senator from Kansas to allow the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill. If the Senator thinks that his speech is more important to the country than the appropriation bill, of course I am powerless.

Mr. PEFFER. I do think the pending resolution is more important than any appropriation bill at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. PEFFER. I will try, if the Senate will hear me patiently, not to go out of my way to say anything that ought not to be said, and I will as nearly as possible confine myself closely to the line of thought marked out. I appeal to Senators—something which I have not yet before done. In view of the seriousness of the present situation I appeal to Senators not only to be patient, but to listen; for while I am not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet, nor an alarmist, yet I have time and time again called the attention of his body, and through it of the country, to what seemed to me to be within the range of every ordinary man's horizon—that is to say, great public peril.

While the pending resolution is made up of four or five distinct parts, they all relate to one fundamental error that our country has fallen into; and I wish to direct the attention of Senators and of the people of the country at large of all classes to that fundamental error. We have permitted a few men here and a few men there, one man here and one man yonder, to usurp governmental functions. So the resolution begins with the proposition that all public functions ought to be exercised by public agencies.

What is the situation in which we find ourselves now? I shall not go through a list of the newspaper headings as I did a few days ago in reference to the coal strike. The whole country understands the situation now, though it seems that really but few people are trying to ascertain the causes and to ferret the remedy. In order that we may understand what now confronts us and how it came about, without reference to anything which took place before or what may take place hereafter, I want first to call the attention of the Senate to a statement of a man named Debs, of whom we have heard a good deal recently and may possibly hear more in the future. This man Debs, by reason of his being the official head of a great organization of railway employés, is the recognized mouthpiece of that body. On the 6th day of June Mr. Debs made a written statement of the condition from his standpoint, and it was published in the papers pretty generally, I believe.

The copy which I have is found in the Chicago Times, under date of June 6. I do not wish to read all of his statement, but will state enough of it that Senators will understand clearly what Mr. Debs wished to say and what he really did say; and I shall ask that the whole communication may be printed with my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. Debs goes on to say that, in the first place, the American Railway Union had no connection whatever with the Pullman difficulty, as it is known. Then he describes what the Pullman difficulty was. Without going into all the details, I will state by way of preface that the Pullman Company established what most people in this world believed to be an ideal community, in which all the citizens should have equal rights, in which none should have special privileges. The object was to build a community where the best modern scientific principles of hygiene, drainage, sewerage, grading, lighting, watering, and every other convenience should abound.

But while the company was doing that, while the world was looking on applauding, the company, like every other corporation of which I have ever known anything, held all of the power, all of the reins within its own grasp. That is to say, while there was sewerage, while there was light, while there was water, while there were parks, and all those desirable things, at the end of every month or of every week, as the case might be, when pay day came around, the charges that were set up against the residents of the town of Pullman for their lots and for their conveniences were deducted from their pay (just as the clothing of a soldier or extra rations or a lost gun were deducted from his pay) and the balance found to be due was paid to these people. Among these charges were rents and stated dues for the purchase of property.

After a while hard times began to pinch the company as it did everybody else, and it began to reduce the pay of the men. The men submitted patiently. Another reduction came and the men again submitted, only asking, however, that their rent charges should be reduced, that their taxes should be reduced to correspond to the amount of reduction in their wages.

Then it was found that these poor people were absolutely defenseless, absolutely powerless in the hands of a corporation that had no soul. They asked to have a reduction of their rent charges and of other charges; they asked for a little time to turn around.

All these things were denied them. Finally, the Pullman citizens came to the conclusion that they might as well starve in defense of their rights as to starve while the proprietors of the town, the organizers and controllers of the corporation, were feasting on the fat things that these men had made for them. Now the trouble is on hand, and the leader of this great corporation is off at the seashore, or on a lake, or on an island, or somewhere, refusing to entertain even a newspaper man, except to say, "I have nothing to say; the company at Chicago will look after the company's interest there"—heartless, soulless, conscienceless, Mr. President, this tyrant of tyrants.

Mr. Debs sets out all of this, except the particular details to which I referred a moment ago, and goes on appealing to the people, after having stated to the public that the Railway Union took no hand in this matter until after the grievances of the Pullman men had been submitted to them. These grievances were submitted to the local assemblies, and a national assembly of the union was held in Chicago, and the local representatives came up instructed, many of them, and a resolution was adopted unanimously that the American Railway Union should make the cause of these Pullman men the cause of the American Railway Union.

After having done that, a committee was appointed to present their conclusions and their request to the Pullman Company. Their request was that these troubles between the employés and the Pullman Company might be submitted to an impartial arbitration. This was denied. The committee again went with the same request, and that was denied. Then came—I was going to say a universal—but then came a very general dropping of tools, a dropping of employment, so that the men might go out of the traces and let the railway companies go ahead without them if they could do so. Their object was—and it was so stated to the railway managers—to boycott the Pullman cars.

The American Railway Union will not haul Pullman cars; they will not handle Pullman cars. Whether it was right or whether it was wrong, Mr. President, it is not my purpose this morning to argue, for we are not at that point now. The situation confronts us, and it is our duty to deal with it as we find it.

Without referring further to this letter, I ask that it may be incorporated with my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The paper referred to is as follows:

APPEALS TO THE PUBLIC.

President Debs issued the following clear and succint statement of the causes and status of the present conditions yesterday:

TO THE PUBLIC: So many misleading reports have been given currency in reference to the great railroad strike now in progress that I am prompted, in the interest of justice and fair play, to give the public an honest, impartial statement of the issues involved and the facts as they actually exist. My purpose in this is to have the great American public—the plain people—in every avenue of life conversant with the situation as it really is, that they who constitute the highest tribunal we know may pass just judgment upon our acts—condemn us if we are wrong and uphold us if we are right.

First of all, let it be said that the Pullman employés who struck May 6 last, did so entirely of their own accord. Their action in so doing was spontaneous and unanimous. They simply revolted against a series of deep-seated wrongs of long standing, and no power could stay them. It has been charged, and the charge has been widely accepted, that they were induced to strike by their "leaders" and labor agitators; that if left alone they would have remained at work. The charge is wholly untrue. The fact is, that the officers of the American Railway Union used all their influence to pacify the employés, and advised them repeatedly not to strike, but to bear patiently their grievances until a peaceable settlement could be effected. To the truth of this statement the employés themselves will bear willing testimony.

But the grievances of the employés, men and women, had become so aggravated, so galling, that patience deserted them and they abandoned their employment rather than submit longer to conditions against which their very souls rebelled. Whether they were right or not, let only those judge who comprehend the conditions under which these faithful employés toiled and groaned. Let us avoid sentiment. The bare facts will suffice, and they are haggard enough to excite the sympathy of every good citizen, rich or poor, employer or employed. The Pullman Company, be it understood, owns the town of Pullman, owns the houses, the homes of employés, controls the light and water, and other necessaries of life, and wages are so adjusted to living expenses that in a large majority of cases the employés are barely able to support their families. Proof overwhelming can be furnished. One instance will suffice. At the time they struck the employés were in arrears to the Pullman Company $70,000 for rent alone. Wages had been repeatedly reduced, but rent and other expenses remained the same. At this rate it would have been a question of a short time only until the employés would have been hopelessly involved in debt—mortgaged soul and body to the Pullman Company.

The employés, from the beginning, have been willing to arbitrate their differences with the company. That is their position to-day. The company arrogantly declares that there is nothing to arbitrate. If this be true why not allow a board of fair and impartial arbitrators to determine the fact? At this point we appeal to the public as to whether the position of the Pullman Company or the position of the employés is entitled to the sanction of the public conscience. If the employés were to assume the position of the Pullman Company and defiantly declare they had nothing to arbitrate and arbitrarily demand unconditional surrender as the only basis of settlement they would merit the condemnation of the public, and it would certainly and swiftly fall upon them with crushing severity.

Committee after committee waited upon the officials of the Pullman Company with a vain hope of effecting a settlement. They were willing to make concessions, to compromise in the interest of peace. All their advances were repelled. The company was and is unyielding as adamant. Finally, June 12, the delegates of the American Railway Union, representing 425 local unions of railway employés located on the principal lines of American railways, met in convention at Chicago. The Pullman trouble had been discussed at their local meetings. Many of the delegates came instructed. The grievances of the Pullman employés were taken under consideration. Two separate committees were sent to the officials. Not the slightest satisfaction could be obtained. As a last resort the delegates by unanimous vote determined that unless the Pullman Company would agree to do justice to their employés within five days, the members of the order would decline to haul Pullman cars. This action, be it remembered, was not taken until the strike had been on six weeks, and every conceivable effort to obtain redress had failed because of the obstinacy of the company.

Up to this point the trouble was confined to the Pullman Company and its employés. How, then, did the strike extend to the railways? Let the answer be given in accordance with the facts. The day before the order of the delegates declining to haul Pullman cars went into effect, the General Managers' Association, representing the principal western railways, met and passed a series of resolutions, declaring in substance that they would uphold the Pullman Company in its fight upon the employés, that they would haul Pullman cars and that they would stand together in crushing out the American Railway Union. The resolutions in question were published in the city papers and can be referred to in substantiation of this averment.

It will thus be seen that the railway companies virtually joined forces with the Pullman Company, went into partnership with them, so to speak, to reduce and defeat their half-starved employés. In this way the trouble was extended from line to line, and from system to system, until a crisis has been reached. The business of the country is demoralized to an extent that defies exaggeration. To say that the situation is alarming is entirely within the bounds of prudent statement. Every good citizen must view the outlook with grave concern. Something should, something must be done. The American people are a peace-loving people—they want neither anarchy nor revolution. They have faith in their institutions, they believe in law and order, they believe in good government, but they also believe in fair play. Once aroused they will not tolerate arbitrary and dictatorial defiance, even on the part of an alliance of rich and powerful corporations.

What can be done to dispel the apprehension that now prevails and restore peace and confidence? The American Railway Union, by whose authority and in whose behalf this statement is made, stands ready—has from the beginning stood ready—to do anything in its power, provided it is honorable, to end this trouble. This, briefly stated, is the position the organization occupies. It simply insists that the Pullman Company shall meet its employés and do them justice. We guarantee that the latter will accept any reasonable proposition. The company may act through its officials or otherwise and the employés through their chosen representatives. Let them agree as far as they can, and where they fail to agree let the points in dispute be submitted to arbitration. The question of the recognition of the American Railway Union, or any other organization, is waived.

We do not ask, nor have we ever asked, for recognition as an organization. We care nothing about that, and so far as we are concerned it has no part in the controversy. Let the officials deal with the employés without reference to organization. Let the spirit of conciliation, mutual concession, and compromise animate and govern both sides, and there will be no trouble in reaching a settlement that will be satisfactory to all concerned. This done, let the railway companies agree to restore all their employés to their situations without prejudice, and the trouble will be ended. The crisis will thus be averted, traffic will resume, and peace will reign. The railways are not required to recognize the American Railway Union. This has never been asked, nor is it asked now.

I have now clearly and briefly as possible stated the position of the American Railway Union as it was at the beginning of the trouble and as it is now.

If there are those who discover in this statement a "weakening" on the part of the employés, as has been so often charged, when an exposition of the true attitude of our order was attempted, we have only to say that they are welcome to such solace as such a perverted conclusion affords them. We have been deliberately and maliciously misrepresented, but we have borne it all with an unwavering faith that the truth will finally and powerfully prevail. We firmly believe our cause is just, and while we hold that belief we will not recede. If we are wrong we are ready to be convinced. We are open to reason and to conviction, but we will not be cowed nor intimidated. Were we to sacrifice the multiplied thousands of wageworkers who have committed their interests to our hands and yield to the pressure of corporate power, we would be totally unworthy of American citizenship.

It may be asked what sense is there in sympathetic strikes. Let the corporations answer. When one is assailed all go to the rescue. They stand together; they supply each other with men, money, and equipments. Labor, in unifying its forces, simply follows their example. The corporations established the precedent. If the proceeding is vicious and indefensible let them first abolish it. In this contest labor will stand by labor. Other organizations of workingmen have themselves felt the oppressive hand of corporate capital. They will not be called out, but will go out. And the spectacle of Mr. Pullman, fanned by the breezes of the seashore while his employés are starving, is not calculated to prevent their fellow wageworkers from going to their rescue by the only means at their command.

A few words in reference to myself, although ordinarily I pay no attention to misrepresentation or vituperation, may not be out of place, not because of myself personally, but on account of the cause I have the honor to in part represent, which may suffer if silence is maintained while it is assailed with falsehood and malignant detraction. I shirk no responsibility, neither do I want credit to which I am not entitled. This strike was not "ordered" by myself, nor by any other individual. I have never "ordered" nor "called" anybody out. Under the rules of the American Railway Union members can only strike when a majority of their number so decide. The vote of the delegates in this instance was unanimous. And wherever men have struck they did so of their own accord. I have simply served the notice after the men themselves had determined to go out.

This is the extent of my authority, and I have never exceeded it. My alleged authority to "call" or "order" out has been made the pretext on which to assail me with every slander that malignity could conceive. So far as I am personally concerned detraction can not harm me, nor does it matter if it could. I do not amount to more than the humblest member of our order—perhaps not as much. Fate or fortune has assigned me a duty, and, no matter how trying the ordeal or severe the penalties, I propose to perform it. The reflection that an honest man has nothing to fear sustains and comforts me in every hour of trial.

In closing let me repeat that we stand ready to do our part toward averting the impending crisis. We have no false pride to stand in the way of a settlement. We do not want "official" recognition. All we ask is fair play for the men who have chosen us to represent them.

If the corporations refuse to yield and stubbornly maintain that there is "nothing to arbitrate" the responsibility for what may ensue will be upon their heads and they can not escape its penalties.

EUGENE V. DEBS.

Mr. PEFFER. Then, after this conclusion had been reached upon the part of the American Railway Union, the general managers of the railways held a meeting at Chicago for the purpose of considering the situation. They came to a unanimous agreement likewise, and their agreement was published, and it was to the effect that they would stand by the Pullman Company, let the results be what they might; and we have seen in the newspaper dispatches several times important telegrams from New York City and from other points to the managers at Chicago, "Stand firm; to yield now is to lose everything"—substantially that.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to have the Senator put all the facts in. Is he not quite aware that the railway companies have contracts with the Pullman Company under which they are absolutely bound to use their cars, and is not Pullman under a corresponding obligation to them?

Mr. PEFFER. The railway companies are under no greater obligation to Pullman than Pullman is to the men who make the cars. There is the sticking point in this controversy, I say to the Senator from Connecticut in all kindness and frankness. These men have nothing to do with the railway contracts with the Pullman Company, and the contract the railway has with that company has nothing to do with interstate commerce. That is merely a matter of personal convenience.

But I was surprised, almost startled, the other day by the venerable and distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] introducing a resolution that Congress should overhaul the Pullman-car business—a private matter between the Pullman Company and the railway companies. However, I was delighted as well as surprised to see the resolution coming from such a source at such a time, even if it do savor of paternalism.

But, Mr. President, we have no time to talk about the contract of the railroad companies and the Pullman Company, and it is strange in this presence that a Senator of the United States should bring this in between these men and the great question that confronts us, more especially from a Senator who is now and who has many times been the champion of American labor. Oh! from such friends, Mr. President, God save us.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator ought not to misrepresent me. He talks about the railroad companies declaring that they would stand by Mr. Pullman. I know nothing of the kind, and have never heard anything of the kind. I called the Senator's attention to the undeniable fact that there were certain things that they are bound under the law to do.

Mr. PEFFER. Let them go along then and do the things.

Mr. HAWLEY. I say with the Senator that the relation between Pullman and his men has nothing in God's world to do with the rioters and murderers in Chicago.

Mr. PEFFER. It has not only a great deal to do with it, but things that may yet come will grow out of this strike, unless employers will hear and unless legislators will hear.

I do not wonder sometimes that there is a growing feeling against the condition of things at Washington; I do not wonder sometimes that men write me and say, "Would to God that the Senate was abolished." I wrote to a friend the other day that I was ready for its abolition and would be willing to vote for it, and I would go still further and vote for the abolition of the House of Representatives, and I would favor that the personnel of the Government should be confined to a few men, not to exceed one from each State, and let them select a presiding officer from their own number. The fewer governors we have in this country the better, Mr. President, as it seems to me; at any rate a few men could do no worse than a few hundred men have done.

One of the grandest, and yet most dangerous, in one sense, of spectacles that could be presented to the human sight would be the stoppage of every workingman's arm for just ten days. I was peculiarly impressed about two months ago by reading a letter from a resident of this city, whose name I have forgotten and whose letter I have mislaid, though I wanted to use it this morning, in which he said, "Is there no way to teach legislators the effect of troubles now brewing in this country except for men to stop work?" Then he went on to picture what the situation would be if every arm should be idle for ten days or two weeks; the wheels of the factories would stop; the smoke of the furnaces would cease to rise into the heavens; the railway trains would stop; the supply of the cities would stop; the movement of things that the people in the country need would stop; and all life, so far as business, trade, and commerce are concerned, would be at an absolute and perfect standstill, like the stillness of a Sunday morning, nobody at work, everything paralyzed, an inert mass of human beings—the most dangerous condition imaginable.

That is what this thing means for the American people. Let anyone who lives in a large city, and many Senators here do, imagine what would be the condition of themselves and their neighbors should there be a cordon all around the city, so that the people inside could not get out and those on the outside could not get in for a period of thirty days. Starvation would stare in the face of the whole community. Apply the same rule to the world, and in a little while the earth would be depopulated.

These things teach us, Mr. President, the brotherhood of men; they teach us the necessity of one man to another; they teach us the interdependence among people. At times the citizens of Kansas send to Texas and to States in the South along the coast their wheat, their flour, their corn, their oats, and their hay and meat, and we receive in return their lumber; we receive their cotton, we receive their fruits, and we receive many of the things that they have to spare. So it is in the North; so it is in the South; so it is in the East, and so it is in the West. Everywhere communities, States, families, individual men and women are dependent one upon another.

Look upon your breakfast table, on your dinner table, and see where the things that you eat come from; who made them; how; when; what it cost to get them there! Look at the clothing you wear, the houses in which you live, the things about you—not one of them perhaps that you or your family, or any of your blood, had anything to do with the making or the handling of. We go halfway around the earth and more for many of our supplies.

Consider that great fact, and in connection with another fact, that conditions have changed here and elsewhere within the last thirty or forty years, so that whereas a few years ago every individual, with here and there an exception, had his own little patch of ground, his own pigs and sheep and cow and fowls, so that he had within himself and within range of his family enough supplies to bridge over a few days of idleness.

Now, go into one of the cities, where men are massed together, and you will find traffic is perpendicular as well as horizontal, and that there is no place either in the street or in the yard in these great bustling cities where a citizen can raise a flower or a herb without putting it into a pot and resting it upon a window or in some portion of the house where the sunshine may come in.

When the city workingman's employment is stopped he is stopped; his source of livelihood is stopped; the supplies of his family are stopped; and when large numbers of these men quit work the machinery of commerce is clogged. So the time has come for employers themselves to learn that the best way to handle these situations is by fair treatment of their men; and if they can not do that, it is time for the people in their own sovereign capacity to interfere and say, "This thing has gone far enough; thus far and no farther."

This morning the dispatches brought us news of great importance. I have an extract from the Washington Post, with some descriptive matter, stating that citizens of Chicago met with the officers of that city and requested some official interference in the interest of peace, good order, and law. A committee was appointed. The committee visited the Pullman Company and asked that the matter be arbitrated. They were received by Vice-President Wickes, of the Pullman Company. Mr. Wickes asked the alderman:

"Do you come as an official of the city?"

"I do," replied Mr. McGillen.

"Do you represent the mayor in this matter?" inquired the Pullman official.

"The mayor will indorse our action here," the alderman replied.

Alderman McGillen was the spokesman. He addressed Mr. Wickes and placed before him the proposition as authorized by the full committee. Once, as the alderman halted for an instant, Mr. Wickes said, "The company can not recede from the position it has already held."

The interjection aroused Alderman McGillen, and he eloquently portrayed the situation in all its bearings and the inevitable consequences. Mr. Wickes listened attentively. He seemed touched by the appeal, and when the spokesman had concluded retired with Attorney John S. Runnells, of the Pullman Company, for consultation.

It was—

Sharp, short, and decisive—

The headlines say.

The delay was of brief duration. When he returned every one present read in Vice-President Wickes's stern face the answer he would make. Addressing Alderman McGillen, Mr. Wickes said:

"The Pullman Company has nothing to arbitrate."

Then there was a painful silence. Finally Alderman McGillen said: "Am I to understand that the Pullman Company refuses this slight request, made at so grave an hour, and upon which so much depends?"

"The Pullman Company has nothing to arbitrate," reiterated Mr. Wickes.

Mr. McGillen said: "Mr. Wickes, your company demands the police protection of the Federal Government, the State of Illinois, the county of Cook, and the city of Chicago, and yet you utterly ignore a fair request made by the city—a request, the fundamental idea of which is the preservation of the peace. We have come to you as conservers of the peace, and you have assumed grave responsibility in thus refusing the request we make—a responsibility greater, perhaps, than even you are aware of."

"There is a principle involved in this matter," replied Mr. Wickes, "which the Pullman Company will not surrender. It is that employers must be permitted to run their business in their own way, and without interference from their employés or from anybody else."

Not even from the city of Chicago, I will interject, nor from the State of Illinois, nor from the United States Government. Pullman, and Pullman alone, is king. Great is Pullman!

We shall not allow anyone to tell us how our business shall be conducted, and we shall not consent to arbitration. Our business is our own private affair, and we want no interference from Federal or State or any other government.

There is the ultimatum. Now, this strike of the American Railway Union means a solution of the problem. It is not a strike of lawbreakers, of men going out affirmatively and positively and as an original proposition to destroy property. Such is not the object of the union. But the Pullman Company lays down the rule "no matter what we are doing, this is our own private concern. Neither the city, the State, nor the nation has any right to interfere with our business." Yet there is not an incorporated village, town, or city in the country which does not have ordinances restricting in many ways the liberty of its citizens in regard to their own private business.

It is an axiom of the common law, so old that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, that when anything becomes a nuisance it may be abated, no matter what it is. Not only that, but every State in this Union and every State in Christendom have the same kind of restrictive provisions. Go about in this city, go about in any city, and you will find that building is regulated by statute and by ordinance. You will find that the habits of the people in many respects are regulated. Hotels must be constructed in certain ways. The same thing applies to theaters and public places. Private residences within certain limits must not be built of wood, walls must be of a certain thickness, and the foundation must be of a certain character.

Look into your statute books, and you will find that a dairyman is bound strictly to give to the people good milk, good butter, and good cheese. The farmer who takes his hay into the city with a rock in the middle of the load in order to make it weigh heavier is liable to the law. The citizen who stops upon the public highway is liable to the law. Everywhere the hands of the law, and properly so, are about the people in order that the public good may be conserved.

On Sunday before the 4th of July this year some of Christ's ministers in this city undertook to discuss existing conditions. One of them used this language, so the reporter says:

He said that there was a chance in this country for demagogism, and he thought that it was making headway in our State and national politics and now musters a formidable array of votes in both branches of Congress. "Populism," he said, "is simply an incipient, ignorant, and unorganized socialism. Its political capital is the arraying of the poor against the rich, the improvident against the thrifty, the idle against the industrious. Coxey is its typical product; the mob violence which is disgracing so many sections of our country its legitimate fruitage. An income tax which, it is estimated, will fall upon only one out of 800 of our citizens is its conception of equitable legislation.

I should like to know what that man's income will be when he goes up where coin of heaven is used. He proceeds:

All this is the protoplasm of anarchy. It proceeds upon the assumption that political power can level moral distinctions; that government is bound to make everybody comfortable and happy. When these delusions are exposed it will be ready to lay violent hands upon government and upon the human lives that represent it.

If that preacher does not know anything more about the doctrines of Christ than he does about the doctrines of the Populist party, he, with a good many more of us, will have to pass through the eye of a needle before he gets into heaven.

Mr. KYLE. What is the minister's name?

Mr. PEFFER. I am asked for his name. There are the names of several clergymen here. This particular gentleman is reported as Rev. Dr. Hamlin.

Mr. President, the Populist idea is exactly the opposite of anarchism. The Populist is the antipode of anarchy. The Populist believes in government. He believes in the government of the people. He believes in the doctrine taught in the Declaration of Independence, which is not a doctrine at all but simply a terse statement of a fundamental truth, that all men are created equal, and that flowing out of that equality of birth there are certain rights of which even the individual himself can not divest himself—the right to life, the right to liberty, and the right to pursue his own vocation in his own way, unmolested, so long as he does not interfere with the right of his fellow-men.

The Populist not only wants government, but the very highest form of government. The Populist is ready to take the great prototype of my excellent friend who sits in front of me [Mr. MILLS] as their leader and their guide in political philosophy. I can now recall nothing that Thomas Jefferson ever said which does not find a warm, responsive heart-throb in the breast of every Populist.

This man is not crazy, nor is he ignorant, nor do I believe he is a bad man. On the other hand, I believe he averages high with the modern Christian, that he will average well with the modern preacher, whose philosophy comes to him from the Middle Ages, and whose ideas of finance come to him through newspapers which are edited in the business offices. That man would no more undertake to denounce usury in his congregation than he would undertake to go up in a balloon and come down in a parachute. He would no more undertake to denounce the evil practices that he must know, or has good reason to believe, permeate the whole Christian world than he would undertake to organize a mob and drive the members of this body out of the Chamber.

Mr. President, the church needs light. Its members are asking for light, and the men on the outside who are scolding at it, as I am to-day, are asking that it be restored to that spirit of Christianity that the Master taught, just as my good friend from Texas here [Mr. MILLS], and many more like him, are asking that the politics of the United States be restored to the conditions that Jefferson and his compeers favored.

Mr. President, when I speak thus of the church I am not speaking harshly of Christianity. Oh, no; in my heart I have the most tender feeling for all humankind. But I should like to arouse the church. Oh, what an opportunity it has now for great and daring deeds of benevolence, kindness, and far-reaching patriotism! This is the time when the church is needed, and when just such men as these preachers are needed, if they will only get in touch with the toiling masses, and quit calling people who are trying to bring the country back to its old moorings anarchists and bloodthirsty men.

Mr. President, the Populists have said some things about the old political organizations. I do not believe that they have ever told the truth more fully and completely than they themselves have done. The other day, when the distinguished senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] pounced mercilessly and without thought, as I believe, upon the State which the Senator who now occupies the chair [Mr. MARTIN in the chair] and myself have the honor to represent, I read to him an interesting little bit of literature. But then we were in the midst of commotion and excitement, and it hardly fell upon the great public audience as it will fall now in this connection rather than in that. However, before I come to that I wish to state that sixteen years ago last January the distinguished senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who I see is now in his seat, addressed this body upon the subject of finance when he was pleading, patriot as he was, for the free and unlimited coinage of silver. I find in a speech of his, full of eloquent pathos, full of power and vigor, on page 330 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, under date of January 15, 1878, a most scathing arraignment of the party then in power.

Sir—

Said he in another place in the same speech—

In the entire catalogue of crimes against human society—

Let me read that again:

Sir, in the entire catalogue of crimes against human society not one can be found so awful in all its consequences, both immediate and remote, as a government commits when it deliberately destroys the money of its own citizens.

That is only a part of the paragraph, and in order that no injustice may be done the Senator I ask that the whole paragraph—it is not long, and I have it marked—may be incorporated in my remarks. I would read it by way of helping the Reporters out if it were not so long.

Wherever in all the regions of time such measures have been accomplished, the horrors of history have taken place. No shrinkage in the amount of money, no contraction of the currency in the hands of the people was ever enforced by law to any considerable extent, except amidst broken lives, ruined hopes, despair, lost honor, and all the vices springing from the lowest depths of poverty and human misery. The worst ingredients of war, pestilence, and famine all flow from the act of a government violently tearing from the hands of the laboring masses the money they so much need. Murder, theft, robbery, prostitution, forgery, embezzlement, and fraud of every hue and mien curse the land that is deprived of a full and sufficient circulating medium on which to give employment to its toiling men and women. The social statistics of mankind will show that wherever the supply of money has been scant and labor poorly paid, or left entirely idle, there the gallows-tree has borne most frequently its horrid burden; there the jails and the penitentiaries and all the haunts of infamy have been most crowded. The well-clothed and well-fed Pharisee may ostentatiously thank God that he is better than such as these, but he is not. When the strong hand of the Government is engaged in abolishing money, and thus interposing between the laboring man and the laboring woman and their last chance for bread by honest work, their sins for self-preservation are less odious to their merciful Father than the prayers of the usurers who have driven them to ruin.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PEFFER. With great pleasure.

Mr. VOORHEES. In order that no injustice may be done to the Senator from Indiana, I desire to say I repeat every word of that now, here, and everywhere. There has not been a day of my life since I uttered it that I would not repeat it. I am glad of the opportunity to say it over here again. No greater crime was ever committed against the men, women, and children who live by labor than a government commits when it destroys its own circulating medium.

Mr. PEFFER. That speech, Mr. President, was delivered twelve years before the Populist party was born. The Senator concludes, speaking of what the people demand and what they have a right to demand—I read now from page 338—

They demand, too, that certain specific wrongs shall be redressed.

First, those for whom I speak demand the restoration of the silver dollar exactly as it stood before it was touched by the act of February, 1873. They desire that it shall have unlimited coinage, not fearing that it will become too plenty for their wants; and that it be made a full legal tender, believing that it is as good now with which to pay all debts, public and private, as it was during eighty-one years of American history.

Second, they demand the repeal, unconditionally, of the act of January 14, 1875, compelling a resumption of specie payments in January, 1879, holding that the question of a return to a specie basis for our currency should be controlled entirely by the business interests of the country. They do not believe that the country should be dragged through the depths of ruin, wretchedness, and degradation in order to reach a gold standard for the benefit alone of the income classes.

Third, they demand that the national banking system be removed and a circulating medium provided by the Government for the people, without taxing them for the privilege of obtaining it. And they ask that the amount thus placed in circulation shall bear a reasonable and judicious proportion to the business transactions and the population of the United States.

Fourth, they demand that the currency circulated on the authority of the Government shall be made a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, including all dues to the Government, well knowing that it will then be at par with gold, or more likely at a premium over it.

And fifth, they demand that hereafter the financial policy of the country be framed permanently in their interest; that they shall not be discriminated against in future legislation as in the past, and that their prosperity, and not the mere growth of incomes to retired capitalists, shall be the primary duty of the Government.

In my judgment—

The Senator says—

These demands are just and moderate. I implore Senators not to suppose that they can be disregarded with safety. If they are rejected now they will be renewed hereafter with still greater determination and perhaps with others added. I plead for the financial credit of the Government. It rests on the popular will alone, and that will can no longer be defied or menaced with impunity. The people are sovereign, and they can bind and they can loosen. If the money power is advised with wisdom it will stop and retrace its steps. It confronts a power now mightier than itself; a free people at the ballot box, inflamed by a sense of injustice and oppression. If, however, it is joined to its golden idol; if its heart is hardened and its neck stiffened by its vast possessions; if the burning lust of avarice has made it deaf to the voice of reason and blind to all human experience, it will push on in its career, until it works its own destruction; for sooner or later the people, irrespective of party names, will unite in their own defense and establish justice.

They have been slow to believe that there was a deliberate purpose to degrade and impoverish the great producing classes, but they are being rapidly educated now. The condition of the country is a teacher whose awful lesson is engraven on all their hearts. They have also recently read the proclamations of the great organs of the money power, removing all disguise as to the meaning of our financial legislation and the misery it has created. In the columns of one they have read that—

"The American laborer must make up his mind henceforth not to be so much better off than the European laborer. Men must be content to work for low wages. * * * In this way the workingman will be nearer to that station in life to which it has pleased God to call him."

In the columns of another organ of consolidated capital they have read the following revolting sentiments:

"There seems to be but one remedy. It is a change of the ownership of the soil, and the creation of a class of landowners on the one hand and of tenant farmers on the other; something similar in both cases to what has long existed and now exists in the older countries of Europe."

And in every form in which the English language can be used the American people, and especially the people of the West, have been notified, not that their consent will be asked, but that they will be compelled to submit to the legislation which results in this British system of baronial landed estates, a dependent tenantry, and pauper wages for the workingman.

Sir, I have no word of menace to utter on this floor, but, in behalf of every laborer and every owner of the soil whom I represent, I warn all such as value their investments that when these doctrines of despotism are sought to be enforced this fair land will again be convulsed in agony and the fires of liberty will blaze forth again, as they did a hundred years ago, in defense of the natural rights of man. May the wisdom of our fathers and the benignity of our God avert such an issue; but if it shall come, if infatuation has seized our councils, the result will only add one more instance to the long catalogue of human crime and folly, where avarice, like ambition, overleaps itself and in its unholy attempt to rob others of their possessions loses its own.

Mr. President, that was delivered on the 14th day of January, 1878, and a month from that day, on the 15th day of February, following the day of the delivery of the speech of the distinguished Indianian, came a remarkable speech from a remarkable man whose successor I have the honor to be.

We can not disguise the truth that we are on the verge of an impending revolution—

Said Senator Ingalls:

The old issues are dead. The people are arraying themselves upon one side or the other of a portentous contest. On one side is capital, formidably intrenched in privilege, arrogant from continued triumph, conservative, tenacious of old theories, demanding new concessions, enriched by domestic levy and foreign commerce, and struggling to adjust all values to its own standard. On the other is labor, asking for employment, striving to develop domestic industries, battling with the forces of nature, and subduing the wilderness; labor, starving and sullen in cities, resolutely determined to overthrow a system under which the rich are growing richer and the poor are growing poorer; a system which gives to a Vanderbilt the possession of wealth beyond the dreams of avarice and condemns the poor to a poverty which has no refuge from starvation but the prison or the grave.

Our demands for relief, for justice—

Said that eloquent Senator—

have been met with indifference or disdain. The laborers of the country asking for employment are treated like impudent mendicants begging for bread. The Senator from Connecticut informs us that hundreds of millions of dollars are lying idle in New York and Hartford, which can be borrowed on good security at 4 per cent. and asks with something like a sneer how the coinage of a dollar worth 90 cents will benefit the poor unless they can give good security for their loan. The laborers of the West do not want to borrow; they want to earn. They do not wish to pay interest on other men's capital, but to sell their labor and if possible acquire some capital of their own. The producers of the West want a market in which the value of their products will not be consumed by the cost of transportation over railroads that pool their earnings and combine to keep their rates at a point where the carrier grows rich and the farmer poor.

The Senator from Wisconsin, in that admirable speech which left so little for others to say, declared that this was not a contest between the East and West. Let us see. Against silver, as indicated by the vote on the Matthews resolution, are New York, New Jersey, New Hampshire, Maine, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Vermont, and Rhode Island. For it are every Western State but Michigan, California, and Oregon, and every Southern State but Maryland and Delaware, and all these are divided. The Senator from Wisconsin was right. It is not the East against the West. It is the East against the West and South combined! It is the corn and wheat and beef and cotton of the country against its bonds and its gold; its productive industry against its accumulations. It is the men who own the public debt against those who are to pay it, if it is to be paid at all. If the bonds of this Government are ever paid, they will be paid by the labor of the country, and not by its capital. They are exempt from taxation and bear none of the burdens of society.

The alliance between the West and the South upon all matters affecting their material welfare hereafter is inevitable. Their interests are mutual and identical. With the removal of the causes of political dissension that have so long separated them, they must coalesce, and united they will be invincible. The valleys of the Mississippi and Missouri, with their tributaries, form an empire that must have a homogeneous population and a common destiny from the Yellowstone to the Gulf. These great communities have been alienated by factions that have estranged them only to prey upon them and to maintain political supremacy by their separation. Unfriendly legislation has imposed intolerable burdens upon their energies; invidious discriminations have been made against their products; unjust tariffs have repressed their industries.

While vast appropriations have been made to protect the harbors of the Atlantic, and to erect beacons upon every headland to warn the mariner with silent admonition from the "merchant-marring rocks," the Mississippi was left choked with its drifting sands till the daring genius of Eads undertook the gigantic labor of compelling the great stream to dredge its own channel to the sea. The opening of this avenue of commerce marks the epoch of the emancipation of the West and South from their bondage to the capital of the East. In asking the passage of this bill they are asking less than they will ever ask again. When I reflect upon the burdens they have borne, the wrongs they have suffered, I am astonished at their moderation.

I will not read further from his speech. My object was to show that this preacher has not read the history of his own country, and he would shoulder upon us poor little Populists all the crimes of their wicked predecessors. That was in 1878. At the next national campaign, in 1880, the Republican party, paying its respects to its great opponent, did it in the following choice language:

8. We charge upon the Democratic party the habitual sacrifice of patriotism and justice to a supreme and insatiable lust for office and patronage; that to obtain possession of the National Government and control of the place they have obstructed all efforts to promote the purity and to conserve the freedom of the suffrage, and have devised fraudulent ballots, and invented fraudulent certification of returns; have endeavored to unseat lawfully elected members of Congress to secure at all hazards the vote of a majority of States in the House of Representatives; have endeavored to occupy by force and fraud the places of trust given to others by the people of Maine, rescued by the courage and action of Maine's patriotic sons; have, by methods vicious in principle and tyrannical in practice, attached partisan legislation to appropriation bills upon whose passage the very movement of the Government depended; have crushed the rights of the individual; have advocated the principles and sought the favor of the rebellion against the nation, and have endeavored to obliterate the sacred memories and to overcome its estimably valuable results of nationality, personal freedom, and individual equality.

Then by way of a return or an exchange of compliments, the Democratic party in its national convention in 1884, resolved as follows:

The Republican party, so far as principle is concerned, is a reminiscence. In practice it is an organization for enriching those who control its machinery. The frauds and jobbery which have been brought to light in every department of the Government are sufficient to have called for reform within the Republican party. Yet those in authority, made reckless by the long possession of power, have succumbed to its corrupting influence, and have placed in nomination a ticket against which the independent portion of the party are in open revolt. Therefore a change is demanded. Such a change was alike necessary in 1876, but the will of the people was then defeated by a fraud which can never be forgotten nor condoned again.

In 1880 the change demanded by the people was defeated by the lavish use of money contributed by unscrupulous contractors and shameless jobbers who had bargained for unlawful profits or for high office. The Republican party during its legal, its stolen and its bought tenures of power has steadily decayed in moral character and political capacity. Its platform promises are now a list of its past failures. It demands the restoration of our navy; it has squandered hundreds of millions to create a navy that does not exist. It calls upon Congress to remove the burdens under which American shipping has been depressed; it imposed and has continued those burdens. It professes the policy of reserving the public lands for small holdings by actual settlers; it has given away the people's heritage till now a few railroads and nonresident aliens, individual and corporate, possess a larger area than that of all our farms between the two seas.

But, Mr. President, that is not all that my clerical neighbor has overlooked. I find in a recent issue of the New York Sun certain language which the editor pretends to quote, and I have no doubt he quotes truly, from the speeches and writings, officially and otherwise, of the distinguished New Yorker who is now at the head of the Government. The editor says:

When he—

Referring to the President—

writes, as he has written over and over again—

Now I quote his adjectives—

of "the grasping and heedless exactions of employers;" of "the gulf between employers and employed;" of "the citizen struggling far in the rear, or trampled to death under an iron heel;" of "colossal fortunes, unfairly gathered, in the hands of a few;" of "the communism of combined wealth and capital;" of "overweening cupidity and selfishness insiduously undermining the justice and integrity of our institutions;" of "oppressed poverty and toil exasperated by injustice and discontent;" of "life made too hard" for "those of moderate means and the poor of the land;" of "selfish greed in the ascendancy;" of the "undermining decay of sordidness and selfishness;" or, as during the bloody Homestead riots, of "scenes that mock the hopes of toil and attest the tender mercy the workingman receives."

I have mentioned these things for the purpose of finally getting rid of this twaddle and nonsense about the Populists being anarchists and defending crime.

Mr. President, the birth of the Populist party came about naturally. It came because of the conditions of which I have just been reading. Its Republican members believed what the Democrats said in their convention about the Republican party. Its Democratic members believed what was said by the Republicans against the Democratic party.

We had sense enough to know that things were out of joint and that some persons somewhere were responsible for it. We made up our minds that conditions must be changed; that politics must be purified; that the old parties must be converted or they must be destroyed, and that the Government must be restored to the people for whose happiness and safety it was established. That is what the Populist party has set out to do. We have some isms—yes, we have some isms; and it would have been a good deal better for our political enemies if they had had some of those isms, ten, fifteen, twenty, or thirty years ago.

We would not to-day find ourselves in the condition we are in. The truth is that existing political machinery is corrupt, no matter who pronounces the arraignment. We have seen its effects in our own action here in the Senate within the last three months. We have seen the politics of the country corrupted by the use of money, by the patronage and influence of corporations. Do not understand me to be charging that any Senator or any Member of the House of Representatives has in any way, either directly or indirectly, profited by anything of this kind.

I am denouncing the infamous practice that has debauched American politics. The Populists are trying to remedy the evil, faintly, feebly, it may be, but after awhile we shall succeed, because we represent the people; and either we under our present name or some great popular movement under a broader and a better name, if a better one can be originated, will do the things we are aiming at. The American people have too much sense, too much patriotism, too much loyalty, to allow their Government to go down in anarchy. When the contest comes between the great masses of the people and the power which now rules in legislation the people will not be found wanting. They will be found invincible, Mr. President.

Now, I have occupied a good deal more time this far than I expected to consume, and it was the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that drew me off onto another line of thought. I come back to this point: The Government is now managing nearly one-half of the railway mileage of the country through its courts. The Government, State and national, interfered when the coal strike was on six weeks or two months ago. The Government is now interfering, and for the first time in the history of the American Republic, the President has sent the Army into one of the States without the request of either a State or a city officer. I am not criticising the action of the President. I am simply calling attention to the fact that we now have actual, active, earnest, and effective Federal interference in what many wise men are pleased to call State concerns.

A few mornings ago, when it was noticed first that the President had sent troops to Chicago, a distinguished citizen in public life was reported to have used language something like this: "If I were governor of the State of Illinois I should take the State troops and drive the Federal soldiers into the lake." Without stopping to say whether that remark was justified or whether the feeling which instigated it was a proper one, constitutional and legal, this thought came instantly into my mind, that in the beginning of the building of railways in this country the railroads were but a mile or two long.

The first one in Massachusetts, between a quarry and a town or a port, was 6 or 8 miles in length. The first one in Pennsylvania was but a few miles in length. They were mere private affairs. In the first ten years we only got up to a couple of thousand miles of railways. They were private matters. Every bill of lading had to be changed when you reached a new railway line. So it continued for a long time. But the great war welded the American States together in an indissoluble Union. The people of the United States now constitute a nation, and these busy people of ours have no time to stop with a surveyor to point out where the State line is, that they may inquire what the laws of this new domain are upon which the railway train, running at the speed of 50 miles an hour, has just entered.

The American people have grown too big for that, and State lines, except for purposes of local government, are of no manner of account in the polity of the Republic. When the time comes for the Government to interfere, whether it be in Chicago, or Boston, or New Orleans, or Galveston, the power of the Government will go there, and the people will say amen, provided always that the movement of the Government is in the interest of the people.

That brings to mind a thought. I think it was in yesterday evening's paper it was stated that some distinguished personage now in public life is asking that the Army be increased. This is not a good time to increase the Army. This is a time to decrease the Army. This is a time for the weapons of peace; this is a time for reason; this is a time for cool, deliberate judgment, not passion, not prejudice, not bayonets, but consciences, tongues, and pens, and brains. There is a kind of military mania taking possession of the people. We have military organizations in the States. A citizen of Pennsylvania told me not very long ago that within twenty-four hours' notice an army of 28,000 men could be raised in the three States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, if I remember it correctly. We now detail army officers to teach military tactics in agricultural colleges. What a splendid idea it is to teach the farmers' boys the military art in order to fight grasshoppers and chinch bugs, and crows and blackbirds. We find that in our private colleges there are classes studying military tactics, borrowing arms from the Government and from the State. The same is done even in our high schools, which are the acme of the country district school, the crowning glory, the ambition of the country boy and girl. They are having military science taught in some of the country schools, and in some of our public schools here in the capital of the American Republic I have seen the boys go out and drill on the public streets. More than that, even in our Sunday schools there is a military air.

It is time that this military idea, the idea of quelling every little disturbance by force, should cease, and that brings me to the vital point in this whole controversy. What are you going to do when disputes arise between employers and employés? Keep your hands off, Mr. President. That is my advice. Just keep your hands away from them. The parties in interest will settle the matter themselves, and they will do it without bloodshed. They will do it without using the torch; they will do it without getting angry; they will do it justly, safely, wisely, promptly. But the instant that you begin to call out the military arm in order to protect one side and send the other one to prison, just that soon you arouse a spirit of animosity which can not be quelled by force.

That was tried about two years ago, on the 6th day of this month. Pinkertonism died an inglorious death in its own blood on the battlefield of Homestead. Some day there will be a monument erected to those brave men who, standing upon the shores of the Monongahela, defended their right to work in that great structure which their hands had builded. In the face of danger the man who will not speak words of warning to his friends is a coward, and our young party is not cowardly.

I have offered these resolutions, and as you will observe there is not a suggestion of detail about any of them. But you will find that they involve the fundamental idea at the bottom of this great trouble. A little more than thirty years ago we passed a homestead law when there were countless millions of acres of public land, to be saved for the people's homes, and now it is worth a man's life, aye it is worth even a woman's life, to get a home when an Indian reservation is opened to settlement. In only thirty years have our public lands been squandered. Many of them are owned by corporations in immense tracts, and others are owned by syndicates and individuals of wealth.

The public lands have gone in that way. The last one of the propositions in the resolutions is intended to cover the land case, or, if you please, the land monopoly. The Populist, like the early Republican, wants to save the public lands for homes for the people.

The second proposition includes Government charge, Government control, Government supervision, Government surveillance of the railroads; the very thing we are now doing with bayonets, by writ and processes of court, served under an escort of deputy marshals at immense expense. Just turn this whole business over to the peaceable agencies of the people represented by their lawfully constituted agents.

There is nothing in the resolution pointing to the taking possession of the railroads, as we are charged with favoring. We want the Government to have control of the transportation interests of the people. This suggests a plan in general, not in detail at all. It suggests that all railway lines in the country shall be consolidated under present ownership into one great system, under the control of public officers, all the details to be arranged by legislation. That recalls an incident which occurred in this Chamber a month or thereabouts before the last Congress went out of existence. I offered a resolution requesting some information to be furnished by the Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] was then chairman.

Among other items of information asked for was this one: Is it practicable to consolidate all the railways of the country under present ownership into one great national system, with the differentials to be settled at one office, and to establish a uniform rate of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight in all parts of the country? I remember the interest that my amiable neighbor, the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], took in the resolution, as he does in a good many of the acts that I perform in this body. He suggested in his suave manner that without any formal proceeding whatever the resolution might be submitted to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and he had no doubt it would be acted upon quite as readily and quite as promptly as if there were no formal proceedings.

The Senator from Illinois very kindly rose and seconded the suggestion and courteously took charge of the resolution. That is the last I have ever heard from it. That was about two years ago. That is the way all such things in the past time have been treated.

Now, we are face to face with the problem; it is forced upon us, and we send military officers to take charge of the railroads. The Populists do not want that. We want the people in their majesty to arrange the matter through their constituted authorities.

Sometimes I hear it suggested in this body in such a way that it would appear, if one did not know that the gentlemen uttering the words were intelligent men, that the Government is some great power distinct and apart from the people. The Government is simply the agent of the people, made for their benefit and for their protection and to secure and preserve their safety and happiness. One of the immortal doctrines of the Declaration of Independence was that whenever the Government ceases to be effective in these respects it is not only the right but the duty of the people to abolish it and institute another in its place.

I shall not detain the Senate any longer except to make the suggestion that no matter what Senators may think about the ideas that have been suggested in connection with this resolution, no matter what they may think about socialism, anarchism, Populism, or any other ism connected with the situation, I have submitted the matter for the consideration of the Senate and the country. I have not been derelict in my duty.

The very first bill I introduced in this body was one to restrict immigration within reasonable limits in the interest of American labor, and the first resolution I presented upon the day that that bill was introduced was one asking the Committee on Finance to inquire into the cost of lending money, a very simple matter, so simple indeed that about three months afterwards a member of the Committee on Finance kindly came to me and asked me whether I expected them to report the resolution. I told him no, I did not; that I had no such expectation. He answered me politely by saying he thought so, and therefore had laid it in his desk, but that if I desired it reported he would certainly report it. Not a particle of thought was given to it.

Now we are in the power of the men whom that resolution, introduced by a wild man from the West, was intended to reach. What does it cost to lend money? Last year, while we were sweating and sweltering in this Chamber, trying to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman law, the banks needed a little investigation in the city of New York. The banks were paying out certificates instead of money. They were refusing to pay their depositors. A simple resolution of inquiry was treated in the same contemptuous way.

Still later, about a year ago, through a resolution I asked to have the Committee on Interstate Commerce devise some plan to take care of railway trains, so that the property and persons of people traveling from place to place over the country might be protected. That was treated with equal attention, with equal courtesy. Nothing has ever been heard of it nor of any of the other resolutions. Last fall or winter I introduced a bill to furnish money to States and cities to take care of the poor. That was buried like the rest. Again, during the present year we found that from Boston, from Chicago, from San Francisco, from El Paso, and from a number of other places in the country there were men, calling themselves members of an industrial army, coming up to Washington.

I proposed a resolution for the appointment of a committee without any expense attending it at all, providing that the places for its meetings should be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms without expense. There was no trouble required except to put the necessary furniture into the room, if it was not already there, and there was an abundance of rooms which could have been used without a single dime of expense for any purpose whatever, not even for stenographic work, for there are a number of gentlemen and ladies very much accomplished in that art, who could spend a little time just as well as not in that way. The committee was to be appointed in order to receive petitions and hear remonstrances, either delivered orally or in writing, from delegations which might come to the city, not specifying any delegation. While a very good vote, a much larger vote than I expected, was given for the resolution, it did not pass.

The next move—I am speaking now about my own conduct in this matter—was the introduction of a bill to provide work for the unemployed in the District of Columbia, but in a little while that was disposed of by a proposition to issue bonds, so that some money-changers might reap a profit out of the interest paid by the people. Next came a resolution to appoint a committee to consider the present situation with reference to the business depression and the large numbers of unemployed people. I am glad to know that that committee was appointed, and the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] is at its head. What the committee has done, or what they are doing, or what they expect to do, I know not, but that much good at least has come out of the labors which I have been pleased to perform in this body.

Mr. President, while no other Senator has yet suggested even subjects for remedial legislation, I have done so. The Republican party has given us a high protective tariff and a gold basis for our money system. The Democratic party have given us in past times a low tariff, a revenue tariff, but recently they have given us the gold standard and a high protective tariff, with free wool. Those are the remedies and the only remedies that the old parties thus far have been able to suggest. Do Senators tell me that there is nothing wrong? Do they tell me that there is nobody out of employment; that there is nobody upon the verge of starvation; that the Republic is not in danger? Yet this is all you offer. We, however, come forward with substantial propositions for the Senate and the country to discuss.

First, that all public functions be exercised by public agents, and then you will have no occasion to use the Army to suppress riots. Then there will be no strikes. Do justice to the workingman as well as to his employer. Let every man who employs a large number of men understand that he has in his care and his keeping the inalienable rights of men who are just as good as he is. You say just as the Pullman Company say, "Shall not these men be permitted to manage their own business in their own way?"

I say, Mr. President, it depends. It depends upon what they are doing and how they are doing it. One man alone transacting a little business of his own wants to employ another man. Those two are equal. They can contract face to face, one with the other, as a man speaketh unto his friend. But where is Pullman, where is Carnegie, where is the president or proper officer of a railroad company or of any great banking institution when one of the employés has a grievance which he wishes to present? Who will hear him, who will answer his question? There is always an official directory of every corporation, but that official directory is not willing, nine cases out of ten, to hear the official directory of the men who do their work.

The other day a Senator said—I do not now recall who it was, or perhaps it was in a newspaper that I saw it—that there were more stockholders in one of these great corporations than there are men employed. So much the worse, if that be true. He went on still further to argue that the stockholders are poor people. Still worse. If they are poor people, they have earned their savings as those men who are complaining have earned theirs. But these little stockholders have no more influence upon the management of the company than the man in the moon has influence upon the legislation of the Senate of the United States. They have none at all.

Now, what I ask is that the resolutions may be printed and lie on the table, so that Senators, one by one, as they desire, may call them up and speak to them. I ask, I appeal to Senators, I beseech Senators to pay some attention to the resolutions, and in a conservative, statesmanlike way throw out to the people some intimation that this great body will not turn its back upon them.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I have listened to a great part of the remarks of the Senator from Kansas with amazement and pain. I had supposed that by common consent it was deemed to be the better course in these troublous times not to inflame the controversy by speeches on either side. The most moderate language in the times in which we are presently living may well be construed into intemperateness of expression and yet fail to do adequate justice to the subject.

At a time when in the second city of the United States, and the fourth or fifth city in the civilized world, order is suspended, law is powerless, violence is supreme, life is in danger, and property is in the very arms of destruction, I am appalled to hear the trumpet of sedition blown in this Chamber to marshal the hosts of misrule to further devastation.

Mr. President, this question does not now concern the issue between the Pullman Company and its employés. It has got beyond that. It does not concern the sympathetic strike of the American Railway Union. It has got beyond that. It does not concern any strike which may hereafter be ordered. It has gone far beyond that. A simple strike as to a local organization not directly connected with the transportation instrumentalities of this country grew into another strike of far more comprehensive proportions. That grew into a boycott. That boycott took the liberty of the American people by the throat, and then grew into a riot, and from thence into an insurrection which confronts this Government to-day with all the dormant and latent powers of revolution, and speaks here in the voice of its advocate, threatening and advising the dismemberment of the Government by the abolition of its executive and legislative departments.

Mr. President, I speak on this occasion with great reluctance. I would not say a single word to inflame the passions; but some things have been said here this morning which demand a reply which to be efficacious must be immediate.

I would speak upon this subject in regard to the workingmen more immediately engaged in these acts with the utmost moderation and kindness. They are misled and misguided men. I do not stand here affecting to speak for any branch of the people or for any class. I speak for society entire. But I tell you, Mr. President, that the words I shall utter will six months from now be received as the words of a better friend to the laboring man than the Senator from Kansas. I say I would speak of these men with the utmost moderation up to a certain stage of their proceedings, because they are misguided and misled men. They are not the entire people. The Senator from Kansas affects to speak for the people of this country. Who are they? For his present purposes it is the mob which has obtained control of a strategic point in this country, the city of Chicago——

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President——

Mr. DAVIS. I decline to yield for any purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN in the chair). The Senator from Minnesota declines to yield.

Mr. PEFFER. I protest against the Senator misrepresenting——

Mr. DAVIS. I decline to yield.

Mr. PEFFER. I did not expect the Senator to do so.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator speaks in behalf of that mob——

Mr. PEFFER. I did not say anything of the kind, and the Senator from Minnesota knows it.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator speaks in behalf of that mob of misguided men who have seized by force a strategic point in the city of Chicago, paralyzed the means of intercourse, and interrupted the sources of supply of food and traffic over several States of the Union.

He speaks of the rights of labor, and in the abstract I am with him. No one denies that there are before the American people to be settled in a lawful and constitutional manner through their legislative functions vast questions of adjustment between the rights of labor and capital. No one denies that. It is the great problem of civilization all over the world. Man and machinery have been worked so into each other through complex organizations of both that sometimes it can not be discerned where the man ends and the machinery begins. But in these times of present exigency and danger to government itself those are not the questions.

The Senator from Kansas has not a single word of reproach for the blood that has been shed in Chicago in the last ten days, for the millions of property which has been destroyed. The red light of arson against the sky in that city has caused him no pang and elicited from him no word of disapprobation. He insists that we shall go back to the cause of the strike, as he alleges, the difficulty between Pullman and his men, and arbitrate that, when everybody knows we have got far beyond that transaction for the present. It is as futile, it is as foolish, as if some one coming from the caves of the past when the battle lines were drawn at Gettysburg had insisted that the impending conflict should be delayed until Meade and Lee could have argued out between the lines the question of the rights of slavery in the Territories.

Mr. President, the people are interested in this controversy—and by "people" I mean the entire body of the American people. I do not mean that segment of the people who, acting under delusion, have sought by force to overthrow not only the functions of civilization and intercourse, but also the rights of all the other people and the very existence of government itself.

The Senator from Kansas says that these instrumentalities of commerce and government should be controlled by public officers; and in that I agree with him to a certain extent. Are they controlled by public officers in Chicago now? Can the United States marshals execute the process of the courts? Can that great function of interstate commerce, that great system of railroads upon which the people depend for commerce, for everything which beautifies and adorns and makes enduring our civilization, and upon which the messengers of commerce come and go like the angels whom Jacob saw upon the ladder of his dream—can that be carried on, and is it carried on now, with the best aid of the public officers of this country?

Not at all. They are impeded in Chicago, at Hammond, and surrounding places by riots which have grown into insurrection, disturbing the stability of the Government itself, and drawing from the lips of the Senator from Kansas the expression of the opinion that now is the time to annihilate the legislative and executive departments of this Government and to change its form into that of its prototype, the Committee of Public Safety during the Reign of Terror in the days of the first French Revolution.

This whole proceeding, which has grown to a movement which I have inadequately described, has come from the illusion that a fraction of society, useful in itself, of course, and indispensable, I admit, can by force dominate every other portion of the body politic.

Mr. President, what is society? It is all the members thereof taken together. The railroad employés of this country number some five or six hundred thousand men, perhaps, indispensable, useful, valuable citizens in ordinary times, when not misled, but, compared with the great mass of the American people, how few they are in number! Why will they not learn and why will not their self-appointed teachers teach them the doctrine of community of interest and interdependence of all upon the whole?

Does anybody suppose that by burning cars, destroying property, disturbing security, wrecking credit, taking life their means of employment are to be increased hereafter? They are destroying everything from which they derive their employment; the very thing which they, so much to their credit, have helped to upbuild, it is true, an act of which they would have never thought unless it had been for the self-appointed dictators who have placed themselves at the head of their organizations.

People prate about liberty, and define that liberty as the liberty of the particular class they are speaking for. The only liberty worth having in this country is the equal liberty of all men alike. Liberty in its philosophical and common-sense definition consists in that right of each individual to exercise the greatest freedom of action up to, and not beyond, that point when it impinges upon the like exercise of freedom of action of every other man. Beyond that it is the destruction of the liberty of the weak by the strongest, a subversion of the very theory of a republic, and a return to primeval anarchy on the one hand, or, as an alternative, to despotism on the other.

Mr. President, this boycott business—not a little incidental boycott in some little community, which, while it works great local inconvenience, works no particular harm in general—but a universal boycott is spoken of as something perfectly feasible and perfectly justifiable, to be put in force in the operations which are now going on. All men may stop work, all men of a certain class may stop work, and the Senator from Kansas calmly depicts here without a word of censure or disapproval, without a single temperate admonition to the men who are looking to him for leadership, the terrible and disastrous consequences of that step.

Mr. President, suppose in the course of time it should come to this, that one class of men should declare a boycott and thereby greatly inconvenience all society; suppose laboring men or professional men, physicians, or any indispensable class of society should declare a boycott upon the rest; suppose that in the imagined case the butcher, the baker, the farmer, and the grocer should in turn declare a retaliatory boycott upon those who had declared a boycott upon them, how instantaneously they would rise, and justly rise, in condemnation of such an act as that? These gentlemen, who do not now see beyond the narrow verge of the horizon that girts them in, would rise in condemnation of such an act of intolerable tyranny, oppression, and cruelty.

Now, let us look a little at this revolt. It is a most severe affair; but when we look at it calmly it does not extend much out of Chicago. Its significance and power consist in the fact that it has seized a vital point there; but throughout the rest of this country, with exceptions not worth mentioning and which do not affect the general situation, the tide of commerce goes on evenly and temperately until it reaches the barrier at Chicago. There is some disturbance on the Pacific coast, but nothing to warrant the declaration of the Senator from Kansas in this connection that he speaks for the people, especially when it is considered that the people, through every avenue of public communication and by private letter—by telegraph, in the public press, and through the pulpit—are crying aloud in denunciation of this most wicked, monstrous, and cruel attack upon every function of our civilization.

The Senator from Kansas talks about putting this matter in the hands of the people. The people have taken this matter into their hands, through the constituted authorities, in order to take it away from those whom he calls the people, who are acting in violation of law and in rebellion against the constituted authorities and the Government of the United States. This matter has been taken by and it will remain in the hands of the people in the highest sense—the people of a free country who, having secured to themselves the enjoyment of a liberty regulated by law, which guarantees to each man the same rights that another has and no more, propose to perpetuate that liberty to their children.

Mr. President, who has conferred this authority upon Mr. Debs? Where is his patent of right to say to the city of Chicago that it shall not be fed, to say to the people of the Northwest that they shall not leave their homes, or that they shall not be able to get to their homes if they are away? What signature is subscribed to that patent of popular right or of popular consent?

No, Mr. President, this Masaniello of a day, drunk with power, has unloosed agencies which he can not chain, has set at work destructive forces which he can not recall; his own disciplined men have gone beyond his control, and it is a notorious fact that their violent action has called from the caves and dens of Chicago the professed criminal, the idly vicious, the anarchist. Everybody who is conspiring to put down modern civilization is now moving under the mask of this strike and taking life and destroying property in its name.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota will please suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 6016) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust that the Senate will allow the Senator from Minnesota to proceed, and when he has finished I shall take the floor to proceed with the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] introduced into the Senate the other day a resolution, the substance of which is that no process, civil or criminal, shall issue from any court of the United States in regard to acts affecting interstate commerce by the obstruction of trains, unless such acts involve the delay of the mails, and that the detaching of Pullman cars from any train shall not constitute an offense. At the time that resolution was introduced interstate commerce was arrested at Hammond, Ind., it was in collapse at Chicago, and freight and common passenger cars and Pullman cars were being destroyed in that city. The meaning of that resolution is that while these acts were flagrant and being committed, the United States was to be called upon to make itself an accessory to the crime while it was in the act of perpetration.

Mr. President, consider the importance of the relations of this Government to interstate commerce. A clause in the Constitution, contrived by the wise foresight of our forefathers, has become efficacious and widespread in its operations a hundred years after it was framed. In the progress of invention, the canal and afterwards the railroad superseded the slower methods of internal communication. The Mississippi River has ceased to be a factor of any considerable importance, except as a regulator in interstate concerns, and the Great Lakes have receded to a subsidiary position.

The railroads of this country, 176,000 miles in length, belting this land, and laid over it like a network of iron, an armor of defense, are the daily convenience and the indispensable necessity of every man, woman, and child in the United States, and this movement is aimed at this great instrumentality, this great necessity, this indispensable convenience of our civilization, necessary to support life, to move troops, to move supplies, to carry on the Government itself—this strike is thus aimed, that has grown from a strike to a boycott, and from a boycott to a riot, and from a riot to an insurrection, and has suspended and paralyzed the powers of this Government in the second city of the Union.

And by what acts? Tearing up the tracks, derailing locomotives, overturning cars across the tracks, burning them, robbing trains of provisions, disarranging switches, all with the result of the loss of human life; and yet the resolution of the Senator from South Dakota proposes to take away from the United States courts the power to follow, repress, or punish these flagrant offenses against everything which goes to make up civilization and security.

The effect of that resolution as to any Territory of the United States or as to the District of Columbia would be that if any such act there committed, where the United States has ample and plenary jurisdiction, should result in death, constituting murder at common law or under the statute, no warrant of the United States courts could issue, no indictment could be found, no judge or jury could try the criminal.

Mr. President, the sea, the Great Lakes, the rivers, everything within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States, were once the main instrumentalities of commerce, and there is a stringent code of laws applicable to them and to the ship, as security for persons and passengers and the means of conveyance. I say here, without fear of successful or even attempted contradiction, that if any one of the acts which have been perpetrated in Chicago in the last ten days against persons and property of this great means and necessity of land communication had been perpetrated upon the waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States those acts would have been piracy and punishable with death, under the statutes of the United States.

In the eye of reason, humanity, and common sense the acts which have been perpetrated at Chicago, involving the safety of a great city, not as on shipboard the safety of a single vessel or those who are in it, constitute a much more flagrant offense than any piracy which is defined by the statutes of this country or by the law of nations.

The authority of the United States can not be denied, Mr. President. Within the limitations of the Constitution it is supreme. The duty of the President of the United States is to see that the laws are faithfully executed; the duty of the courts is to declare those laws and their consequences, and to execute them through their process. Those limitations are plainly drawn and settled, not only in the original instrument, but by comment after comment in recorded decisions. Why should the hand of the Government be kept off these insurgents under the circumstances? Is the interstate commerce of this country to be held in suspense and paralyzed, property destroyed, food cut off, conveniences taken away, necessity thwarted, until some remote disagreement as to wages between a private corporation and its employés can be adjusted? Is there any such reserved right as that to any of the citizens of the United States, or is it the mere usurpation of a mob, commencing in riot and tending towards anarchy?

Speaking of the people of the United States—a large, mouth-filling phrase, that we have heard so often here—let us consider a moment that there are 5,000,000 farmers in the United States. Five million farmers and their families, constituting 45 per cent of the population, are engaged in agricultural pursuits. I suppose, Mr. President, if anybody is entitled to be distinctively called "the people," the bone and sinew of this country, it is the farming population. They supply the great cities. They represent the land; without them the country would be nothing. They have been its invulnerable and loyal arm of defense in all times of peril.

How are they affected by this strike of that segment of the people in Chicago? Have the farmers of this country called out to have commerce stopped until the question of wages can be settled between a few employés and a company constructing cars? Has any Illinois, or Minnesota, or Wisconsin, or Iowa farmer cried aloud for this remedy and been ready to pledge his life, his fortune, and his sacred honor until the desired end can be brought about? Not one. How has it affected them? How does it affect the constituents of the Senator from South Dakota or the constituents of the Senator from Kansas? They can not market their wheat if this thing continues; they can not market their wheat to-day.

The early product of the farms of Illinois, the fruit, the early vegetables, have been rotting throughout the fields. The early fruitage of California has become a crop perfectly valueless under existing conditions. The beef of the country can not be marketed in New York or Washington. It is rotting in Chicago, and prices rise to the people. Mothers go from place to place in the city of Chicago seeking for milk for their children, and can scarcely find it.

I say, Mr. President, that no interest in this country is stricken such a deadly blow by this cruel, remorseless, unreasonable, merciless, and finally treasonable attack upon the liberty of the American people as the farming community of the United States; and they will find it out some day by the stern logic of events teaching them the lessons which I have endeavored to impart. It will not be necessary for them even to learn that lesson by experience to array them, as they always have been arrayed, on the side of law and order and the perpetuity of this Government.

I said, Mr. President, that this strike was comparatively local; and so it is. It is at a vital point, it is true, but that it is widespread is not true; and I do not believe it will be. The laboring men of the great States of the East are not engaged in it. South of the Potomac and the Ohio law and order reign supreme. I am ashamed as a Northern man to invite the contrast, but it is true; and if the time shall come for the strength of this nation to be put forth to put down the rising tide of anarchy which threatens to submerge the city of Chicago, the nation can call with equal confidence upon the people of the South and of the North for that purpose.

Do not people realize that the Constitution itself is upon trial and that the country itself is in danger? The military power, the last resort in a free government, has necessarily been called into action. The President of the United States, to whom is committed the commandership of the Army and the Navy in the execution of the laws, has declared the danger by a proclamation which every citizen is bound to respect. He says, "I have sent the troops there;" the Senator from Kansas says, "Take them away." What shield does the Senator propose to interpose between the innocent people of Chicago and their property and the men who to-day are only held in awe and suppressed by the presence of troops, if they are taken away? Can Debs recall the force that he has unloosed? He can no more do it than by word he can reconstruct the burned cars or give back life to those from whom it has been taken away as the result of his operations.

Mr. President, I desire to read as a portion of my remarks an editorial from the New York Sun of this morning, instinct with patriotism, in which that paper suspends its consistent opposition to the President of the United States, in view of the great and pressing emergency which is now upon us. The writer expresses in language better than I can command what the duty of every American citizen is in this emergency:

> The Government at Washington lives, and the people of the United States are behind it, sixty-odd millions of them, anarchists and fools not reckoned. The representative and executive of the nation's authority, majesty, and power is President Cleveland. He stands at this moment for all that loyal Americans live for, hope for, are. That he stands firm to his obvious duty no man can now doubt. The Administration is doing its duty with respect to the people, and the people must do their duty with respect to the Administration. The color of a citizen's political opinions is of no more consequence at such a time than the color of his eyes or hair. As a citizen, as an American, he owes first of all his unqualified, unquestioning, unlimited support to the chosen man who took into his hands on March 4, 1893, the responsibility for the administration of the nation's laws, and swore then to turn the Government over to his successor as he found it.
> Whatever may be the immediate turn of events, President Cleveland and his Cabinet advisers confront a crisis in the nation's history. How or why that crisis has arisen is not the question. How it shall be met is the matter that concerns the sixty-odd millions behind the President and the government at Washington. In half a dozen States of the Union to-day men occupy the governor's chair who are no more fit to be there than Debs or Johann Most. The United States Constitution guarantees to the citizens of every State the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States. It guarantees to every State a republican form of government. One of the privileges of American citizenship is to live under law, not anarchy. One of the immunities of American citizenship is immunity from lawless violence. A republican form of government in any State is not government administered by a coward, an anarchist, or a governor in sympathy with anarchy and its objects. Questions of jurisdiction and verbal conflicts of Federal with State authority are bound to arise in any great public emergency involving the exercise of both Federal and State authority. They are technically interesting, as they were in the early months of 1861.
> There is ample power in the government at Washington, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, to preserve the institutions of this country against mob, insurrection, or rebellion. The power is not that of any one man, or of any small council of men; it is the might of a great and indestructible nation. We believe that it will be exercised, as it should be exercised, to any extent that may become necessary, with humane prudence and moderation as far as possible, but in any case with unyielding firmness and unremitting vigor. The President's proclamation is a draft at sight upon the loyalty and patriotic support of every loyal and patriotic American. In continuing to perform the perfectly plain duty now thrust upon him as the nation's chief magistrate, President Cleveland should have something more than the half acquiescent, half critical countenance which approves the main purpose, but watches sharp for minor breaks and mistakes. He should have just that sort of support which we all owe to the flag when it is held up as a signal for Americans to rally to it.

The Senator from Kansas cited the common law, that a nuisance may be abated—abated by force. What is Mr. Debs? Does he fall within the definition of a nuisance, or is his office more comprehensive? Is the power of the State or of the individual greater against a mere nuisance than it is against an agency which threatens the very destruction of the Government?

In contrast with the article which I have just read let us hear what Mr. Debs is reported in a morning paper to have said:

> President Debs, in speaking of the situation to-night, said: "The Pullman Company is certainly responsible for any blood that may flow from now on. If honest labor is not entitled to recognition, the worker can not be blamed if he tries to commit some acts of violence against the man who spurned him."

Will the Senator from Kansas indorse that?

Mr. Debs continues:

With 100,000 to 150,000 idle men in Chicago, and capitalists spurning them, bloodshed will follow. But we are now out of it. The blood is on the heads of the Pullman officials."

This is a distinct threat of bloodshed by the leader of this movement, who had previously attempted to enter into negotiations with the President of the United States by communication addressed to him, and who exults in his power, and yet the Senator from Kansas has not uttered one placating word tending to call off asingle man from these acts of violence and bloodshed.

The Senator from Kansas took occasion to bring into this debate the ministers of the Christian religion here in Washington who have preached the gospel of law, order, and peace, and to teach them their duty from a loftier plane than he conceives them to occupy. He wishes to introduce into the church a Christianity from without, to revive its spirituality and restore it to its pristine apostolic purity.

Mr. President, the Senator from South Dakota is also a minister of the Prince of Peace on earth and good will towards men. He is here as a Senator, and before the public he is an evangelist of the meek and lowly Nazarene. He is the author of the resolution to which I have adverted, making lawlessness lawful and murder unpunishable under certain circumstances in any court where the United States has jurisdiction.

I do not believe his heart or his head conceived that resolution, or that either approves it. I would adjure him to withdraw it from the consideration of the Senate in the interests of humanity and good government. I would ask him to take that bomb from the Clerk's desk whereon he has laid it; but if through pride of opinion, or mistaken sentiment, or incapacity to see the right, he should refuse, I say to him that he has attempted to inflict upon the body of the Commonwealth a wound as deadly as that given by the dagger of Santo.

Mr. President, these are troublous times. The time will come in the new order of events when these matters will be satisfactorily arranged, for this Republic has always been adequate to every emergency, and these disturbing questions between capital and labor—and they exist with strong equities in them, I admit—will be settled. I think that time is now upon us. But they will not be settled as the result of any such proceedings as those against which I speak to-day. Something more than capital, for which I care nothing; something more than the wages of the laboring man, for whom I care much; something more than a railway corporation, for whom I care nothing, is at stake here. National existence is at stake.

It is the very condition of the existence of republics that they are subject to continual attacks from within and require continual assistance from their citizens to perpetuate themselves. That is the meaning of the maxim that "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Kings, like Saturn, devour their children. The children of republics devour their parent. That attack is nearly always from within. France is subject to it to-day; the short-lived Republic of Spain succumbed to it; the Republic of Mexico fell, and only rose again when it shed the blood of an immolated monarch upon its plains; Switzerland survives, exempted by its geographical position, as a barrier of ice between contending nations, and sits like an eagle upon her nest above the clouds.

The same dangers and difficulties environ this Republic, and they are upon us now. It is not a mere question of disagreement or dissension. The ship of State, which two weeks ago was floating securely and proudly through untroubled waters, is now buffeted by contrary winds and is driven headlong over the waves of an exasperated sea.

I have not said a word about parties in this discussion. I shall expect the Democrats, the Populists, and the Republicans to join hands in this emergency, which Mr. Debs and those who are acting with him proclaim to be of supreme and perilous exigency to the Republic, and which the Senator from Kansas asserts demands the dissolution of the most important functions of this Government, to the end that a secure and peaceful rest may be attained at last, to accomplish which the best efforts of the legislative department of this Government, and of all departments, will be bent to bring about the only solution of these difficulties which possibly can be attained.

Mr. BLACKBURN obtained the floor.

Mr. GORDON. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for three minutes?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] closed his somewhat extraordinary speech by an assault upon the two leading political parties of the country as responsible for the present unhappy conditions and by an appeal in the interests of another party.

Sir, at a time like this, when the peace of great communities is not only threatened, but broken; when the law is openly defied; when the hitherto quiet homes of a great central city, and its orderly, industrious people are threatened with blood and fire and terror; when great communities are looking in every direction for some escape from the alarming conditions which surround them; when our very civilization, not to say the form of government under which we live, is heaving under the mighty ground-swell of a great agitation, it seems to me that any representative on this floor has descended very far from the lofty plane of statesmanship and of patriotism when he stands at such an hour to appeal for party.

Sir, what matters it now whether we be Republicans or Democrats or Populists; what matters it to any lover of his country and of his whole country at such an hour whether this or that party be in power; what matters it on which side we stood in the mighty and bloody conflict of the past? If we would save our country from anarchy we must stand now shoulder to shoulder for the enforcement of its laws, for the preservation of its peace, the support of its dignity, and the perpetuity of its freedom.

I do not wish to speak on a subject like this from a Southern standpoint. I shall not. It matters not whether these calamities threaten Western or Eastern, Northern or Southern cities. The situation which confronts us involves not only labor and law and personal liberty, but the life of the Republic itself.

Our system is to govern through representatives chosen by the people, who make the laws which are declared and enforced through the orderly processes of courts of justice; and whenever the people fail to support the law the Government fails. We have no government except that recognized and upheld by the free will of the people.

Our Government was ordained by the people to protect property, public and private; to protect popular rights, among which is the right of the laborer to sell his labor at such price and in such employments as he pleases, and whenever that right is invaded it is a blow at personal liberty, and not only threatens the principles which lie at the foundation of our institutions, but is an inauguration of a system of slavery never known in the past history of the country.

There was a time when the Southern master had the right to order his slave to desist from labor, but that day has passed. The institution to which that right attached was recognized in the fundamental law of the land, and the master ordered the slave according to law. That institution has gone down in revolution. Liberty and the rights of organizations involve no such power or privilege as that now assumed, to force others to desist who wish to labor. Such a claim is so utterly abhorrent to our American ideas that it is impossible to treat it with any patience.

Standing in this lawmaking body and considering the lawbreaking mobs at Chicago, I recall, with some misgivings I confess, that woeful prophecy of Lord Macaulay, that in some great public upheaval, like that which confronts us, this free Republic would either lose its civilization through mob law or in putting it down by the strong arm of power would lose its liberty. Sir, I do not believe that prophecy; but if such doctrines as we have heard on this floor this morning are to become popular among us, well may we pause and consider whether Macaulay's prophecy may not yet be realized.

I prefer to agree, however, and I do agree with the great Gambetta of France, that at such times the liberty-loving people of this country, without distinction of party, would unite and save the Government, however they might differ about its policies. These lawbreakers will so find it, Mr. President. The day is not distant, it is upon us now, when they will realize this truth. There will be no divisions among us when the constituted authorities call upon the people. Their response will ring through the land as a warning to those who defy the laws. The men who wore the gray from 1861 to 1865, under strong convictions, will be found side by side with the men who wore the blue, following the same flag, in upholding the dignity of the Republic over which it floats, and in enforcing every law upon its statute books. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] said truly that among the strongest and most conservative classes of our people were the farmers. I belong to that class: I am a farmer, and, as one of their representatives, I wish to say that south of the Potomac River you will not find one farmer, be he white or black, who will not rally to the cause of law and of order and to the support of this Government in all its constitutional rights and powers, upheld by the constitutional authorities whom the people have elected.

Mr. President, let me close with the declaration that my deepest sympathies are enlisted for the suffering masses of this whole land. I heartily wish that these labor troubles could be peaceably settled and that bloodshed could have been avoided; but I feel impelled to add that the blood which has been shed or may yet be shed is nothing as compared to the value of this Republic, and that the sons of the men who established it will save it, whatever may be the cost. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to remind occupants of the galleries that demonstrations of applause can not be permitted under the rules of the Senate. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that order is preserved in the galleries.

SUPPRESSION OF LAWLESSNESS.

Mr. DANIEL. I submit a substitute for the resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate indorses the prompt and vigorous measures adopted by the President of the United States and the members of his Administration to repulse and repress by military force the interference of lawless men with the due process of the laws of the United States, and with the transportation of the mails of the United States, and with commerce among the States.

It is within the plain constitutional authority of the Congress of the United States "to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes;" "to establish post-offices and post-roads;" and to ordain and establish inferior courts; and the judicial power extends to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

It is the duty of the President under the Constitution to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed," and to this end it is provided that he shall be "Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States."

It is treason against the United States for a citizen to levy war against them, or to adhere to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.

Those who combine to use force to assail or resist the constituted authorities of the United States, civil or military, should be warned of the magnitude of their offense; and those who earn honest bread by honest toil can do nothing more detrimental to their interests than to show them any sort of countenance in their lawless course.

The action of the President and his Administration has the full sympathy and support of the law-abiding masses of the people of the United States, and he will be supported by all departments of the Government and by the power and resources of the entire nation.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not yield the floor if it be the purpose of the Senator from Virginia to ask for the present consideration of the resolution, because it would inevitably lead to debate.

Mr. DANIEL. I will not do so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have the resolution read again. I think it is so acceptable that I hope we will pass it.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I had hoped that such a resolution as this in a time of public peril like that which now confronts us would pass the Senate without objection, without delay, without debate.

There are some things which go without saying, and it should go without saying that this is not a matter on which parties may fairly divide. He who brings in the name of party in a partisan sense, whether it be Republican, Democratic, or Populist, forgets due recognition of his duty as a patriot.

In this resolution I have simply summarized the provisions of the Constitution which bear directly on the existing situation, and which point the pathway of duty to the President; and I have given expression to that sense of approbation of his course which pervades all classes of thinking and patriotic citizens.

I am a States rights Democrat, who would not like to see the muniments of local self-government overridden. But I am also a national Democrat, who would not like to see the muniments of national authority and national safety destroyed.

Anarchy is no remedy for anything. It intensifies every evil that exists. It impedes every remedial process. It should be stamped out wherever it shows itself.

The President is Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy. He has the plain right, and it is his plain duty, to employ them whenever and wherever the Constitution and laws of the Federal Government are forcibly resisted by combinations of men.

The establishment of post-offices and post-roads and the transportation of the mails through and by them is a Federal matter. Commerce among the States—interstate commerce, as distinguished from local intrastate commerce, is a Federal matter.

The due process of law in the Federal courts is a Federal matter. And in all three of these matters the President, having imposed upon him the constitutional obligation to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed," has the right to use the Army and Navy to that end, and to oppose force by force.

I am the friend, and have often been the champion, of those who work for their daily bread. My sympathy is with them. But they can have no lot or share with anarchists, the destroyers of property, the destroyers of life, the breakers of law, the enemies of peace, order, and civilized existence. They have no place in the ranks of incendiaries, and they have no enemy who can be so fatal to their every interest as those who seek to fire them into defiance of law.

The President is right in dealing promptly with lawbreakers. He ought to be upheld and cordially, and unstintedly supported here, as he will be throughout this land, by upright and law-abiding citizens.

Sections and parties disappear in the face of society imperiled. We should know only the country, the Constitution, and the laws; and, as the President says, in such an emergency discussion may be well postponed. Peace, order, and obedience to law are the conditions precedent to discussion; with them assured, grievances will be heard, rights protected, and wrongs redressed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope we may have a vote on this resolution immediately.

Mr. MANDERSON. Let us vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am entirely willing to vote, provided the resolution does not provoke debate.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACKBURN. If there is to be any debate, I decline to yield.

Mr. HALE, Mr. HUNTON, and others. Let us vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada has addressed the Chair.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, before a vote is taken upon the resolution of the Senator from Virginia or any question related to the present condition of the country I think we ought to view the object lesson presented. I concur with all that has been said with regard to the absolute necessity of the enforcement of law. Upon that question there can be no difference of opinion. But grave difficulties confront us. We are confronted by a situation more grave and threatening than any which has been presented before in the whole history of the Republic.

It is stated on all hands that wages must be reduced; that they must be reduced to meet a narrower and still narrower basis of circulation and trade; and that prices must continue to fall under the present conditions. What does that mean? The reduction and continuous reduction of wages in this country means a continuous struggle between the Government and the people—a contest which must bring misery to every household. Is it possible that there is no relief, that no remedy can be devised to stop the fall of prices and the necessary reduction of wages?

Falling prices and lower wages mean a lower civilization and harder conditions. The history of the world tells us that when wages fall the people approximate to a condition of slavery. Look at the condition of the people of the various countries of the globe. We find where wages are lowest the people are the most ignorant and degraded. The wages of 600,000,000 people now living on the globe average from 1 cent to 6 cents a day. I know no better criterion of the condition of civilization than the rate of wages paid. While the United States was able to pay the best wages of any country in the world we were the proudest and happiest people in the world; but if the wages of this country must be reduced, not to the Asiatic basis of from 1 to 6 cents a day but to the European basis of from 50 to 60 per cent lower than the basis of this country, a fearful struggle awaits us.

In making war upon labor, which the present laws require, we shall be putting free institutions to a test more severe than the civil war, more severe than anything which has preceded.

I beg Senators here and now to think of the contest that is before us. In the next twelve months under present conditions wages must be reduced at least 50 per cent. After having enjoyed the advantages of high wages and prosperity and means of educating their children, it is hard for the people to meet the sudden and direful change which is now necessary under existing laws. Is it not possible for us to relieve the people from this destiny and to take the bitter cup from their lips?

Business is stagnant and must become more so. Men will not engage in enterprise with falling prices. The money of the country is congested in the money centers. It is congested in the banks. Nobody wants to take it out, and why? Because investments in property have been disastrous; because the prospect of gain in business is destroyed; because the opportunity of the youth of the land to acquire wealth and prosperity is gone; because nothing but disaster stares us in the face. If we attempt to put the money in use it will not be used under present conditions; it will be hoarded and monopolized and used for the purpose of wrecking what is left.

If it were known now that twelve months from to-day there would be an abundance of money in this country the money would leave your banks and be invested in property, because everybody would know that property would go up, that industries would be revived, and that strikes would cease. Then you would have no necessity for armies; you would have no necessity for harsh measures. If you will make the people prosperous they will trample down anarchy, as they have always done. Anarchy can not live among a prosperous and happy people. It is only in distress, where the body politic is decaying, that anarchists can live and prosper. It is owing to the misery of the people that they can not grow and prosper. Stop anarchy by giving the money of the people back to them. You have destroyed the money of the people. Give it back and let them prosper and you will have no occasion for resolutions like the one before us.

It seems to me with this object lesson before us we ought not to sit idly by and let our institutions, which are in infinite danger, be destroyed. This strike will be put down by the strong arm of the law, and it must be put down; but other strikes will follow as the iron hand of contraction reduces prices and reduces wages. Discontent and misery have taken the place of happiness and prosperity. Stop it. Give back to the people their money and you will have no use for soldiers.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. GRAY. Mr. HALE, and others. Let us vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If we can have a vote I will yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the resolution may go over under the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. MANDERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. BLACKBURN. What is the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the resolution may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1045) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate four obsolete gun-carriages to the city of Marshalltown, Iowa;

A bill (S. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone; and

A bill (S. 2070) to provide for the restoration to the State of Michigan two flags carried by the Twenty-second Michigan Infantry Volunteers and now in the War Department.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6415) to provide an immediate revision and equalization of real estate values in the District of Columbia; also to provide an assessment of real estate in said District in the year 1896 and every third year thereafter, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that the post-office appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6016) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the course suggested by the Senator from Kentucky will be pursued.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, line 8, under the head of "Office of the Postmaster-General," to strike out "eighteen" and insert "nineteen," before the word "thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For advertising, $19,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, to strike out lines 19 and 20, in the following words:

For advertising at first and second class post-offices, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 3, line 25, after the word "routes," to insert "including temporary service to newly established offices;" and on page 4, after the word "dollars," to strike out "of which sum $30,000 shall be used under the direction of the Postmaster-General in supplying temporary service to newly established offices in cases where the establishment of star routes is contemplated;" so as to make the clause read:

For inland mail transportation, namely: Inland transportation by star routes, including temporary service to newly established offices, $6,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 8, after line 3, to insert the following paragraph:

For payment of rewards for the detection, arrest, and conviction of post office burglars and robbers, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move an amendment to come in on page 6, after line 8.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, after line 8, insert:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Cincinnati to Atlanta and from Cincinnati to Cleveland, $100,000: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The bill carries an appropriation of $196,614.22 for special mail facilities on trunk lines from Springfield, Mass., via New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans. At the conclusion of that paragraph the Senator from Ohio now proposes to insert the amendment which has just been read by the Secretary appropriating $100,000 for special mail facilities from the city of Cincinnati.

Mr. CULLOM. Both ways—to the South and to Cleveland.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Both ways. That necessitates me to submit an amendment, which I ask may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the first paragraph on page 6 insert:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Louisville to Nashville and to Memphis, $100,000: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that amendment. Let both amendments go into conference.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am entirely content.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Kentucky, who has charge of the bill, whether either of those amendments has been considered in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would answer the senior Senator from Illinois and say yes, but neither of them has been recommended by that committee. I would say further that there is no estimate made for any special mail facility fund by the Department, and further, that two years ago the Postmaster-General officially communicated to Congress his opposition to any appropriation for this purpose on any line. Both the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio and the amendment submitted by me were subject to points of order, but I did not choose to raise the point of order on his amendment. I am entirely content, as the Senator from Ohio suggested, to let the amendment go into conference.

Mr. SHERMAN. The three propositions.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The other House inserted a paragraph appropriating $196,000 for the eastern system of railways. I do not wonder that the Senator from Ohio felt that the central system of railways could answer a better purpose and is more thoroughly entitled to this consideration than what is comparatively a coast line system. What is true of the railway system his amendment represents is equally true of the largest railway system south of the Potomac River which is represented by the amendment I have submitted, so that it seemed to me the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio was a good one and it was fair to let these three provisions go to a conference and there be considered and determined in the light of the necessities that exist and the promotion of the service that may be had. I am perfectly content to have that done. I am not here to defend any of them.

Mr. CULLOM. It would seem to me to be a little more in harmony with our duty here as Senators to determine in the Senate whether the amendments should be adopted by the Senate or not, especially in view of the fact that these questions have been discussed time and again heretofore both in the Senate and in the committee. The Senator from Kentucky has yielded the floor?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I yield to the Senator from Illinois with pleasure.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say that I believe a year ago this same subject was up, not on the proposition now submitted by the Senator from Ohio, but on the question of subsidizing particular lines of railroads for carrying the mails. There were before that time two lines receiving additional aid. I do not know whether it was done by the committee or in the Senate, but at any rate the result was that only one line was given an appropriation, the appropriation being, I think, $196.000.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That has been changed, as the Senator knows. It was the Coast line.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the line named in the bill?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not what is known as the Coast lines but the Richmond and Danville system. That is not the system which was originally the beneficiary of the special appropriation.

Mr. CULLOM. It is one line, however, to which the subsidizing business was reduced a year ago.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Exactly.

Mr. CULLOM. The line ran from New York or Boston down through along the coast, touching Richmond and other points.

Mr. HALE. The Atlantic line.

Mr. CULLOM. The Atlantic line, as it is called. I was a member of the Committee on Appropriations and of the subcommittee a year ago, and had the same charge of the bill then that the Senator from Kentucky has now. My judgment then was, and it is yet, that there should be no appropriation in the post-office appropriation bill for the line that is named in the bill or any other bill; but I found in the discussion of the bill last year that the line that was provided for finally seemed to be the popular line, and the appropriation was retained for the line as designated.

I have taken a little pains this morning to look up the subsidizing business as well as I could in reference to mail lines. The policy of appropriating for trunk lines was begun in 1877, as near as I can ascertain, by a provision authorizing the President of the United States to "appoint a commission of three skilled and competent persons, who shall examine and report to Congress at the commencement of its next session such rules and regulations for such transportation and rates of compensation therefor as shall, in their opinion, be just and expedient," etc.

I think that probably the appropriation bill in which that provision is found resulted in the beginning of special appropriations by Congress for trunk lines. I find that in the appropriation act of March 3, 1877, it was provided that $150,000 of the sum appropriated, being $9,000,000 and over, might be used by the Postmaster-General to obtain proper facilities from the great trunk lines of railroad for the railway post-office service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878.

That was the first appropriation I have been able in the time I had at command to find in the appropriation acts. Appropriations have been made successively every year since for trunk-line service. I find it was provided in the appropriation act of 1880 that the sum of $350,000 might be used by the Postmaster-General to maintain and secure from railroads necessary special facilities for the postal service for the year ending June 30, 1881. So the appropriations went on from year to year. In the next appropriation act, in 1881, I find that for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines $425,000 was appropriated, and so far as I can see, the money seemed to be left in the hands of the Postmaster-General to subsidize whatever line called a trunk line he might see proper to spend the money upon. So in 1882 I find the following item:

> For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, $600,000, said facilities to be extended as far as practicable to the principal cities of the United States.

I think that was the largest appropriation that has ever been made for this special purpose. Then again, in 1883, for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines $185,000 was appropriated. So the amount was very largely reduced. Then again, in 1884, for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines $250,000 was appropriated. So the appropriations run on in 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, 1893, and 1894, nearly all of the items making appropriations without specifying the lines, until we come down to the last appropriation act. A year ago, or two years ago, perhaps, the then Postmaster-General recommended that all the appropriations for special facilities on trunk lines should be dispensed with. But the one line, as I said, has been retained.

I have read these items of appropriation to show what has been going on in the Government with reference to the matter, and to show that the true policy of the Government, in the judgment of the Postmasters-General, would be to get rid of the appropriations. As a matter of fact I do not believe they are of any particular consequence to the Government at all. The truth is that all the lines now running from New York to Chicago and from Chicago south, I think, and in all directions, are carrying the mails at as rapid a rate as they can be carried upon the trains. At any rate, there is no call from other portions of the country for these special fast mail facilities. But if the policy is to be retained at all, and the Government makes special appropriations for special lines, I do not see any particular reason why the line indicated by the Senator from Ohio should not have just as fair privileges as the one that is now recognized by statute.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I see no objection whatever to appropriating even a larger sum than is contained in the pending bill for special service on these great lines. It is entirely left to the Postmaster-General. Unless he approves it, as a matter of course the fast mail service will not be put on the line. There are probably four great lines from the North to the South which ought to have special facilities. Already from the East to the West the mail is carried as quickly as it can be carried by the fast routes. The line along the seacoast has been protected for some time, and I have no desire to interfere with it. Then there is a line from Cleveland and Cincinnati south to Atlanta and New Orleans, connecting at New Orleans, which is very important indeed. It may be said also that from Louisville there ought to be provision made along the Louisville and Nashville road and so on to New Orleans. There is a line, I am told, already established from Chicago, by way of the Illinois Central, direct to New Orleans.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no subsidized line.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; these are not subsidized lines.

Mr. CULLOM. The Government is not paying a cent for the transportation of mails beyond the ordinary contracts except upon the Atlantic line, as it is called.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall be perfectly willing to provide for those leading lines by giving the Postmaster-General a little latitude, so that he might, by paying a small sum in the course of the year, expedite the mails. I see no objection to it.

If these three propositions go into conference, the conferees can regulate the matter. I would not want to have any duplication in the lines. The Postmaster-General now has power under this provision either to decline service or to select the time.

Mr. CULLOM. I do not understand that the line is to be selected by him.

Mr. SHERMAN. He can reject it entirely.

Mr. CULLOM. I know he can reject it, but he is to be confined to a particular point.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have received from commercial bodies, North and South, from Cleveland clear through, prayers in favor of this amendment. I have sent them all to the Committee on Appropriations, and therefore the amendment is certainly in order. I think every chamber of commerce from Cleveland and Cincinnati, through Kentucky, and so on down, have sent us resolutions in favor of these fast mail lines, and urging that some provision be made for increased rapidity in the mail service.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I agree with the statement made by the senior Senator from Illinois, and I thoroughly indorse everything said by the Senator from Ohio, but I do not care to be misunderstood about this paragraph of the pending bill.

It is a fact that the Post-Office Department has never favored appropriations for special fast mail facilities. Two years ago the Postmaster-General protested in an official communication to Congress against any such appropriations of money, and insisted that they did no good, but did harm. There is no denying the fact that these are subsidies and that the roads which get the benefit of the appropriations are subsidized roads. I never favored a subsidy in my life and never expect to do so.

But all that the Senator from Ohio says is true. The other House passed the bill and it came to us carrying an appropriation of $196,000 for one system of railway. The Senator from Ohio has a perfect right to demand equal consideration and fair treatment for the system of railroad covered by his amendment. That line would, I am sure, render far more and broader service than the one embraced in the bill as it stands.

I feel that I am warranted in the amendment I have submitted. The Louisville and Nashville is the longest, the largest, and the most important system of railway south of the Potomac and the Ohio Rivers. The Louisville Southern is another large and important system of railway.

I was perfectly willing to let the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio proposing accelerated service from the metropolis of his State and the amendment submitted by me to go in, in order that they might go into conference and the conferees of the two Houses might determine first whether any appropriation for special mail facilities should be made at all or not, and secondly, if there should be any such appropriation made, where to locate it in order to do the most good with it.

My own deliberate judgment is that the people who are benefited by it, principally if not exclusively, are the owners of the metropolitan journals of the country who get the papers out two hours earlier by delaying a train, not expediting a train. A train that would leave New York at 11 o'clock would not carry a morning paper, but if the train leaves New York at 1:50 o'clock it would carry all the morning papers. So of Louisville and Cincinnati. I think the metropolitan dailies of the country are the chief beneficiaries of these appropriations.

But however that may be, I was perfectly willing and am perfectly willing to let the appropriation of $196,000, which the House sent to us, go with the amendment of the Senator from Ohio and my own amendment to conference and let the conferees report to the two Houses of Congress, first, whether any such appropriation shall be made at all, and, if so, where it can be made to render the greatest service to the country.

Mr. MILLS. Would it not be well enough to have special facilities on another line to go from Chicago by way of St. Louis to Galveston? There is a great section of country to be served by a fast mail line.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not see why it can not be done.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask whether these amendments are offered as amendments to the clause in the bill as it comes to us from the other House?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I answer the Senator from Maine, yes. The proposed amendment, submitted by the Senator from Ohio, and the one submitted by me were both before the Committee on Appropriations, as the Senator from Maine knows. They were not recommended by that committee; they were not inserted in the bill; so that they are not submitted here with the approval of the Committee on Appropriations, but they are submitted as amendments to this paragraph, so that if agreed to, it puts the whole paragraph in conference between the two Houses.

Mr. HALE. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not mean to allow $160,000 of appropriation to stand beyond the reach of the conferees. I mean that these shall go in as amendments to that paragraph and put the whole three propositions into conference.

Mr. HALE. That puts it in perfectly clear light so that everybody may understand it. It leaves the whole subject-matter open to conference. Each of these amendments is subject to a point of order. Neither of them has the approval of the Department or was put on by the other House——

Mr. BLACKBURN. They are not estimated for.

Mr. HALE. Nor are they reported by any committee of the Senate as amendments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And neither has been estimated for.

Mr. HALE. As I say, the amendments have not the approbation of the Department, so that each is subject to a point of order; but no point of order has been made, and it will be left, if they are put on, for the conference committee to settle the whole matter.

I have always felt that extra appropriations for special routes had no great public demand behind them. I have never heard of any people living in the part of the country through which the lines run, either the business public or the general population, demanding extra subsidies for special routes, and I for one shall not be affected with any grave discontent when the conference committee tackles this matter, if the whole thing is dropped out.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Neither will I.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me to make a suggestion, I remember a year ago the only controversy about it was a scramble between railroads as to which should get the money; and that is pretty nearly all there is in it now.

Mr. HALE. That is all there ever will be in it, when we undertake to select chosen routes for the benefits of extra subsidies and appropriations, and we ought to remember——

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow me, in order to remove all doubt about it, I will move the amendment I have offered to come in immediately after and as a part of the preceding paragraph.

Mr. HALE. I understand that it is considered as an amendment to the paragraph so as to throw the whole paragraph into conference.

The truth is, Mr. President, that we have been most bountiful and munificent in our appropriations for the general inland mail transportation all over the country. I remember very well as a member of the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives when this began with a simple appropriation of a few hundred thousand dollars, and a few dozen cars that were put on particular lines, but now we are appropriating $25,000,000 every year for inland transportation—more than the entire cost of the postal service twenty years ago.

The companies ought to be content with the benefits of the general provision. As the Senator from Illinois has said, the moment you begin to select special routes and give subsidies to those routes the same kind of controversy is started that we have here on the floor. Here are three different routes coming in, each claiming to be better than the others. Next year we shall have half a dozen and gradually we will be led to double the appropriations, when we are giving plenty now. So I shall be content if the whole thing goes by the board in conference.

Mr. CULLOM. I suppose the Senator heard what I said, that the appropriations for special facilities for trunk lines did run up to over $600,000. They then began to run down and they are now down to $196,000.

Mr. HALE. That is because there is only one route now selected.

Mr. CULLOM. It is the policy of the Government to get rid of special appropriations for special facilities.

Mr. BATE. Regardless of these routes and the benefits which may be derived, I am on principle opposed to these appropriations. I expect to cast my vote against subsidies in any form when they are presented here, if I can consistently do so.

It may seem a little singular for me to oppose a proposition that may inure to the benefit of some of my own people, especially the proposition made by the Senator from Kentucky, who has charge of the bill. The line he proposes to provide for goes through Nashville, my home, from Cincinnati via Louisville, and thus we would be given greater mail facilities and it would help our journals, but I am opposed to the proposition upon principle.

I do not think the $196,000 which has been appropriated by the other House should be given, and if the opportunity offers itself to me I shall vote against that appropriation. I want to strike it out. I say frankly, I do not believe in sending the matter into conference to be arranged there. I do not know what character of legislation may result, which will be brought back here to us to be confirmed and indorsed, when there may be objectionable features in it. I think the place to strike it out is right here, and that we should oppose any of the propositions made in the shape of amendments to the bill. I do not know what trunk line is to get the $196,000, whether it is the Coast Line that runs through our country or permeates the West——

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is the Richmond and Danville.

Mr. BATE. If that railroad gets it, other roads equally as great and equally as strong, and with all the facilities for transportation will come along and ask that they shall be treated likewise. As the Senator from Maine well expressed it, all the other roads will come along and demand special aid, and we shall have a general logrolling scheme. It will be, "You help me and I will help you," and we will bankrupt the Treasury of the country. That is what it will lead to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Like a river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. BATE. Yes, sir; like a river and harbor appropriation bill. I am opposed to it, and I think we should cut it off right here. Mr. President, I hope that will be done. It is wrong.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Tennessee can reach his purpose by moving to strike out the clause in the bill which contains the appropriation for one route. Then, if it is the sense of the Senate, it will be stricken out of the bill entirely.

Mr. BATE. The Senator refers to the appropriation of $196,000?

Mr. HALE. Yes; the Senator can reach his purpose by making that motion.

Mr. BATE. I should like to move that amendment, but I shall consult the manager of the bill in regard to it. However, when the proposition comes up, should it come, I shall vote against the appropriation upon principle. I believe that we should stop it here. As I said, why carry it to a committee of conference? We do not know what it will lead to. The best place to settle it is to strike it out here, right at the start. Subsidies are wrong. I do not believe that it is proper to give bonuses. I do not suppose there is a railroad that will carry the mails an hour quicker from Boston to New Orleans than it is now carrying them, even if it had additional funds given it for that purpose. They all have these postal cars and every facility for rapidity of movement, and they ought to make their contracts with the Postmaster-General under the general law.

Another feature which is strange is that this comes in here without the recommendation of the Postmaster-General. I understand that all the Postmasters-General heretofore have opposed these propositions, and why shall we bring it in here now with no recommendation from the Department?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will my friend from Tennessee allow me?

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator expressed surprise that this proposition should be brought in here without the indorsement of the Department. I am sure that he does not mean to do me any injustice.

Mr. BATE. I would not if I knew it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I stated to the Senate that it had not been estimated for, that it had not been recommended by the Post-Office Department, and that two years ago the Postmaster-General had sent an official communication to Congress protesting against it. I found it, the Senate found it, in the bill as it came from the other House.

Mr. BATE. Then that is all the more reason why we should reject it right here.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator should make a motion to strike the paragraph out from line 24, page 5, down to and including line 6, on page 6, which covers the appropriation of $196,000, I would vote for his amendment; but I did not propose to move it, and I hope that nobody will move it, so that the committee of conference, who are not the masters of the two Houses of Congress, but simply their agents, may take into consideration the appropriation in the bill, the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio and the amendment submitted by me, and report to their two Houses as to what in their judgment it is best to do. The Senate will then do as it thinks best.

Mr. MILLS. But my friend will remember that if we do not strike out the paragraph now in the bill it will not go to conference.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I beg my friend from Texas to bear in mind that if the amendment of the Senator from Ohio and the amendment which I have submitted, or either of them, should be adopted as an amendment to the paragraph of the bill, it puts the whole paragraph in conference.

Mr. HALE. Still, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. While that is true, speaking strictly, when a particular measure had been put in by one House involving an appropriation and the other House had, instead of striking it out, added to it, a conference committee would hesitate long before striking it all out, because there is nothing then in the act of either House indicating that it is favorable to striking it out; the action of the Senate goes further than the House and adds two other appropriations. The truth is it has got to be reached here, if any Senator wants to reach it, as the Senator from Tennessee has indicated, by a motion to strike out the paragraph now in the bill naming one line and making an appropriation for it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I agree with the Senator from Maine, though as a member of the committee of conference, if upon it, I should not feel hampered at all in acting upon the paragraph. However, I do insist that both the amendment submitted by the Senator from Ohio and the amendment submitted by me, or either of them, if adopted, would in my judgment clearly put that whole paragraph into conference.

Mr. HALE. It does, technically.

Mr. BATE. I move to strike out that part of the bill.

Mr. CAREY. I wish to ask a question. If the Senate votes to strike out the paragraph, does it not end it there?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It does, if the Senate should strike out the lines of the bill I have indicated.

Mr. BATE. Read it again, please. I will base my motion on what you read now.

Mr. BLACKBURN. From and including line 24 on page 5 to line 6 on page 6. If the Senate should strike that out, of course it puts in conference the appropriation of $196,000, but it does not put into conference the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio nor the amendment submitted by me.

Mr. CAREY. I wish to ask one more question. It is pretty difficult to understand whether the Senator from Kentucky wants the paragraph to stay in or come out.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no; I trust I am not failing to make myself understood. I said that I am not an advocate of this provision.

Mr. CAREY. There are three members of the Appropriation Committee who have stood up and said it is simply in the bill because the House put it in; that they had no part or parcel in putting it in. Each of them has further stated that it is not recommended by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And not estimated for.

Mr. CAREY. Now, you pick out certain lines of railroad and propose to give them subsidies for a fast mail. I think the principle of it is all wrong. The railroads in the West, that are in great distress, are carrying fast mails under the general appropriations. If you are going to give the old lines of railroad that run along the Atlantic coast special appropriations for carrying the mails, I think you had better give us some special facilities for carrying mails across the continent. If the Senator from Tennessee does not move to strike out the paragraph I shall make the motion to strike it out.

Mr. BATE. I move, by way of ending this controversy, to strike out that part which the Senator from Kentucky favored me by indicating.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Before the Senator from Tennessee makes that motion I want him to allow me to say a few words in answer to the Senator last upon the floor.

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am sure I did not intend to leave anybody in doubt as to my position in this matter. Upon the contrary, I stated to the Senator from Tennessee that if he moved to strike out the paragraph I would vote for his motion; but I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, if the motion should prevail, it simply puts into conference the appropriation of $196,000, and does not carry into conference the amendment of the Senator from Ohio or my amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Will not the amendments of the Senate go into conference?

Mr. BLACKBURN. There are no amendments yet made to the paragraph.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment and if it is adopted it would go into conference.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If it should be agreed to by the Senate then it would go into conference, certainly.

Mr. STEWART. Any amendment made by the Senate would go into conference.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Of course, but the amendment has not been agreed to. If the Senator from Tennessee wants to make a motion to strike out the paragraph, I suggest to him that we first (knowing that that will simply result in sending the paragraph to conference) agree to let the amendment of the Senator from Ohio and my own amendment be adopted by the Senate. Then if the Senate strikes out the paragraph, it will put all three propositions into conference.

Mr. BATE. I will conform to the wishes of the Senator from Kentucky. I move to strike out the paragraph, as I have already indicated, and upon that I expect to call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Tennessee that the first question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, and then the question will be upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Which amendments propose to perfect the clause.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. After those amendments are disposed of the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to strike out the paragraph will be entertained.

Mr. HUNTON. I hope the appropriation of $196,000 for a fast mail from New York to Florida will not be stricken out. It is a provision that has been in the law, I think, for three or four years, and it has been found to act so well that the representatives of the whole people in the other House have inserted it again. I desire to say now (and that is for the purpose for which I have risen) that this is not a subsidy for the Richmond and Danville Railroad, or the road which succeeds the Richmond and Danville by another name, but according to the terms of the provision inserted in the bill by the other House, and reported favorably by the Senate committee to the Senate, it is a provision for a fast-mail route from New York City to Florida without specifying any route, without naming any railroad company. I need not tell Senators around me that from the beginning to the end of the route there are more than two competing roads.

So it is not a subsidy to a railroad company, but it is a provision for a fast mail. The railroad company which offers the best and most rapid facilities for the transmission of the mails will get the $196,000. I desire the Senate to understand that this is not a subsidy to any given road, but it is a provision for the purpose of transmitting the mails from the extreme North to the extreme South with greater rapidity.

Mr. HALE. In the end it is a subsidy to some particular route, is it not? We do not say what the route shall be, but when it is selected it is a subsidy to that road. It is extra pay for a particular line.

Mr. HUNTON. But instead of being a subsidy to any one route——

Mr. HALE. It can not be to two routes.

Mr. HUNTON. It is a provision authorizing the Postmaster-General to provide for the rapid transmission of the mails over some route.

Mr. HALE. Has it not got to be over some route?

Mr. HUNTON. Of course, when the Postmaster-General acts.

Mr. HALE. That is what I said. It is a subsidy the moment the Postmaster-General selects the route.

Mr. HUNTON. But it is not a subsidy to any given route?

Mr. BATE. It can not be anything else.

Mr. HALE. We do not select the particular road. We know one of two lines will be selected, and when that is selected it is a subsidy.

In voting upon these propositions (and the Chair of course has decided right, that the first question is on the amendments to perfect the paragraph) I trust Senators will think twice before they commit themselves to the very simple-minded project of adding two other routes to a provision which the Senate itself is against.

That would not be a very logical way to go into conference. If the sentiment of the Senate is as indicated, and in which my friend from Kentucky, who has charge of the bill, joins, is against this one route and against subsidies generally for particular routes, it would be a very simple-hearted proposition to go and add two more and then strike them all out and send them into conference, because then in conference it would be claimed that the Senate had already added two to the one, and three are in conference instead of one. The truth is that the only logical way is to vote down all the other amendments and then vote up the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee. That is the only way you can get it into conference and express the sentiment of the Senate against extra subsidies.

Mr. BATE. And let that expression go to the committee of conference.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I wish to draw the attention of the Senate for just a few moments to some of the considerations which affect this matter of special facilities, as it is called, for railways. The history of it has been partly told by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. He antedates somewhat the time. If I am not mistaken in remembrance the first proposition came to pay perhaps the greatest railroad in the country a wholly unnecessary subsidy of $25,000 a year for carrying the mails between Albany and New York City. That subsidy was put upon the Post-Office appropriation bill a good many years ago, not because of a necessity and in order that more rapid transportation of the mails might be secured, but because of the interests in obtaining it.

Next came in the road from New York to Springfield, the New York, New Haven and Hartford, and other rich, powerful, and influential corporations. Then the idea gradually extended, and an appropriation was made for the benefit of the Atlantic Coast Line. I may not be entirely exact in the succession of events, or the specific history, but when the appropriation was made for the Atlantic Coast Line there was not a necessity but something of peculiar advantage in making some subsidy to that line.

It was, comparatively speaking, a new line. It was upon the coast, where there was land and contribution to its carriage only from one side. It was a line to the South much crippled in its resources and abilities to maintain a railroad, and it was a line to open up the new country of Florida to convenient accessibility on the part of the people of the North, especially for winter travel and winter sojourn. That fixed upon that line the main part of the contribution for its support and maintenance, more as a line of rapid and convenient travel than for its mail facilities.

In the last Congress, when the Post-Office appropriation bill was discussed, Congress deliberately took away the subsidy from that line and said, "it had been supported long enough," as it had. The Postmaster-General more than once had recommended that the subsidy be withdrawn. He had stated that it was unnecessary, the ordinary mail pay being ample to support it. Congress took it away, and instead of giving the money to the people by the reduction of appropriations, it applied it to a new line running southwesterly to New Orleans.

That line has enjoyed it during the fiscal year just passed. The natural result is to be seen at once. You no sooner put the subsidy upon a railroad line running through the interior of the country than every railroad running through the interior of the country holds out its hands, not half so much in suppliance as in demand. Cincinnati wants its contribution; Louisville wants its contribution. Why not St. Louis, with its lines to Texas and Santa Fé?

Mr. President, all these things are utterly unnecessary, for two reasons: In the first place, there is contained in the appropriation no stipulation for any difference in the rate of speed with which the mails are to be carried, or any advantage of the kind. Secondly, if there were any such advantages, they are all to be obtained by the application of the present law in a proper manner under the control of the Postmaster-General.

A few years ago there was great desirability for expediting mails through to St. Louis, Kansas City, and the Southwest. An entire day's time was gained without the cost of one additional dollar to the public, simply by using the powers at hand for that purpose, and using them in a way to facilitate, not to disadvantage, the carrying of the mail.

Mr. CULLOM. By a proper contract.

Mr. VILAS. By making a contract to the effect that if a mail train shall be put upon a through route, so as to expedite the time by a certain given number of hours, all the mail which can be carried on that route shall be massed upon it. Thus the railroad receives the additional advantage which the law prescribes for carrying the increased amount of mail. That advantage is at the same time a gain to the people, because the price for carriage diminishes as the weights increase, and the concentration of the mail upon a single route is to the advantage of the carrying of the mails, because thereby all the mail on that route is expedited beyond what any other route can give.

Thus in every aspect in which it can be considered, the true way to expedite a mail train is for the Postmaster-General to make his contract for carriage, specifying his hours, and put the mails upon that route.

Mr. HALE. Under the general appropriation.

Mr. VILAS. Under the general appropriation and the general powers now vested in him.

Now, let me call attention to that matter for one moment. Here is the law, which provides that the Postmaster-General may pay to railroads not to exceed for each mile of the railroad route specified sums per annum. I give the net result after various reductions: Not over 200 pounds, $42.75 per mile; not over 500 pounds, $64.13 per mile; not over 1,000 pounds, $85.50 per mile; not over 1,500 pounds, $106.88 per mile; not over 2,000 pounds, $128.25 per mile, and so on up to 5,000 pounds and over. It will be observed that 2,000 pounds costs the people and pays to the railroads per mile only about three times as much as 200 pounds, one-tenth of the quantity.

Mr. HALE. That is wholesale.

Mr. VILAS. Yes; that is wholesale. At the same time such is the advantage to the railroads of carrying the larger quantities that the more they carry the better is the traffic for them. There is no freight which a railroad carries which pays it as well as do the mails, and the more they can obtain the better. I said there is no freight; it is possible that there are some very highly valued freights which they would carry to greater advantage, but those are transported by express companies and not by the railroad companies.

I believe it is a true statement that the mails are the most profitable freight which the railroads transport, yielding them a profit with the least difficulty and the least cost. Observation of the effect of the scale of prices shows at once how by a proper application of the power at command the mails can be expedited upon any route with greater advantage to the railroad itself, at less cost on the whole to the public, and with gain to the mails which are carried upon the route or even to the section of country through which the railroad runs.

Mr. BRICE. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me for one moment?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. BRICE. I wish to call attention to the fact that the argument has been made as though the railroad companies to whom this subsidy is paid desire the grant. That may have been so a long time ago; I do not know. While I agree substantially with everything that has been said by the Senator from Wisconsin as to the proper mode of mail carriage by the railroads, the railroad companies do not desire these special grants, because they are contingent on the running of extra trains. Such trains are unprofitable to the companies, and they are only forced upon roads by the wants of local communities.

Mr. VILAS. I am glad to have that information from the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BRICE. As to the amendment offered by my colleague Mr. SHERMAN], as well as to the grants which have been made heretofore and the provision now in the bill and others of like character, they are not especially desired by the railroad companies, and the movement in their favor, particularly the one that is made by my colleague, is not made by the railroad companies or specially desired by them. There may be other persons who desire such grants.

Mr. VILAS. On that point alone I am disposed to agree entirely with the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], and especially because I hold in my hand a Cincinnati newspaper, published I believe in the evening, and therefore one which can be perfectly free in respect to the advantage to be derived by these subsidies.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I should be obliged to my friend from Wisconsin if he would allow me to add that——

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have been made the recipient within the last twenty-four hours of the two metropolitan dailies of Cincinnati, the Commercial-Gazette and the Enquirer, both of which were abusing me because I do not favor the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. VILAS. This paper sets forth the fact that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio is wholly and entirely in the interest of the two morning dailies and greatly to the disadvantage of the business community of Cincinnati. I will read an extract from it. It says:

> The Louisville morning papers have now taken a hand in this project and are shouting for "a fast early morning mail to the South, to run in connection with the proposed train from Cincinnati." This Cincinnati-Louisville morning paper combination is tremendously active in trying to secure the coöperation of the trade associations to help the scheme along. Business men and all other citizens have quick eyes for the detection of false pretenses; moreover, they do not like to be humbugged, and it is particularly distasteful to them to be asked to act as tools of selfish schemers. An early morning mail to the South would simply be a morning newspaper mail.
> It would not carry a dozen more letters than are now carried by the regular evening mail train. In regard to a time schedule for a fast mail south a Southern railway official said yesterday:
> "There would be no advantage in a 8 a. m. train. Nobody writes any business mail after 8 o'clock, and so all that mail would be taken by the evening train Then, such a train would arrive at its destination at a bad time, getting into New Orleans in the early morning—that is, about 3 o'clock—as I suppose the object of the fast mail would be to make the run in twenty-four hours."

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the Senator from Wisconsin reading from?

Mr. VILAS. I am reading from the Times-Star. I shall not occupy further time in reading from this article. I indicate by what I have read its general character.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Times-Star is an afternoon paper. I understand the time of leaving, etc., would be entirely at the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

It might be morning or evening, whichever would be the more beneficial to the commercial classes. The Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, as the Senator from Wisconsin knows, is a very respectable body of men, and all of them, and so far as I know all the commercial men of Cincinnati are calling for relief. They have sent me their petitions and memorials in various forms. It may be that it would also be a great convenience to the newspapers.

Mr. VILAS. I can well believe—I should not have supposed to the contrary even without the statement of the Senator from Ohio—that the business men of Cincinnati would do what they could to secure a more rapid communication with the hope of enlarging their trade with the Southern people, especially if that communication could be provided for them at the cost of the Government.

Other newspapers along the line of the proposed route in the Southern States have sent me similar articles. I collected a number of them. I remember some from Chattanooga, and if I am not mistaken from other points in the South, strongly opposing this as a waste of money and saying that it is merely a plan to provide for a more rapid or easy distribution of the Cincinnati morning papers. However that may be, the provision for the newspapers is one thing to be fairly considered. I should not urge it as a reason why fast mail facilities should not be afforded, if they were fast mail facilities, and also of advantage to other business interests.

Newspapers are entitled to as much fair consideration as others who employ mail facilities. Yet it ought to be remarked, and fairly understood, that newspaper mail, the second class of mail matter, now costs the Department and the United States fully one-third of all the expenditures for the postal service, amounting to probably nearly thirty millions a year. It returns in postage only about one-fourth, some two millions a year. So we are doing pretty well in the dissemination of second-class mail matters.

Mr. CAREY. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. VILAS. With pleasure.

Mr. CAREY. Why cannot contracts be made for carrying the mail along the Atlantic seaboard in the same manner that the Postmaster-General makes contracts for carrying fast mail west of Chicago?

Mr. VILAS. Of course, they could do it, and possibly they are now doing it, for the Atlantic Coast Line is no longer the recipient of a subsidy. The Senator, perhaps, is not aware of the fact that in the last Congress it was changed from the Atlantic Coast Line, and is now given to the Richmond and Danville system going to New Orleans.

Mr. CAREY. Does the Senator believe that the South gets any better mail facilities than it would get if it did not have the subsidy?

Mr. VILAS. I think the South can have, without the subsidy, by proper administration of the Post-Office Department and with the law now in the hands of the Postmaster-General, just as good facilities as they can have with the subsidy.

Mr. RANSOM. Will my friend from Wisconsin allow me to say a word to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CAREY. I will give the Senator all the permission in my power.

Mr. RANSOM. I will state to the Senator from Wyoming that in consequence of these mail facilities the mail to the South in the last fourteen years has been carried so as to secure a day's advantage to all the business people of that section. Immediately upon putting in the act the first time the appropriation for these special mail facilities the Postmaster-General made a contract, and the mails were carried so that the papers and all mails were received a day earlier in a very large section of the South. All letters were received a day sooner in consequence of the fast mail, and the same convenient and advantageous condition exists to-day. The saving of twelve hours in every twenty-four in the reception and return of the mails to millions of people is an incalculable good.

Mr. CAREY. Does the Senator from North Carolina believe that the Postmaster-General would take care of the South the same as he has taken care of other portions of the country?

Mr. RANSOM. I have no doubt——

Mr. CAREY. We have fast mail in the West. We get the newspapers and letters by fast mail.

Mr. RANSOM. I have no doubt that the Postmaster-General, as other Postmasters-General have done, will treat the South fairly.

Mr. CAREY. What railroad gets the money?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Richmond and Danville.

Mr. RANSOM. At present it is known as the Richmond and Danville system. Before last year the Atlantic Coast Line system received the facilities. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will pardon me for detaining him. Whether the mail goes by one route or the other, it is the same thing so far as the South is concerned. The mail reaches its destination twelve hours earlier.

Let me tell the Senator from Wyoming exactly how this thing is. Before these fast mail lines were established, we in North Carolina did not receive the New York papers until the day after they were issued. Now we receive them the same day. That is the difference. A day is saved.

Mr. CAREY. Does not the Senator believe that his people would get the papers the same day without the subsidy?

Mr. RANSOM. I do not believe in expressing beliefs, but as the Senator from Wyoming has asked me to do so, I will state that if the appropriation for these mail facilities is withdrawn I believe the Southern lines will be obliged to stop the service.

Mr. CAREY. I understand the Postmaster-General does not even make a recommendation for this appropriation.

Mr. RANSOM. I know that; but he has expended it invariably when Congress has made it.

Mr. CAREY. And the Post-Office Department has not wanted this special appropriation.

Mr. RANSOM. I hoped I had answered the Senator satisfactorily, and I see that I have from the suddenness with which he shifts his position. I will give the Senator a conclusive answer upon that point.

The expenditure of the appropriation for the special mail facilities is left entirely at the discretion of the Postmaster-General. It is not positive. Its expenditure is not arbitrarily required by the bill. The whole appropriation is absolutely at the discretion of the Postmaster-General. Although I think my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], when Postmaster-General, had a paragraph or two in his report in flaming colors against this appropriation, yet when the time came he expended the appropriation himself. His wise discretion would not permit him to withhold it. The appropriation has been made, as my friend from Illinois said a little while ago, since 1877; its expenditure every time being at the discretion of the Postmaster-General. It can not be used otherwise. The act provides that the Postmaster-General must approve it in order to have it used; otherwise he need not expend the money. My friend from Wisconsin was not compelled to expend a dollar of this money; and yet he did expend it, and I stand upon the record of his acts.

There are millions of people in the South receiving their mail, their letters and newspapers a day sooner, twelve hours earlier, and all their business is facilitated by this little appropriation of $190,000. The simple question is whether that condition is to be changed. My friend wants to put them back to the situation which formerly existed.

Mr. CAREY. Will not the Postmaster-General have a right to make an appropriation out of the $25,000,000 to continue this fast mail?

Mr. RANSOM. Oh, no.

Mr. CAREY. He undoubtedly has that right.

Mr. RANSOM. He can not.

Mr. CAREY. Is it not left to the Postmaster-General?

Mr. RANSOM. No. I am sorry I do not know so much about the postal laws as my friend, the Senator from Wisconsin. But I do know that the Postmaster-General under the general law will not and can not pay one railroad more for carrying mail faster than he pays other railroads which are carrying it not so fast. He can not do it. The law provides for no such thing.

Mr. CAREY. The Postmaster-General makes a contract with one railroad——

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Wyoming asked me for my opinion and my judgment. I said distinctly to the Senator that I believed if the provision for the special mail facilities is stricken from the bill we shall not have the fast mail from here to New Orleans and to Tampa and through all the country from here to those places.

Mr. CAREY. I believe the Senator would have it.

Mr. RANSOM. We did not have a fast mail until we adopted this plan. I will tell the Senator from Wyoming where the idea of the fast mail originated. It was with our Northern friends who went to Florida to spend the winter. The Southern people, being mostly farmers, did not miss the lack of proper mails greatly; but the first thing we knew there came up appeals, petitions, memorials from all the Northern people who had gone to spend the winter in Florida, "Do, pray, have faster mails—earlier mails; we can not get our mails." That was the beginning, the inspiration of this movement.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. HUNTON. As I understood the Senator from Wisconsin with reference to the history of this legislation, he said the first appropriation of this kind was given to the Coast Line route.

Mr. VILAS. No, sir. I said that as I remembered, although I do not undertake to be accurate in the statement, the first appropriation was given to the New York Central Railroad.

Mr. HUNTON. I mean in the South.

Mr. VILAS. I understand it was extended south through the Coast Line.

Mr. HUNTON. I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to say that in prosecuting the fast-route enterprise under the appropriation, as first made, the appropriation was made to the Coast Line.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No.

Mr. VILAS. It was made to the Postmaster-General, who employed the Coast Line.

Mr. HUNTON. And he selected the Coast Line.

Mr. VILAS. In point of fact he had no more choice in the selection than if he had been held to that line by an iron law.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him, but the point I raise is that the appropriation of $196,000 was originally expended upon the Coast Line service.

Mr. VILAS. It was much larger, although not more than that was expended on the Coast Line. But the appropriation formerly ran over $250,000.

Mr. HUNTON. It afterward became apparent that the application of the appropriation to a more central route would serve more people, because while confined to the Coast Line, the ramifications of that line conveying the early mail to the side routes and the star routes could only go in one direction, it being a Coast Line route. For that reason, when the Postmaster-General was not confined in his selection to one route, he selected the Richmond and Danville route.

Mr. VILAS. Oh, no. The law compelled him to take that route. I have the law in my hand.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg pardon.

Mr. VILAS. The argument the Senator from Virginia makes now I think he made last year.

Mr. HUNTON. This provision does not select any route. It is open to competition between this route and other Southern routes. I beg to call attention to what has been so well said by my friend from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. RANSOM. From here to Atlanta heretofore there was but one route. Now there are two. One has been established in the last few months.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to emphasize what was so well said by the Senator from North Carolina, that if the Postmaster-General does not want this appropriation, as it has been intimated by the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Wisconsin that he does not, then he need not expend it, because it says:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made——

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not compulsory.

Mr. RANSOM. I hope the Senator from Virginia will read that proviso.

Mr. HUNTON. It says:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

So that the whole thing is left to the discretion of the Postmaster-General for the good of the postal service. Now, I do not see what objection there can be to this provision.

Mr. RANSOM. If I may say one word to my friend before he takes his seat, I will state that a similar provision has been in appropriation acts for the last sixteen years, and every Postmaster-General, since the time such an appropriation was first made, with that proviso before him, has expended the appropriation. The unanimous action and judgment of the Postmasters-General for sixteen years have vindicated this measure. The benefits done the South by it are universally admitted, and there is positive danger of injury to our people if it is discontinued.

Mr. HUNTON. Every Postmaster-General since then has expended the money because he saw that it was for the good of the postal service.

Mr. RANSOM. Yes, sir; and for the good of the people.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it was because the Postmaster-General thought Congress wanted him to expend it.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I have no purpose to do more than to invite the attention of the Senate to some points which I am very sure have escaped in the past, in regard to the manner in which railroads are paid and the enormous waste of money every year upon our inland railroad mail transportation. It is my opinion that with a proper law the transportation of mails could be conducted and railroads still have the best compensation in mail carriage of any class of freight they have, with an annual saving of from seven to ten million dollars on the present expenditure.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it not entirely within the power of the Postmaster-General, under existing law, to make as cheap rates as possible?

Mr. VILAS. So far from it the Postmaster-General is as helpless as the old story placed the man in the iron mask.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should think the Senator from Wisconsin, who is familiar with the subject, would report us a bill at once, because certainly the Postmaster-General should be given the authority.

Mr. VILAS. When I had the honor to be Postmaster-General I pointed out in the report which I have in my hand some facts on this subject to which I shall presently ask the attention of the Senator from Ohio. They might as well have been pointed out to the winds which rage on the Atlantic.

Mr. President, to come back for a moment to where we were when the interruptions began which have diverted us for a few moments, let me notice what my distinguished friend, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], says on the subject of my action as Postmaster-General in reference to these special facilities. He remarked that it was the subject of mention in my reports "in flaming colors," more than once, I think he said. My distinguished friend is mistaken. The evil was of such comparatively small moment and it was so impossible to direct attention to that which was much greater, that it was not mentioned at all, although the subject was studied and examined and discussed in the Department.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not hear the first part of the Senator's statement. Does the Senator mean in the last report or in some previous report?

Mr. VILAS. I spoke of my own report. My successor in the Post-Office Department, Postmaster-General Wanamaker, if I recollect aright, at the end of his term recommended the abolition of that payment.

Mr. CULLOM. It was in the last report he made. I think it was a very positive recommendation that the whole system should be abolished.

Mr. RANSOM. I am very glad that the evil was so small that my friend from Wisconsin did not feel warranted in bringing it to the attention of Congress.

Mr. VILAS. The evil was a comparatively small one, and the circumstances were peculiar. I shall not stop to enter into that matter. At that time the Coast Line was receiving the subsidy, and it was a question whether without the subsidy the Coast Line would maintain the fast mail and passenger train service which it did maintain under the subsidy; and it was for that reason that the Department felt at no liberty to intervene. Besides, it was a matter of conversational communication with the Committee on Appropriations.

But that is not worth spending any time upon. The only question is, what ought to be done now; and I wish to make a further observation, because what I said seems to have been misunderstood. The Postmaster-General can not pay to one railroad any greater rate than the law allows, or discriminate in the rate of pay to one railroad as against another. That is impossible. He is bound to pay the rate fixed by law. He has liberty to pay less, but I know one who tried to pay less and did during his term of office, but his immediate successor restored the rate. The law contemplated that the Postmaster-General should grade the pay in the different classifications according to the weights of mail.

In point of fact, from the beginning until now, with a single exception, the highest rate of pay has always been awarded to every railroad which came within the class, no matter whether it carrried less or more than another. They were all given the top round as the measure of the rate of compensation. But in this way the Post-Office Department may compensate a railroad to advantage. The Postmaster-General may, as it is called in the Department, mass the mails upon a particular line. The Senator from North Carolina says there are now two lines from Washington to New Orleans.

Mr. RANSOM. Three.

Mr. VILAS. Three?

Mr. RANSOM. Yes, sir; substantially.

Mr. VILAS. Three lines, substantially. Each of those lines will carry mail. Each of those lines is prepared to carry mail. Each desires to carry all it can, but by agreement the Postmaster-General may put on one line all the mail which can be carried to its destination upon that line as well as upon others. That gives him the opportunity to put large quantities of mail matter on a single line. In that way the rate per mile is increased, and the railroad gets a considerable advantage. On that basis alone the mails are carried from New York to Chicago, Chicago to St. Paul, Chicago to Omaha. During the time I was Postmaster-General it was desired to expedite the mails to the Southwest.

A contract was made with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company by which a fast mail was delivered at St. Louis, and from St. Louis a train arranged to carry it right on to Kansas City; and the expedition was accomplished entirely by agreeing to give the Pennsylvania and the succeeding line from St. Louis to Kansas City, and the Missouri Pacific, all the mail that could be carried on that route, as well as on any other. At the same time, by application to the different railroads which center in Kansas City, their plans were changed, and the whole system operated so that a through mail train practically carried the mail not only to Kansas City but on each of the trunk lines going from Kansas City to the South, Southwest, and West. It is a simple matter of arrangement under the powers now possessed by the Post-Office Department. As I said before, begging pardon for repeating it, it is an arrangement which gives the railroads more money, costs the people less, and expedites the transportation of the mails.

Mr. President, just let me remark as to the withdrawal of the payment for these special facilities interfering with the expedition of the mail, that since it has been withdrawn from the Coast Line there has been no change substantially in the service on that line. The subsidy has been taken away, but the line is well established and goes on the same as before, not carrying so much mail, because it has been diverted somewhat from it.

Now, let me draw attention to another matter to illustrate the manner in which railroads are paid by the Government of the United States under our law. I have called attention to the rate of pay, increasing per mile with the increase of mail matter. That compensates every railroad in the country. I use the term "compensates." It richly rewards every railroad for its service in carrying the mail, and, as I said before, the more mail they carry the better for them.

Yet at the demand, as I have been told, of the railroad companies many years ago, an additional facility was given them and an additional imposition was laid upon the Post-Office Department and indirectly upon the taxpaying people. It was for postal cars. The law provided practically that the Postmaster-General might in his discretion permit any railroad company he saw fit to carry the mail in postal cars of its ownership, constructed not less than 40 feet in length, and to pay them as follows:

For every line comprising a daily trip each way of railway post-office cars; at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for cars 40 feet in length, and $30 per mile per annum for 45-foot cars; and $40 per mile per annum for 50-foot cars; and $50 per mile per annum for 55 to 60 foot cars.

Now, observe that whatever they receive for cars is in sheer addition, a mere gratuity, because under the general postal law they are required to furnish cars and all the accommodations. All the lesser routes do furnish such cars and they are paid at less remunerative rates. Although on a greater nominal scale, the remuneration to smaller roads is much less than to the larger ones, and yet to the larger ones are assigned the postal cars, and this gratuity is given to them. Let me ask attention to how much that is. It is all set forth in the report of 1887.

As I remarked before, the Postmaster-General had no discretion, and it was necessary to estimate and appropriate for the service for the year 1888 $2,000,000 for the rent of postal cars in addition to what the railroads were paid. That pay by law covered the cars and all the service, and the additional $2,000,000 was given to the companies who had the greatest advantage in the law of compensation. The pending bill carries $3,000,000 for this purpose.

Let me show to the Senate what the fact was at that time in reference to the cars for which we gave $2,000,000 rent. I observe that—

Careful inquiry discloses that very many of these cars, such as they are, would not cost to build $3,000 each, that the best 50-foot cars can be built for $4,000 to $4,500 each, a new 60-foot car equal to the most complete and handsome now in the service for not over $4,600, and that taking together all the post-office cars in the United States their average value does not probably exceed $3,500.

Without protracting the debate, I will state that this report sets forth the cost for all the services for postal cars, cleaning, heating, lighting, supplies of oil, ice, dusters, scrub brushes, soap, lamp fixtures, pails, and other minor articles of daily use, and all the necessary arrangements and ordinary repairs, and the total worth of the cars at the time, with the total expense of their operation for a year, was $1,846,240, a sum less than the appropriation for their rent for a year.

To-day instead of appropriating $3,000,000 in the bill as a sheer additional gratuity to the railroads, the Congress of the United States might better comply with the recommendation made in this report and appropriate that sum to the Postmaster-General to buy every postal car in the United States and operate it for the next year. The amount is enough. The railroads would then get their pay for transporting the mails without furnishing the cars at all, and the United States would make a handsome sum of money in the speculation.

I agree that that has nothing to do with this important point, but I was setting forth in detail one of the illustrations which prove the remark to be correct which I made in answer to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. RANSOM. I will thank the Senator from Wisconsin if he will tell us whether there is any provision in the postal laws for paying more for fast mail service?

Mr. VILAS. There is not, except the appro priations for special facilities which are under discussion.

Mr. RANSOM. That is what I understood.

Mr. VILAS. I have already explained the method by which the Postmaster-General may, under the law, make contracts which will secure fast mail service. It is perfectly easy.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendments are not in order, and that upon the question of order they ought to be excluded from the bill. I therefore suggest the point of order on the amendments.

Mr. SHERMAN. My amendment has been introduced in a formal way. I introduced the amendment; it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations; it was received and considered by the committee, and it seems to me that the rule has been complied with. It is true that it is an additional item of appropriation, but it has been considered by the committee, and that is all that is necessary to give the Senate jurisdiction of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin makes the point of order upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky. The Chair will have Rule XVI read.

Mr. RANSOM. As there has been a very full discussion upon the matter and as the point of order was not made by the committee, I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will not insist on it.

Mr. VILAS. I have not the slightest desire to defeat the amendment upon a point of order if the Senate wishes to adopt it.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us hear the rule read, so as to see precisely what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XVI.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

1. All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce; and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

Mr. VILAS. At the request of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GEORGE. I renew it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is renewed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VILAS. Then, let us have a direct vote on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order under the rule which has just been read. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6 it is proposed to strike out the clause from line 1 to line 8, inclusive, in the following words:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Springfield, Mass., via New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $196,614.22: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand the amendments have been ruled out of order, and perhaps with those amendments out, the Senator from Tennessee may not care to strike the paragraph from the bill.

Mr. BATE. That the Senate and the Senator from Virginia may more clearly understand my position, I will move to strike out that which has just been read. That is what I moved before.

Mr. DANIEL. This particular clause?

Mr. BATE. Yes, sir.

Mr. DANIEL. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] has given us a very interesting and valuable discourse on a number of matters connected with the postal service, but it does not seem to me that much that he has said affects the wisdom or the unwisdom of this particular clause in the pending appropriation bill. This is a bill which comes to us from the House of Representatives. The provision which the Senator from Tennessee has moved to strike out reads as follows:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Springfield, Mass., via New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $196,614.22: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

It has been said that this is a subsidy. I do not see that it can be properly so impugned. A contract in which a quid pro quo is received for an expenditure is not, as I conceive, a subsidy. A subsidy is an appropriation in the nature of a gift or donation to build up, cherish, or foster a certain thing upon the idea that incidental benefits may arise to the public. A direct benefit to the public, purchased and paid for for a fair consideration, is not a subsidy, but a proper mercantile contract, such as we make every day to sustain all branches of the Government.

Is this a subsidy or authorization to one of the Departments of the Government to make such a contract as may be directly, not indirectly, immediately, not remotely, but instanter, then and there for the benefit of the postal service and for the people who have an interest therein?

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines.

What is "necessary" when bought and paid for does not enter into the consideration of subsidy; and "special" there evidently means where convenient and desirable and proper for the promotion of the postal service.

Then, there is an additional clause, a proviso, which utterly negates the idea of a subsidy:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Not promote the interest of the railroad. In other words, the Postmaster-General, in order to make an honest appropriation of the funds here provided, must have his mind solely directed to the public consideration of the postal service and the expenditure of enough money to carry out that sole purpose.

In this day and generation time is of the essence of all contracts. Mail facilities are necessary to every business in this country, for there is no more bustling people than those of the United States, and last year's newspaper is ancient history. People live in to-day; prices change so quickly and the world is moving so rapidly that he who is belated in his mail is left behind the times.

Mr. President, there is nothing sectional in this appropriation. It stretches from one end of the country to the other. It begins in Springfield, Mass., and it ends in New Orleans, La., and the best evidence that this is a desirable appropriation and one needed by the public service is the fact that the administrative officers of all Administrations, without regard to party, have felt called upon to exercise the discretion vested in them and to use the funds given to them by Congress to promote and build up this great trunk continental line of postal facilities; and even the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, when he was Postmaster-General, yielded to the public considerations which were addressed to him, and thought it incumbent upon him in discharging the duties of his office to make such appropriations of such funds.

I should have voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] if it had been in order; I should have voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] if it had been in order. I am for economy; but not for a penny-wise and a pound-foolish economy.

When the people get the benefit of their money honestly expended under such an Administration as now exists, they do not begrudge the appropriation. I do not mean by that to cast any reflection upon any previous Administration, but only to say that when the people are satisfied that an honest Administration applies their taxation for public benefits which they receive, and which are fairly distributed all over the country, they do not begrudge the expenditure, but rejoice that they are able to gratify themselves with the conveniences which that expenditure supplies.

If you ask any business man in the United States to-day what he looks to most as elements of success, he would say his advertisement and his mail—the advertisement which keeps him, through the press, in contact with the public, and the mail, which gives him the private and confidential communications which are not intended for the public ear. Through these avenues of information he drinks in the mental pabulum which enables him to build up his business, and in an age of sharp competition a day lost is enough to throw him as a factor out of the battle.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE].

Mr. KYLE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. GIBSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON]. I do not see him in the Chamber, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER]. If he were here I should vote "nay."

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. CAFFERY. I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. DUBOIS. I inquire if the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am paired with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. GORDON. I am authorized under my pair to vote when my vote is necessary to make a quorum. I understand that to be the case now, and I vote "nay."

Mr. CAFFERY. I have a right to vote to make a quorum, and I vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. My colleague [Mr. MCLAURIN] is paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If my colleague were here, I think he would vote "yea."

Mr. PROCTOR. As I have announced, I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON], and vote "nay."

Mr. GIBSON. Under that arrangement I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

Mr. DUBOIS. I am informed that the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], with whom I am paired, would vote "nay" if he were present, and with that understanding I vote "nay."

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I feel at liberty to vote to make a quorum, and I vote "nay."

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the negative). I inquire of the Chair if the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. PERKINS. I am paired with that Senator, but I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], and let my vote stand.

Mr. KYLE. I wish to state that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], were he here, would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Under my arrangement with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] I have the right to vote when my vote is necessary to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—18.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendmends were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6415) to provide an immediate revision and equalization of real estate values in the District of Columbia; also to provide an assessment of real estate in said District in the year 1896 and every third year thereafter, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6108) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President——

Mr. MILLS. I ask the Senator from Kentucky if he will yield to me to move an executive session?

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand the Senator from Kentucky desires to yield to me to call up a bill on the Calendar, which I do not think will require any length of time in its discussion.

Mr. MILLS. It is almost too late now.

Mr. FAULKNER. It is very important that we should now proceed to the consideration of the bill to which I refer, if there is no serious objection to it, and it will not take, I think, over half an hour. It is House bill 352, for the admission of the Territory of Utah as a State.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

ADMISSION OF UTAH.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 352) to enable the people of Utah to form a constitution and State government, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 29, after the word "shall," to strike out:

within twenty days after the passage of this act, by proclamation order an election of the delegates aforesaid in said Territory, to be held on such day as he may in such proclamation designate, not less than sixty nor more than ninety days after the issuing thereof.

And insert:

on the 1st day of August, 1894, issue a proclamation ordering an election of the delegates aforesaid in said Territory, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November following.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 3, before the word "Monday," to strike out "third" and insert "first;" and after the word "Monday," to strike out "after their election," and insert "in March, 1895;" so as to read:

That the delegates to the convention thus elected shall meet at the seat of government of said Territory on the first Monday in March, 1895, and, after organization, shall declare on behalf of the people of said proposed State that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon the said convention shall be, and is hereby, authorized to form a constitution and State government for said proposed State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, after the word "held," at the end of line 5, to strike out "at a time fixed in said ordinance," and insert "on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1895;" so as to read:

That in case a constitution and State government shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act, the convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitution to the people of said State for its ratification or rejection, at an election to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1895, at which election the qualified voters of said proposed State shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution, and for or against any provisions separately submitted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I wish the attention of the chairman of the committee. I see that it is provided in the fifth section—

That until the next general census, or until otherwise provided by law, said State shall be entitled to one Representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, which Representative in the Fifty-third Congress, etc.

In lines 13 and 16, of section 19, the word "Representatives' is used. Should not the "s" be stricken out so as to make it singular?

Mr. FAULKNER. That is a proper amendment. It was a typographical error to print the word "Representatives."

Mr. PLATT. Then, in lines 13 and 16 of section 19, I move to strike out the word "Representatives" and insert "Representative." The word "Representatives," where it occurs in line 18, is proper.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 11, 1894, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 10, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Rev. JOHN W. HEIDT, of Georgia.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

IMPROVEMENT OF SAUGATUCK HARBOR, MICHIGAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to House resolution of date of June 26, 1894, information as to the probable cost of completing the improvement of Saugatuck Harbor, Michigan, which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

FLAGS OF TWENTY-SECOND MICHIGAN INFANTRY VOLUNTEERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate bill:

A bill (S. 2070) to provide for the restoration to the State of Michigan two flags carried by the Twenty-second Michigan Infantry Volunteers and now in the War Department.

Mr. AITKEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to consider this bill. The Clerk will report it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to turn over to the State of Michigan two flags which were carried by the Twenty-second Regiment of Michigan Infantry Volunteers, and which are now among the recaptured Union flags in the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. AITKEN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ABBOTT, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. EDMUNDS, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LIVINGSTON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

HUGHES BROTHERS & BANGS.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7434) directing the issue of a duplicate of a lost check drawn by Capt. W. H. Bixby, Engineers United States Army, at Newport, R. I., in favor of Messrs. Hughes Brothers & Bangs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Capt. W. H. Bixby, Engineers United States Army, be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to issue a duplicate of an original check, under such regulations in regard to its issue and payment as have been prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury for the issue of duplicate checks under the provisions of section 3646, Revised Statutes of the United States. Said duplicate check to take the place of an original check issued by said W. H. Bixby on September 25, 1893, in favor of Hughes Bros. & Bangs, for the sum of $5,011.93, and numbered 259001, being for services in August, 1893, under their contract with the United States for work at Point Judith, R. I., which check is alleged to have been lost in its transmission through the United States mail.

The Committee on Claims recommended the following amendment:

After the word "three," in line 12, insert the words "upon the subtreasury at New York."

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report, which is very short, be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report can be read.

The report (by Mr. LOUD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7434) for the relief of Hughes Bros. & Bangs for check No. 259001, drawn by Capt. W. H. Bixby, United States Engineers, on the subtreasury at New York, issued on September 25, 1893, in favor of Hughes Bros. & Bangs, for services rendered, report:

It appears to your committee, in evidence submitted, that said check was duly mailed, since which time no trace has been found. Payment was duly stopped, as will appear, October 12, 1893. Under the present law no duplicate check can be drawn for a larger amount than $2,500; hence the only relief open to sufferers of this character is by special act. We therefore recommend that the bill do pass, with the following amendment:

Insert after the word "three," in line 12, the words "upon the subtreasury at New York."

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Newport, R. I., June 25, 1894.

SIR: Yours of the 23d instant duly received.

The lost check in favor of Messrs. Hughes Bros. & Bangs, was dated September 25, 1893, was what is known as an "engineer's" check (No. 259001), and was drawn on the assistant treasurer at New York, who stopped payment on the same on the 12th October, 1893. * * *

Hoping this will give you the desired information, and that you will be successful in your efforts, I am,

Very truly, yours,

W. H. BIXBY,
Captain, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

Hon. CHARLES H. PAGE, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I understand by the reading of that report that the check was drawn upon the subtreasury at New York?

Mr. PAGE. That is correct.

Mr. SAYERS. The check was lost?

Mr. PAGE. The check was lost.

Mr. SAYERS. And the payment at the subtreasury has been stopped?

Mr. PAGE. It was immediately stopped, on October 12, 1893.

Mr. SAYERS. And has never been found, and never been presented?

Mr. PAGE. It has never been found, and never been presented.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is there any provision for guaranteeing the United States against loss?

Mr. PAGE. The bill provides that proper indemnity shall be given to the Government.

Mr. LOUD. The check is to be paid under the statute covering cases of that kind.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Claims was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PAGE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DONATION OF OBSOLETE GUN CARRIAGES TO MARSHALLTOWN, IOWA.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1045) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate four obsolete gun carriages to the city of Marshalltown, Iowa.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to turn over four of the obsolete gun carriages at the Rock Island Arsenal to the city of Marshalltown, Iowa, for use in mounting four 20-pounder Parrott guns, donated to said city by act of Congress approved July 19, 1882: Provided, That said city shall bear any expense necessary to place these carriages in serviceable condition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COUSINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MARLIN PARKS.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 562) for the relief of Marlin Parks.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of war be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to revoke the order of dismissal of Marlin Parks, late first lieutenant Company B, Eleventh West Virginia Volunteers, and issue to him an honorable discharge from the service of the United States, to date the 18th day of November, 1864.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider this bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Let the report be read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. BOWERS of California) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 562) for the relief of Marlin Parks, have considered the same and report:

It appears, from the evidence submitted to the committee, a part of which is made a part of this report, that at the battle of Cedar Creek, Virginia, October 19, 1864, his regiment, the Eleventh West Virginia Volunteers, attached to Gen. Crook's command, received the first attack of the Confederate forces, was driven back, and the whole command thrown into disorder and became broken and scattered, and the regiment did duty during the day with other commands, and the command with which Lieut. Marlin Parks was attached did not reorganize until the next day.

It appears that when driven back the lieutenant collected as many of the men as possible, and served during the day with the Sixth and Nineteenth Army Corps, and the following morning searched out his regiment and joined it with the men he had gathered.

So great had been the disorganization that a commission of officers were appointed to investigate the matter, and a number of officers were notified to appear, and all, except three—Capt. John W. Myers, Capt. R. King, and Lieut. Parks—appeared and were exonerated. Those who did not appear claim that they did not receive the notice until it was too late and the inquiry was finished. They were summarily dismissed without charge or trial.

The statements of the colonel of the regiment, and of the lieutenant-colonel, and of eight members of the regiment, all of whom except the colonel were with Lieut. Parks during the day, prove conclusively that he was doing his full duty the entire day; that he was a brave soldier, always with his regiment in all the battles for three years, and his dismissal was a great wrong done a gallant officer.

Your committee therefore recommend the bill do pass.

During the reading,

Mr. BURROWS said: I observe that the report is quite lengthy, and possibly the gentleman can state the substance of it.

Mr. CAPEHART. It is a short report, and is contained on one page.

The SPEAKER. The exhibits are lengthy, but the report is short.

Mr. BURROWS. Very well.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KILGORE. What committee does that bill come from?

Mr. CAPEHART. From the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KILGORE. Does not the Friday night session have jurisdiction of that bill?

Mr. CAPEHART. I will say that I tried it there, and the Chairman ruled it out.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I think the Chairman let in pretty much everything the other night.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Is it a bill removing the charge of desertions?

Mr. CAPEHART. No, sir.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then it is not in order at the Friday night session.

Mr. DOCKERY. I would state to the gentleman from Texas that it does not involve the charge of desertion, and therefore is not in order on Friday night sessions.

Mr. KILGORE. I think before that bill passes there ought to be some very good reasons for it.

Mr. CAPEHART. I hope the gentleman listened to the report.

Mr. KILGORE. I listened to the report, but it does not give sufficient reason, because it is only a stump speech written by somebody in behalf of the party. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAPEHART. It seems to me impossible to give any better reason.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would state to the gentleman that I wrote that report myself, and it is founded upon official records and affidavits of all the officers of the regiment. [Laughter.]

Mr. KILGORE. I give up. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CAPEHART, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MICHAEL SCANLON.

Mr. KEM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5923) for the relief of Michael Scanlon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to Michael Scanlon, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $200, to reimburse him for the loss of a like sum through the dishonesty of a receiver of the United States land office at North Platte, Nebr.

Mr. KEM. I ask the Clerk to read a letter from the Commissioner of Public Lands to the Secretary of the Interior bearing upon that claim.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 4, 1894.

SIR: I have received by reference, House bill No. 5923, entitled a bill "for the relief of Michael Scanlon," to reimburse him the sum of $200, for the loss of a like sum through the dishonesty of a receiver of the United States land office at North Platte, Nebr., submitted by Hon. N. N. COX, chairman first Subcommittee on Claims, for report thereon.

I have the honor to report that the records of this office show that on July 1, 1884, Michael Scanlon filed preëmption declaratory statement, No. 3842, for the E. ½ of SE. ¼ and SE ¼ of NE. ¼ section 15, and NE. ¼ of NE. ¼ section 22, T. 15 N., R. 21 W., and made final proof January 15, 1885, before John D. Seaman, receiver, and deposited with said receiver the sum of $200 in payment for the land, and also $1.40 for reducing testimony to writing. The receiver, John D. Seaman, when he received the money from Michael Scanlon, issued a receipt as follows:

"UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE,
"North Platte, Nebr., January 15, 1885.

"Received of Michael Scanlon two hundred dollars, final proof payment on D. S. 3842 calling for NE. ¼ of NE. ¼ section 22, and E. ½ of SE. ¼, SE. ¼ of NE. ¼ section 15, township 15, range 21 west.

"JOHN D. SEAMAN, Receiver."

Action on Scanlon's proof was suspended by the local officers to await the result of an examination by a special agent.

On November 25, 1887, the filing made by Scanlon was held for cancellation upon the report of a special agent of this office, upon the grounds that the entryman failed to comply with the law as to residence and improvements, and that he made the filing in the interest of his employer.

A hearing was ordered by this office, on the 28th of January, 1888, upon Scanlon's application, but the case never came to trial.

Under date of December 10, 1890, a special agent of this office reported that he visited the claim of Mr. Scanlon on December 7, 1890, and found thereon the remains of a board and sod house 10 by 12 feet wide, dug-out stable 12 by 14 feet, with board roof; a well, said to be 35 feet deep; some old wire, and an occasional post, indicating that a fence had been put around the building, and 12 to 15 acres under cultivation; that the improvements when made probably cost about $250; that Scanlon fully complied with the law as to residence; that he now lives in Broken Bow, but has the land cultivated on shares, and that no party other than claimant ever had any interest in the filing.

In view of the facts developed by the investigation of the special agent, as set forth above, the action of this office of November 25, 1887, and January 28, 1888, was revoked, and the final proof of Scanlon's, made on the 15th of January, 1885, was accepted and returned to the local office at North Platte on June 20, 1892, for proper action thereon.

July 28, 1892, upon the payment of $200, paid by Mr. T. C. Patterson, as the attorney for Michael Scanlon, the local officers approved the final proof of Scanlon, made in 1885, and final certificates and receipt issued therefor No. 6971, upon which a patent issued April 24, 1893.

As John D. Seaman, then receiver, actually received the $200 from Michael Scanlon, in his official capacity as receiver of public moneys, without irregularity on the part of the payer, and appropriated said sum, or at least failed to account therefor, I am of the opinion that the entryman should not be made to lose said sum on account of an irregularity of a public officer.

House bill No. 5923 is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I understand from the letter that has just been read that the $200 was paid for the land.

Mr. KEM. Oh, yes.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, why should the land office have insisted upon the second payment of $200, when $200 has already been paid to the proper officer of the Government?

Mr. KEM. I will say, in reply to that, that I can not say why the Government did that; but the fact shows that the Government did it, and that this gentleman has paid $400 for the land when he should only have paid $200. All this bill asks is that he be reimbursed in the amount of $200.

Mr. SAYERS. Is there any evidence to show that the $200 that was first paid was not returned to this man?

Mr. KEM. Oh, yes.

Mr. COX. I reported the bill. Let me make a statement about it.

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. COX. The facts in this case can be stated in a few words.

Mr. SAYERS. What I desire to know is what evidence there is that the $200 originally paid was not returned.

Mr. COX. The money was paid to the proper officer, but some contest arose as to who was entitled to have the land. In the course of time this man received the land; but in the meantime the Government officer to whom the money had been paid defaulted upon his bond, and when the contest was decided in Scanlan's favor an additional $200 was demanded and paid. Thus he was obliged to pay $400 when he should have paid only $200. The first $200 was paid through an attorney, and the matter did not appear on the record in exactly correct form. But there is no doubt this man paid $400 when he ought to have paid only $200; and the $200 which he ought not to have paid has never been returned.

Mr. KEM. I can assure the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] that I am familiar with the circumstances of this case, and that it is all right.

Mr. COX. There is no doubt at all about it.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KEM, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MATHEW S. PRIEST.

Mr. PEARSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1314) for the relief Mathew S. Priest.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $300 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to compensate Matthew S. Priest for services rendered by him for the Government of the United States from the 16th day of March to the 27th day of August, 1863, as engineer of the steamers Silver Wave and Moderator, in passing the batteries of Vicksburg, Warrenton, and Grand Gulf, and for repairing steamers.

SEC. 2. That the sum hereby appropriated is made immediately available.

Mr. PEARSON. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

The report (by Mr. WILSON of Ohio) was read, as follows:

This claim was presented to the Fifty-second Congress, and was favorably reported upon by the Committee on War Claims, to whom it was referred.

After a careful investigation of the facts involved your committee adopts the report of the Fifty-second Congress, a copy thereof being hereto attached and made a part of this report, and recommend that the bill do pass.

[House Report No. 435, Fifty-second Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3398) for the relief of Matthew S. Priest, submit the following report:

This measure was considered by this committee in the Fifty-first Congress, and was reported upon favorably, which report is appended as a part of this report.

Your committee concur in the conclusions stated in that report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 570, Fifty-first Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3030) for the relief of Matthew S. Priest, make the following report:

Matthew S. Priest was a private in Company G, Thirtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and served in that company and regiment, and was honorably discharged.

He was one of a detachment made by Gen. Grant to do special service on board the steamers Silver Wave and Moderator in running the batteries at Vicksburg and Grand Gulf, Miss.

Claimant served on such detachment as engineer from March, 1863, until September, 1863, as shown by affidavits of four comrades, one officer, and the records of the War Department.

The men and officers engaged in this service as aforesaid were authorized by a special order from Gen. Grant to be paid by the Quartermaster's Department in addition to their army pay, as appears by the records of the War Department.

Records of the War Department also show that many officers and soldiers serving as aforesaid were reported and received the pay by Capts. W. C. Hurlburt and William Finkle.

Records of the War Department do not show that this man, Matthew S. Priest, has received pay for the said service, or that any payment has been made therefor by the Government.

There can be no doubt that the man performed the service; that he has not received pay for the same; that he is entitled to pay therefor, and that the amount claimed is now justly due him from the Government, and we therefore earnestly recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. KILGORE. Was not this man in the employ of the Government at the time this service was rendered?

Mr. PEARSON. He was.

Mr. KILGORE. Was he not paid by the Government for other services?

Mr. PEARSON. Under a special order of Gen. Grant, this man was detached to serve as an engineer, and he performed that service.

Mr. KILGORE. Was that service any more valuable than service as a soldier?

Mr. PEARSON. It was very much more valuable. Engineers at that time were receiving very large wages.

Mr. KILGORE. It was not so dangerous a service as carrying a musket, according to my experience.

Mr. PEARSON. The gentleman will permit me to say it was much more dangerous, as it involved an attempt to run the batteries of Vicksburg.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I was around there about that time, and I know something about these matters.

Mr. PEARSON. This service was very much more dangerous, and these other men who performed similar service were paid.

Mr. KILGORE. How many of them were on detached service?

Mr. PEARSON. I do not know how many; but quite a number have been paid. A bill similar to this was favorably reported in the Fifty-first Congress and the Fifty-second; and there has been again a favorable report in this Congress.

Mr. KILGORE. The report says there is no evidence in the War Department that payment has been made. Now the evidence of that fact would not be found in the War Department. Search ought to have been made in the Treasury Department.

Mr. PEARSON. Search has been made.

Mr. KILGORE. In the War Department, the report says.

Mr. PEARSON. Search has been made; and the committee is satisfied that no payment has been made. It is a fact that there has been no payment. I know this man personally. I know that he is an old man, and that he is in need of this money.

Mr. KILGORE. He may be a very good man, but this seems to be a bad bill.

Mr. PEARSON. The money is actually due to him; and if these services had been rendered by a private citizen, he would have been paid long ago.

Mr. KILGORE. Was there any agreement by the commanding general that he should be paid?

Mr. PEARSON. There was an order by Gen. Grant that he should be paid. The records show that.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PEARSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ALBERT E. REDSTONE.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1105) for the relief of Albert E. Redstone.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,800, to Albert E. Redstone, of Tulare County, Cal., for loss sustained by the incorporation of his preëmption claim within the limits of the Sequoia Park Reservation, Tulare County, Cal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I do not feel inclined to allow this bill to pass without some explanation.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I shall be very glad to give an explanation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] will be permitted to make a short explanation.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the Senate on the 29th of March last, after thorough examination and debate.

Mr. KILGORE. That does not prove anything.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Oh, I know that my friend from Texas has yet some little confidence remaining in the Senate. The language of Senator BERRY, used during the discussion in the Senate, explains briefly and clearly the merits of the measure:

Mr. BERRY. This claim was referred to a special committee. My understanding of what the committee intended was to allow for the actual damages to the property taken. This man, under the laws of the United States, took this preëmption claim, which he had a right to take. He invested all that he had. He built the house; he built the fences; he put out the fruit trees and smaller fruit and made the improvements of the water wheel, and had his barn. It was every dollar that he had on earth. The United States, after he had occupied the land some two years, passed a law reserving the land for a park. He was forced away from there by the soldiers of the United States and not permitted to remain on it. I believe that the Government ought to pay him his actual losses. My understanding was, however, as I said, that when the bill was reported back by the Senator from South Dakota he had taken out the damages that referred to the injury to the stock and also for the water power to which the Senator refers; at least there was some conversation to that effect in the committee and I was under the impression that the allowance had been reduced by that amount.

I think the Government ought to pay him for the balance of the property. I think it was an outrage for the Government to destroy the man's property in that way, turn him out of house and home when he had entered the land under the laws of the United States, when he had a right to go there under the preemption laws. He went there and complied with every law in force at the time. The land was afterwards reserved, and when he was removed in the manner he was I think he ought to be paid what he was actually damaged. But if the items mentioned by the Senator from Missouri go to make up the total of the bill I think the Senator from Missouri is right and that part ought to be stricken out, because I think the actual damages are all he ought to be compensated for.

Mr. KILGORE. Now, has the Government never paid him anything?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Not a penny.

Mr. KILGORE. Are you sure of that?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Entirely sure of it. Mr. Kyle, Senator Felton, and the subcommittee investigated the matter fully——

Mr. KILGORE. What about the price of the property?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Originally the claim was for $2,800, but it was cut down to $1,800.

Mr. KILGORE. In any event he would be only entitled to the improvements, and that ought to be diminished by the value of the occupancy.

Mr. BOWERS of California. That is all he asks for.

Mr. KILGORE. How long did he occupy the premises?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Two years; and here is the certificate of the payment of the register's fees and the receiver's fees, showing that he had complied with the law and acquired an equitable right to the land.

Mr. KILGORE. How did they make an appraisement of the value of the improvements?

Mr. BOWERS of California. I will show you. The testimony shows that he had made improvements of the following character:

A cottage house, a stone house, a stable, 12-foot overshot water wheel, picket dooryard fence, corral, rail fences, irrigating ditch, fruit trees, grapevines, strawberries, blackberries, raspberries, barley, wheat, and many kinds of vegetables; that he owned mules, horses, and cattle, farming utensils, wagons, etc., and that the said Redstone was continually making improvements on the said reservation up to the time that the said reservation was made.

The testimony shows that he was making improvements steadily, that he regarded the land as his own, and there is no question that he was under the law in lawful possession of it. Here are embodied in the report the items of the account, bringing it up to $2,800, which, as I have said, was afterwards cut down to $1,800:

House and storehouse	$550
Barn	100
Vines and trees	600
Fences	300
Water wheel	100
Loss on stock and implements	500
Ditch, 1 mile long	150
Water power	500
Total	2,800

Mr. KILGORE. The Government converted it into a park, I understand?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Yes; converted it into a park and drove him away.

Mr. KILGORE. Did he go there with notice that it was to be a park?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Certainly not. He was there two years before it was ever contemplated to use it for a park. He went there with the understanding that he was making a settlement, as he had a right to do under the law, and after he had done so he was driven from the property, which the Government took possession of.

Mr. KILGORE. Did the Government give him to understand that this property was open for settlement?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Certainly; and here is the certificate of the register and receiver of the land office showing that he had paid his fees to them and made the proper entry.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Government officials accepted the fees from him?

Mr. BOWERS of California. They accepted the fees and issued the certificates, as I have said. The record is undoubtedly all correct in the matter. I have examined it carefully, and there is no question of his right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

Mr. DOCKERY. I would like to have an opportunity to examine this a little further. Let it go over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. DOCKERY. I only ask that it lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Let me say to the gentleman that this bill has been up twice. Two gentlemen objected and asked that it go over temporarily, and as soon as they examined it they were perfectly satisfied and willing that it should be considered and passed.

Mr. STOCKDALE. It has gone so far now you may as well let it go through.

Mr. LOUD. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the Committee on Claims have carefully investigated this matter and report in favor of it.

Mr. DOCKERY. At the suggestion of gentlemen around me I will withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. BOWERS of California, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. DOCKERY and Mr. KILGORE demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE, THRASHER VS. ENLOE.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a privileged matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I call up for present consideration the contested-election case of P. H. Thrasher against B. A. Enloe, from the Eighth Congressional district of the State of Tennessee.

I will state, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Elections are agreed that the contestee is entitled to the seat, a majority of the committee reporting that he is entitled to the seat by 110 majority, and the minority by a vote of 25, so that there is no difference in the committee except as to the amount of his majority, and consequently there is no disagreement in the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That P. H. Thrasher was not elected a member of the House of Representatives to the Fifty-third Congress from the Eighth Congressional district of the State of Tennessee, and is not entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That Benjamin A. Enloe was elected a Representative to the Fifty-third Congress from the Eighth Congressional district of Tennessee, and that he is entitled to the seat.

The resolutions were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PATTERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 6748) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 6558) to amend section numbered 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to mining claims; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. Marcus C. Lisle, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That a committee consisting of five Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to attend with the committee on the part of the House of Representatives the funeral of the deceased at his late residence in the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives, and that he be further directed to send a duly-attested copy of the same to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

In compliance with the foregoing resolution, the Presiding Officer appointed as said committee Mr. BLACKBURN, Mr. LINDSAY, Mr. PALMER, Mr. SQUIRE, and Mr. DUBOIS.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 7293) regulating the procedure in criminal causes in the district of Minnesota; when the Speaker signed the same.

COMMITTEE REPORTS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

The committees were called for reports.

SECTION 40 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by the Committee on the Judiciary to report favorably a bill to improve the public health and public morals in this House. It is a bill to repeal section 40 of the Revised States.

The bill (H. R. 7274) repealing section 40 of the Revised Statutes was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I ask leave that the minority may file their views.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the minority will have leave to file their views, and when filed they will be printed.

There was no objection.

LIGHT-HOUSE, ETC., GALVESTON HARBOR, TEXAS.

Mr. BRICKNER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, reported a bill (H. R. 7109) to establish a light-house and a range light at the entrance to Galveston Harbor, in the county of Galveston, in the State of Texas; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

SEWERAGE SYSTEM IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. 7677) as a substitute for the bill (H. R. 7185) to provide for continuing the system of trunk sewers in the District of Columbia, to provide for sewage disposal, to lay out highways, and for other purposes. The bill (H. R. 7677) was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The bill (H. R. 7185) was ordered to lie on the table.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of committees for reports. The morning hour begins at fourteen minutes before 1 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Public Lands, which has a bill now pending before the House. The Clerk will report the title of that bill.

PUBLIC LANDS, ALABAMA.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 195) to amend an act entitled "An act to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands," approved March 3, 1883.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. McRAE. I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection.

The bill was read at length.

The Committee on Public Lands recommended that the bill be amended so as to read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands," approved March 3, 1883, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. TRACEY. I should like to ask whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office has recommended the passage of this bill.

Mr. McRAE. He has.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. McRAE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. McRAE. I desire to amend the title of this bill by striking out the word "amend" and inserting the word "repeal."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the suggestion.

There was no objection.

UNCOMPAHGRE INDIANS.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Indian Affairs is next called.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to call up the bill (H. R. 6557) providing for opening the Uncompahgre and Uintah Indian Reservation in Utah.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I shall have to object. I have an amendment to propose to the bill.

Mr. LYNCH. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6557) providing for opening the Uncompahgre and Uintah Indian Reservations in Utah, with Mr. DOCKERY in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in committee to consider a bill which the Clerk will now report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a commission of three persons, within thirty days after the passage of this act, to allot in severalty to the Uncompahgre Indians within their reservation, in the Territory of Utah, agricultural and grazing lands according to the treaty of 1880, as follows:

"Allotments in severalty of said lands shall be made as follows: To each head of a family one-quarter of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-quarter of a section; to each single person over 18 years of age, one-eighth of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-eighth of a section; to each orphan child under 18 years of age, one-eighth of a section, with an additional quantity of grazing land not exceeding one-eighth of a section; to each other person under 18 years of age, born prior to such allotment, one-eighth of a section, with a like quantity of grazing land: Provided, That with the consent of said commission any adult Indian may select a less quantity of land, if more desirable on account of location." All necessary surveys, if any, to enable said commission to complete the allotments shall be made under the direction of the General Land Office. Said commissioners shall, as soon practicable after their appointment, report to the Secretary of the Interior what portions of said reservation are unsuited or will not be required for allotments, and thereupon such portions so reported shall, by proclamation, be restored to the public domain and made subject to entry as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That the remainder of the lands on said reservation shall, upon the approval of the allotments by the Secretary of the Interior, be immediately open to entry under the homestead and mineral laws of the United States: Provided, That after three years' actual and continuous residence upon agricultural lands from date of settlement the settler may, upon full payment of $1.50 per acre, receive patent for the tract entered. If not commuted at the end of three years the settler shall pay, at the time of making final proof, the sum of $1.50 cents per acre: Provided, That the minimum price of mineral lands known to contain asphaltum shall be $50 per acre.

SEC. 3. That persons otherwise qualified to make entries who have, in good faith, made mineral discoveries and locations within the limits of said reservation prior to the 1st day of July, 1890, and who have complied with the law in regard to the entry and location of mineral lands as far as practicable, shall, upon the opening of said lands to entry, have the preferred right of entering their respective locations for thirty days next after such opening, but no longer.

SEC. 4. That said commission shall also negotiate and treat with the Indians properly residing upon the Uintah Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Utah, for the relinquishment to the United States of the interest of said Indians in all lands within said reservation not needed for allotment in severalty to said Indians, and, if possible, procure the consent of such Indians to such relinquisnment, and for the acceptance by said Indians of allotments in severalty of lands within said reservation, and said commissioners shall report any agreement made by them with said Indians, which agreement shall become operative only when ratified by act of Congress.

SEC. 5. That said commissioners shall receive $6 per day each, and their actual and necessary traveling and incidental expenses while on duty, and to be allowed a clerk, to be selected by them, whose compensation shall be fixed by said commissioners, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; and a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated to carry out the provisions of this act, which sum shall be reimbursed to the Treasury out of the proceeds of the sale of said lands.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to have an understanding before consenting to any proposition whatever with reference to the passage of the bill. If the gentleman will agree to strike out the third section and also to adopt the amendment which we have agreed upon to another clause of the bill, then I will have no objection to its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is that second amendment you suggest?

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman has the amendment.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have it, and will offer the amendment. So far as I am personally concerned, I will agree to that proposition.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, it is agreed that the third section of the bill may be considered as stricken out, and the amendment that the gentleman has to a clause of the bill shall be adopted. With that understanding——

Mr. HOLMAN. That would have to be read.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I want to have something to say before this matter is agreed upon. I want to ask the gentleman if he will consent to an amendment to the first section of the bill, which I will read:

And provided, That the said Indians shall pay $1.25 per acre for said land from the funds now in the United States Treasury realized from the sale of their lands in Colorado as provided by their contract with the Government.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. That, I think, is hardly fair.

Mr. LYNCH. Is it true, Mr. Chairman, that under the treaty of 1880——

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Unless that amendment is embodied in the bill I shall have to object to any unanimous consent.

Mr. LYNCH. Offer your amendment at the proper time.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Unless the gentleman shall consent to that, I shall have to object to the consideration of this bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAWLINS. I will consent, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. LYNCH. I am willing to take a vote of the House as to that proposition. I am entirely in favor of the proposition.

Mr. RAWLINS. I am entirely agreeable to that. It ought to be done.

Mr. LYNCH. The committee has no objection to it. I think it is a proper proposition to be submitted.

Mr. RAWLINS. Then I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Is this bill being considered in Committee of the Whole or in the House?

The CHAIRMAN. In Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. Do I understand our friends on the committee will object to this amendment and oppose it?

Mr. LYNCH. Wait until it is offered.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. We had better have the understanding now.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there are so many agreements being made and proposed to a bill that most of us know nothing about, that it might be well to take a little time in general debate so as to allow the gentleman to explain it, and let the balance of us know what they are trying to agree about, and after they have done that we will be able to act more intelligently.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to object.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask that general debate be closed on the bill at quarter after 1.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Let us know what the bill is.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention for a few minutes of the members of the committee, I think I can make clear the provisions of this bill. The bill relates to two Indian reservations in the Territory of Utah; one the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, and the other the Uintah Reservation. The Uncompahgre Reservation contains about 1,900,000 acres of land, and is occupied by 1,021 Indians, as shown by the last census. These Indians, together with two other tribes of Indians, formerly owned about 12,000,000 acres of land in the State of Colorado.

In 1880 they entered into a treaty with the United States by which they sold those lands to the Government, and these Uncompahgre Indians, about 1,000 of them, were temporarily located by proclamation of the President upon this reservation, called the Uncompahgre Reservation. By the treaty made with these Indians they were to have an allotment of land in severalty, as provided in this bill, by a commission to be appointed by the President. They were to get this allotment instead of the reservation in Colorado, and to pay for that at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

This treaty was made with the Indians and ratified by act of Congress. The object of this bill is to carry out the provisions of that treaty with these Indians, making allotments to them in severalty. It will require, to carry out the treaty, about 200,000 acres of land, and there will be then thrown open for settlement between 1,700,000 and 1,800,000 acres. This bill provides that the agricultural lands shall be subject to entry under the homestead laws at $1.50 per acre.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If I understand this proposition correctly, it is that about 200,000 acres of land in this reservation in Utah are to be paid for out of the fund realized by the Indians from the sale of their reservation in Colorado.

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes, sir. That fund, amounting to about $1,700,000, is in the Treasury of the United States; and about half of it is to the credit of the Indians of the Uncompahgre Reservation.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And you propose to allot 200,000 acres in severalty to those Indians, for which they are to pay——

Mr. RAWLINS. One dollar and twenty-five cents an acre.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. No; nothing at all, under this bill.

Mr. RAWLINS. The price would be $1.25 an acre according to the treaty; but in this bill the committee are silent——

Mr. SAYERS. You propose really to give them the land.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why do better for them than the treaty provides?

Mr. RAWLINS. I am in favor of requiring the Indians to pay for these lands; I think they ought to do so; and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to accomplish that is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And the proposition is to take the remainder and open it to homestead settlement at $1.50 an acre.

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And that is all there is in the bill?

Mr. RAWLINS. That is substantially all there is in it.

Mr. SAYERS. Oh, no; there are some other things in the bill.

Mr. RAWLINS. So much as to the agricultural lands. Now, the mineral lands are to be subject to entry under the mining laws of the United States. Under those laws a man who discovers the mineral may locate a tract not exceeding 1,500 feet in length and 600 in width, and by complying with the law and finally making payment at the rate of $10 an acre he can obtain a patent from the United States for that limited quantity. Only citizens can make these entries. Now, there has been found on this reservation the mineral known as asphaltum. This mineral, according to the best information I have been able to obtain, has been found in veins or lodes, similar to silver and other metals of that character.

Mr. HOLMAN (exhibiting a specimen). Here is a specimen of the asphaltum.

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes, sir. Now, this bill provides that these asphaltum lands may be located under the mining laws; that is to say, the man who discovers the mineral may locate a tract not exceeding 1,500 feet one way and 600 feet the other. It is provided in the bill that the minimum price per acre for this land shall be $50. The price for ordinary mineral lands under the existing law is $10 an acre; but the committee thought—and such was the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior and the officers of the Land Department—that $50 would be about the right price for these lands.

The third section of the bill, to which objection has been made, provides that where citizens of the United States or persons otherwise qualified have made discoveries and locations in good faith prior to 1890, and complied with the mining laws so far as practicable, they shall upon the opening of this reservation have for thirty days a preferred right to make entry on these lands.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the gentleman to give us a full explanation of the bill on this subject which was passed by the last Congress and vetoed by the President.

Mr. RAWLINS. I will do so. I propose to state fairly every thing pertaining to this bill if I know how to do it.

The committee considered whether they ought to give these people this preferred right, and decided it should be given to persons who actually made these mineral discoveries and locations under the mining laws prior to 1890. Why? The eastern boundary of this reservation is on the Colorado line. It was not defined prior to 1890, and a few persons, probably fifteen or twenty in number, discovered these locations, located upon them and expended their money in developing the claims, being all the time ignorant of the fact that they were within the reservation, supposing themselves to be within a county of the State of Colorado.

Mr. NORTHWAY. How many of such persons are there?

Mr. RAWLINS. About fifteen or twenty altogether. I know those people well. The committee has thought proper in this bill to protect the rights of such persons. It is known that there has been a large corporation organized for the purpose of getting possession, if possible, of those asphaltum lands.

I now come to the question propounded to me by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. SAYERS]. In the last Congress a bill was passed by this House and the Senate which cut off arbitrarily two tiers of townships from the eastern portion of the Uncompahgre Reservation, ignoring the rights of the Indians to take allotments upon the lands; and it also contained a provision in these terms:

Provided, That any mineral location heretofore made or attempted to be made on said lands, or any part thereof, by any qualified person, who shall have made the same in good faith, shall bear date and be allowed the same as if said lands had been public lands at the time of said attempted location or institution of said proceedings, but said mineral location shall not be completed except upon the payment of $20 an acre, or at that rate for the amount taken up by the claim; but no claim shall contain more than 160 acres.

You will observe, first, that that does not require the party attempting to locate to have made the discovery of the mineral land, as this bill does. Second, it does not require him to make the location at all. That provision in the mining law is well understood. The party must discover the mineral lands, he must erect his monuments, make his claim, 1,500 feet each way, and he must also define the boundaries of the claim, which must be distinctly marked on the ground, and he can not take, under the operations of this bill, to exceed 10 acres at most under the provisions of the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. And at a price of $50 per acre.

Mr. RAWLINS (continuing). But under the old bill he was only required to make an attempt at location, as the bill which was passed and vetoed by President Harrison provided, and he was also allowed to enter 160 acres and not required to make any expenditure for the development of the land. On these grounds the President vetoed the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. And was required to pay only $20 per acre for the land.

Mr. RAWLINS. Yes; while this requires the payment of $50 per acre.

Mr. SAYERS. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. RAWLINS. Let me conclude my statement.

This bill restricts the privilege of making the location, as contemplated by the law, to the actual discoverer of the mineral deposits, and allows the location of not exceeding 10 acres, for which the party shall pay $50 per acre.

In this case these parties have complied in all respects with the provisions of the mining law and entered the lands when the boundaries of the reservation were not accurately defined. They entered upon the lands in good faith, and this third section of the bill is, in my judgment, rather a restriction than an extension of their rights and privileges, as held by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Noonan against the Caledonia Mining Company, where persons went on to a new reservation in the Black Hills prior to the opening of the reservation, and made entry.

Mr. SAYERS. Just in that connection can the gentleman state to the House who constitute the syndicate that are interested in the third section?

Mr. HOLMAN. If that section is proposed to be stricken out, what is the use of wasting time about it?

Mr. LYNCH. We are endeavoring to avoid giving any advantage to speculators.

Mr. SAYERS. But we wish to know who these speculators are, and what their connection is with this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is it agreed that the third section shall be stricken out?

Mr. RAWLINS. I was going on to state, if the gentleman will permit me, in answer to the question which has been propounded, that so far as the third section is concerned, in my judgment, and I have carefully investigated the question, there is absolutely no syndicate involved, and the only persons interested are some fifteen or twenty citizens of Utah and Colorado.

In the last Congress a similar bill was vetoed at the request of the Gilsonite Company of St. Louis. They opposed the bill at that time and brought strong pressure to bear against it. Since then they have changed their minds in connection with the matter, for the reason that they desired to construct a railroad through the Indian reservation to a mining claim which they own and which was virtually given to them by act of Congress passed in 1881.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Let me ask the gentleman, if the third section is not inserted in the bill, whether whatever rights these parties have will not be sacrificed?

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly, but——

Mr. SAYERS. They have no rights at all, because they are trespassers.

Mr. RAWLINS. The reason that I am willing to consent to striking it out is that under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which I have already cited and which I have at hand, the people not only who located but who made entries prior to 1890, as they did in this case, are protected, as well as all persons who entered the lands in good faith, made locations, and expended money in improvements, provided they were in possession of the property at the time the reservation is open to settlement. They are protected, and the rights, in my judgment, are more enlarged under that decision of the Supreme Court than they are under the third section of the bill.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If the gentleman will allow me, since St. Louis has been mentioned, I wish to state that there is no connection whatever by anybody in St. Louis with any one of these discoveries. But I wish to say this: That if you strike out section 3, you legislate in favor of corporations and rich syndicates——

Mr. SAYERS. How?

Mr. BARTHOLDT (continuing.) Because any rich syndicate can hire a lot of toughs and through their assistance ride roughshod over the rights of the bona fide claimants and discoverers. This section affects the rights of some twelve or fifteen poor people, and the only way to protect them is to adopt this section.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from Missouri is entirely beyond and outside of the language of the third section, and I would like the gentleman to yield to me——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I wish to make that statement clearer, if I can have time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah has the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I appreciate the motive of my friend from Texas, but it is not an unusual thing in the opening of these reservations in the Western country to find settlements made by bona fide prospectors, men seeking ore in the mountains, who have gone in and got possession by the discovery of minerals, and carried out, as far as possible, the mining laws, believing it to be public land of the United States.

Now, I quite agree with the gentleman that it is a limitation on the power, rather than broadening it or giving any syndicate a chance to steal this land. It looks to me like a limitation on their power, in the light of the decision to which the gentleman has referred, with which all men familiar with the mining laws are somewhat well acquainted. The one suggestion I wish to make to my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] is this, that if these prospectors located in good faith, not knowing this to be a reservation, the lines of the reservation subsequently covering it, they did all they could to make valid locations, and I do not think the suggestion of the gentleman is just, in the light of what has been said, when he says that a syndicate has hold of it. It seems to me the language of the bill is rather a protection of that property from syndicates, than to allow them to take possession.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman from Utah allow me five minutes?

Mr. RAWLINS. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to call the attention of the House to this bill and to show that by the very report of the committee the bill as it is now before the House ought not to pass. The committee in their report say:

By their agreement of March 6, 1880, these Indians agreed to accept allotments as provided in the substitute bill reported. This agreement was ratified by the act of Congress dated June 15, 1880 (21 Statutes, 199). Under the agreement the Indians were to pay for the lands allotted to them at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

And yet the committee reported in favor of giving these Indians the lands for which they had stipulated, under the treaty, to pay at the rate of $1.25 an acre.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. A mistaken idea of humanity that the House is constantly going into.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs why he did not provide for the purchase of these lands by the Indians?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, well, we are adopting a very liberal policy toward these Indians. We took a large body of their lands in Colorado, and we gave them a large body of land, a very considerable body of land, but much less than they had in Colorado, a large portion of which is apparently valueless. It had been agreed that these Indians should pay for the lands assigned them in Utah $1.25 per acre. I admit that this is simply a question as to how liberal Congress should be toward that tribe of Indians.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, when it is borne in mind that the probability is that beneath the surface of some of these lands are minerals which make them as valuable, if not more so, than any lands in the United States, I think the committee have been exceedingly liberal to these Indians.

Mr. LYNCH. The allotments are confined to agricultural lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. They take only agricultural lands.

Mr. SAYERS. Agricultural lands provided there be a sufficient amount of them.

Mr. LYNCH. There are fifteen times as many acres of agricultural lands as will be needed for this purpose.

Mr. SAYERS. Now, let us read this section 3. If the gentleman agrees to strike it out, I will not refer to it further.

Mr. RAWLINS. I have no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I object.

Mr. RAWLINS. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas that he let that matter be voted upon by the House.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me read the section:

SEC. 3. That persons otherwise qualified to make entries who have, in good faith, made mineral discoveries and locations within the limits of said reservation prior to the 1st day of July, 1890—

That is, persons who have gone upon lands that were reserved from location—and who have complied with the law in regard to the entry and location of mineral lands as far as practicable—

There was no law authorizing them to locate on any portion of these lands. No gentleman can point out a provision of any statute which authorized these men to go and locate upon them—shall, upon the opening of said lands to entry, have the preferred right of entering their respective locations for thirty days next after such opening, but no longer.

Now, I will call the attention of the members to a clause in the veto message of President Harrison. He says:

The object, then, of this legislation is to be sought not in any public demand for these lands for the use of settlers—for if they are susceptible of that use, the Indians have a clear equity to take allotments upon them—but in that part of the bill which confirms the mineral entries, or entries for mineral uses, which have been unlawfully made "or attempted to be made on said lands." It is evidently a private and not a public end that is to be promoted. It does not follow, of course, that this private end may not be wholly meritorious, and the relief sought on behalf of these persons altogether just and proper. The facts, as I am advised, are that upon these lands there are veins or beds of asphaltum or Gilsonite, supposed to be of very great value.

Entries have been made in that vicinity, but upon public lands, which lands have been resold for very large amounts. It is not important perhaps that the United States should in parting with these lands realize their value, but it is essential, I think, that favoritism should have no part in connection with the sales. The bill confirms all attempted entries of these mineral lands at the price of $20 per acre (a price that is suggestive of something unusual) without requiring evidence of the expenditure of any money upon the claim, or even proof that the claimant was the discoverer of the deposits.

The bill requires "good faith," but it will be next to impossible for the officers of the Interior Department to show actual knowledge on the part of the claimant of the lines of the reservation. The case will practicably be, as to this matter, in the hands of the claimant. But why should good faith at the moment of attempting the entry, without any requirement of expenditure, and followed, it may be, within twenty-four hours by actual notice that he was upon a reservation, give an advantage in the sale of these lands that may represent a very large sum of money?

That is what President Harrison said when he vetoed a bill similar to the third clause in the bill.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that section 3 was inserted as a matter of justice and right, and with abundant precedent. It came to the knowledge of the committee that about the year 1889 or 1890 this asphalt mineral was discovered by prospectors, men of nerve and energy, who went there of their own accord, believing they were on the public lands. They made their discoveries in good faith, marked out their mineral allotments, and recorded their entries in Colorado, believing the land was in that State.

Afterwards it was discovered that the State line between Colorado and Utah ran further east, and they were found to be on this reservation. That was the condition of things as represented to the committee. It was also represented that there were not exceeding eight, ten, or fifteen, at the outside, of these discoverers.

By striking out this section you deprive those brave, hardy discoverers of the fruits of their honest labor and luck, and that without any justification.

The committee thought as a matter of good faith, as a matter of justice, and as a reward for their having made this discovery, by which this country has been benefited millions of dollars, the rights of these men should be protected; I am willing to limit the number of these men to twenty-five. There is not that number, but to be safe, from all the information of the committee, that number would cover all meritorious entries.

Mr. SAYERS. You say there are ten or fifteen? Why should you desire to limit it to twenty-five?

Mr. LYNCH. I would be willing to limit it to fifteen of the early discoverers. Our information is of a less number.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. LYNCH. Certainly.

Mr. WARNER. May I ask if the amount of money that the United States will get in any case is at all affected by this amendment?

Mr. LYNCH. Not at all.

Now, as to the other proposition about their having that land. It is a matter of indifference to the committee what action the House may take. These Indians were placed upon that land in 1880. They have lived there continuously since. They regard that as their own property. They are self-sustaining. They are not costing the Government a dollar; and it was the opinion of the committee that, with the belief resting in the minds of these Indians that they owned that land, that in disposing of them it was reasonable and fair to say to them, "Go and take your allotments of 200,000 acres out of 1,900,000, and go and support yourselves out of what you have." If we take pay for land out of the moneys they have, it makes them all the more liable to come back on the Government for support. It was the judgment of the committee that so long as this tribe was self-sustaining it was in the interest of harmony to treat them in this way.

That was the reason for the action of the committee. The committee is wholly indifferent, and is perfectly willing to take the judgment of the House as to whether they shall pay for the land or not. None of us care a straw one way or the other except in the interest of peace and fair play, because by taking that land and requiring them to make payment for it, it might make a disturbance that would cost very much more than it would to give them the land.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. How much is there in the Treasury to the credit of these Indians under the treaty made for the purchase of their former reservation?

Mr. LYNCH. Seventeen hundred thousand dollars, which belongs to the three tribes—about 2,000 persons.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What part of it belongs to these Indians?

Mr. LYNCH. Nearly half.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars, under the treaty.

Mr. LYNCH. Perhaps.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want to see if I understand the matter right. They parted with their Colorado land for eight hundred and odd thousand dollars?

Mr. LYNCH. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And agreed to pay for their allotment in severalty later on in the course of time at $1.25 per acre out of the $800,000. Now, the gentleman says they are self-sustaining, and I am glad to know they are. Has the gentleman thought of the influence upon these Indians, who have manhood and who are self-sustaining, of receiving a gift, not something out of their rights under the law, for which they are subject to pay? The white fellow can not stand that very well. It would tend to demoralize him. Will it not tend to demoralize self-sustaining Indians to go and take something for nothing?

Mr. LYNCH. This is the first instance of this kind we have had in any treaty to my knowledge, or that I have heard.

Mr. SAYERS. They were paid for their land in Colorado.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was a very large body of land.

Mr. SAYERS. But they were paid for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. A mere nominal sum.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the gentleman will allow me. It is not the amount of money involved. That is not the question at all, but it is the risk you run when you have a small handful of Indians, like the Navajoes in Idaho, who are self-sustaining, and who are working out their own salvation, of putting something into their hands for nothing. I say that would tend to demoralize and pauperize white people. Maybe the Indians have character enough to stand it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will not affect the Navajoes. We are appropriating money for their support all the time.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And are tending to demoralize them in doing so.

Mr. LYNCH. You have either got to do that or have them liable to become a Government charge again. The land to be allotted to them is neither all good nor all bad. Millions of acres of the same kind of land adjoins this reservation which has been subject to entry for years, but no white man seems to want it even as a gift. The land is more or less mountainous, and can only be used by means of irrigation.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. You have got to feed them anyhow.

Mr. LYNCH. We do not feed them. We have not paid a dollar for their support for years.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. But they get the interest on this money which does feed them.

Mr. LYNCH. I am only submitting the judgment of the Committee on Indian Affairs as to the best policy to be pursued with these Indians. If the judgment of the House is different, none of us will find any fault. Whether you approve or disapprove our action is wholly immaterial to the committee. It seemed to us wise not to disturb these Indians in their rights—not to provoke any uprising such as would be liable to happen if their annual income should be decreased.

We consider that they are doing very well, and we should be satisfied to let them alone. Requiring them to pay the fixed price for that land, which is more than double its actual value, when taken as a whole, may provoke disturbances or a feeling of hostility that would in a short time cost more than the value of the lands. They sold about 6,000,000 acres in Colorado in 1880 for $800,000, and a third of that will be taken back for one-thirtieth of the quantity of land of practically the same kind and value.

Mr. RAWLINS. I ask that we now proceed to consider the amendments.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to move to strike out the third section.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate is not closed.

Mr. RAWLINS. I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed, and that the bill be considered under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill when—

Mr. LYNCH. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill by sections be omitted, and that amendments may be offered to any part of the bill at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. As though the bill were being considered in the House?

Mr. LYNCH. Yes, sir.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "location," in line 22 of page 2, insert:

"And provided, That said Indians shall pay $1.25 per acre for said lands from the fund now in the United States Treasury realized from the sale of their lands in Colorado, as provided by their contract with the Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. I move to amend by striking out section 3.

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. SAYERS)—ayes 9, noes 16.

Mr. SAYERS. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SAYERS and Mr. LYNCH were appointed.

Mr. RAWLINS. Rather than imperil the bill, I ask that this third section be stricken out by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it may be agreed that the third section be stricken out. I am very confident that under the state of the law as it has been construed by the Supreme Court, the rights of these persons, if they have any rights, will be protected at any rate. I hope there will be no objection to striking out this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the count by tellers the gentleman from Indiana asks that the third section of the bill be struck out. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered. The Chair will treat the amendment of the gentleman from Texas and the point of no quorum as withdrawn.

Mr. RAWLINS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "interior," in line 6, page 4, and insert in lieu thereof:

"Provided, That the cost of executing the provisions of this act shall not exceed the sum of $16,000, which sum is hereby appropriated for that purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. LYNCH. The committee will not object to that amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. What is the object of the amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "sixteen thousand" and inserting "eight thousand."

Mr. RAWLINS. If the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] be adopted we might just as well not pass the bill. This matter was submitted to the Department for an estimate as to the amount which would be necessary; and after obtaining such an estimate, the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to whom the matter was submitted, agreed on behalf of his committee that $16,000 should be the amount appropriated. By throwing open these two reservations amounting to about 4,000,000 acres of land, there will be restored to the public domain about 3,500,000 acres.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not by this bill.

Mr. RAWLINS. That will be the ultimate result. It will bring into the Treasury of the United States, in my judgment, millions of dollars.

Mr. PICKLER. Is it not probable that within thirty days the filing fees will be very much larger than this sum?

Mr. RAWLINS. Unquestionably.

Mr. PICKLER. If there is any amount of land taken, that will certainly be so.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PICKLER. I am opposed to the reduction to $8,000——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has been recognized.

Mr. HOLMAN. The expense attending the allotments of land in severalty to the Indians, and the disposal of what remains after the allotments are completed have necessarily involved very considerable expense to the Government. I have no doubt myself that $15,000 will not be required——

Mr. NORTHWAY. Then the Government will not expend it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes it will, if appropriated.

Mr. SAYERS. I have no doubt that the whole amount will be required.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I was going on to say, in view of the opinions of members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, who have investigated this matter more fully than I have, and especially with reference to the chairman of the subcommittee, who has examined it very thoroughly and carefully—Mr. LYNCH, chairman of the subcommittee—who thinks the amount will be required, I will not press the motion. But the extravagance all along the line of this Indian business ought to be retrenched.

I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Utah, which has just been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LYNCH. I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6557, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that as so amended it do pass.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask the previous question on the amendments and on the bill to its passage.

The previous question was ordered, under the operation of which the amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LYNCH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid upon the table.

YUMA INDIANS, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the Senate bill, No. 1919, to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Yuma Indians of California for the cession of their surplus lands, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and this will go over.

FORFEITURE OF CERTAIN RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 121) to amend an act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes, approved September 29, 1890, which is privileged under clause 51 of Rule XI.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. REED. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. By what right is this bill called up?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas claims it is privileged.

The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 121) to amend an act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes, approved September 29, 1890.

Mr. REED. That was reported on June 27, I believe, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. On June 27.

Mr. REED. If I recollect aright a decision of Mr. Speaker Carlisle, it was to the effect that a report had no privilege except at the time it was made.

Mr. McRAE. There can be no question about the right of way for this bill. It was reported June 27 and held on the Speaker's table with the privilege reserved. This was done in order to have the report printed for the House.

Mr. REED. I do not see how that could be done. When a bill is laid on the table in the House that is the end of it under our rules. Perhaps I can assist the Speaker by stating that on page 6898 of the RECORD the transaction is recorded, and the Speaker's observation at the time, I find on examination, was as follows:

The bill, together with the report, will be printed and laid on the table, subject to be called up under the rules.

That, it seems to me, was an erroneous proceeding, unless the practice of the House has at some time been changed. I notice that the committee or somebody seems to have anticipated something of the kind, and has recorded on the bill these words:

Reported with an amendment. Held on the table for the present.

That is not a proper parliamentary transaction, as far as my experience goes.

I know of no proceeding of the House which holds a bill on the table "for the present." If a bill is on the table, that is an end of it under the practice of the House.

Mr. McRAE. There can be no question but that the bill was reported as a privileged report, and by consent held on the Speaker's table.

Mr. REED. It should then have been taken up, and if not taken up, it lost its privilege.

Mr. McRAE. It was privileged when it was reported, and its privilege was expressly reserved. That was what I asked, and that was the order made.

Mr. REED. I would like to ask, Mr. Speaker, by what authority the indorsement was put on the bill itself, "Held on the table for the present," and whether there has been any precedent for such action as is indicated by that, or whether the Public Printer had any authority to print that on it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know. The Chair has sent for the Journal. The note taken by the Clerk at the time reads:

Printed and laid on the table, with leave to present the same for consideration at any time.

What is in the Journal the Chair does not know, but he has sent for the Journal.

Mr. REED. That does not seem to agree with the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Of course the Journal controls, and not the RECORD.

Mr. REED. Undoubtedly; but if that was not the fact, the Journal ought to be corrected, and it is not too late to do it now. I move that the Journal be corrected to agree with the fact.

The SPEAKER. The question now is as to whether this bill has lost its privilege.

Mr. REED. If the Journal gives it a false privilege by incorrectly stating the fact, I suppose the correction of the Journal would be proper. I do not know whether the Journal is in accordance with the fact or not. I only know that the two other records of the House, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the bill itself, show that statement in the Journal is not correct.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course the gentleman does not contend that the RECORD governs instead of the Journal. The Journal very clearly states that unanimous consent was given, and that this measure might be called up at any time, as it could have been called up for consideration at the time the report was made. The Journal containing this recital certainly must govern.

Mr. REED. The Journal is evidently incorrect, and I move that it be corrected so as to agree with the fact.

Mr. McRAE. The Journal is correct.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the language in the Journal.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McRAE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported the bill (H. R. 121) to amend an act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes, approved September 29, 1890; which, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed, and laid on the table, with leave to present the same for consideration at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that under that order the bill would not lose its privilege.

Mr. REED. Does the Chair hold that it is not in order to move to correct the Journal in accordance with the fact?

The SPEAKER. Certainly not now. The Journal has been approved.

Mr. McRAE. The Journal is correct, and states substantially what I asked when I reported the bill and the order that the House made.

Mr. REED. Then this is another instance of the incorrectness of the RECORD, and also of the Public Printer's indorsement on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes, approved September 29, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1. That there is hereby forfeited to the United States, and the United States hereby resumes the title thereto, all lands heretofore granted to any State or to any corporation to aid in the construction of a railroad opposite to and coterminous with the portion of any such railroad not constructed and completed within the time specified in the act making the grant for the construction and completion of the whole of such railroad for the aid or benefit of which such lands were granted; and all such lands are declared to be a part of the public domain: Provided, That this act shall not be construed as forfeiting the right of way or station grounds of any company heretofore granted.

The Committee on Public Lands recommended the following amendment:

Add to the bill the following:

"SEC. 2. That all the rights, privileges, and preferences given, granted, or secured by the said act approved September 29, 1890, to settlers upon and purchasers of the lands forfeited thereby be, and the same are hereby, given, granted, and secured to all settlers upon and purchasers of any of the lands hereby forfeited and restored upon the same terms and conditions and for the same periods of time therein specified, computing from the date of this amendatory act."

Mr. WEADOCK. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, does this go to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. What Calendar is it on?

Mr. McRAE. It is on no Calendar. It is privileged and was held on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make the point that it should be first considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. REED. I have not examined the matter carefully.

Mr. McRAE. There is no rule which requires its consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. It makes no charge on the public Treasury.

Mr. REED. I want to call the attention of the Speaker to the fact. I have examined it somewhat hurriedly. I do not know whether there is anything in the point or not, that by the second section as proposed it is provided:

That all the rights, privileges, and preferences given, granted, or secured by the said act approved September 29, 1890, to settlers upon and purchasers of the lands forfeited thereby be, and the same are hereby, given, granted, and secured to all settlers upon and purchasers of any of the lands hereby forfeited.

That, it seems to me, is in the nature of a conveyance of property of the United States, if the theory of the bill be correct, and so it would have to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McRAE. There is no new grant or conveyance in this bill at all. It is an amendment of the existing forfeiture act approved September 29, 1890; nothing more and nothing less.

There is no new grant of land, no new grant of right of way, and the reservation in section 2 for the settlers is intended to make certain what I believe the first section would give them.

Mr. REED. But the Speaker can not take that for granted. If a proposition be made to enact law, the Speaker must proceed, and the House must proceed, under the assumption that the law does something; and what this claims to do is to grant and secure and to give certain lands, and hence the bill must be considered in Committee of the Whole. It is not an answer for the gentleman to say a portion of his bill does not mean anything. The Speaker is bound to presume that it does mean something, or Congress would not be called upon to enact it.

Mr. McRAE. The point is that it does not give anything more than the present law now gives. It grants no right to lands over which we now have control.

Mr. REED. That is a matter of argument, and you argue it the other way by presenting it here. You argue that it is necessary to enact by offering the bill.

Mr. McRAE. I do not think that even as an original proposition this amendment would not carry it to the committee. The original forfeiture act was not considered in Committee of the Whole. Bills upon this subject have always been considered in the House.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has examined the matter more carefully than I have, and he will make another point; but I think that which I have made already is sufficient.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make another suggestion as to why this bill should go to the Committee of the Whole. The Chair of course will take notice of the limitations in the original grants of land of which a forfeiture is sought to be declared by this bill. In this original grant it was provided that the railroad companies should carry the mails, United States troops, and certain goods free of charge to the Government. They have done so. At least the presumption is that they have; or they might have done so. Put it that way, if you please.

If Congress now declares a forfeiture of the lands embraced in these grants, any money that has heretofore been retained from the various railroads, or deducted from the allowance due to them by reason of the fact that they were land-grant roads, must be refunded; and in fact it is true that several million dollars have already been received or withheld by the Government on account of carrying troops and mails over these very roads, or over particular parts of these roads, where it is now sought to annul and forfeit the grant.

If so, then this bill will either create a charge on the Treasury or might do so, and if the bill might create a charge upon the Treasury, involving an outlay of money, it must go to the Committee of the Whole. As a matter of fact it does involve between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 of expenditure from the public Treasury that must be provided for either in this bill or in some other way if this forfeiture is declared.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield to me for a motion? I ask unanimous consent that the naval appropriation bill be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6748) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection this bill, with Senate amendments, will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FORFEITURE OF CERTAIN RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. REED. I want to state to the Speaker the point as I understand it. I supposed the other point was sufficient to cover it, and I had not examined the matter very much. First, there is the proviso in the first section:

Provided, That this act shall not be construed as forfeiting the right of way of station grounds of any company heretofore granted.

The intention of that being to confirm any title that has been given. The second section prescribes as to all the rights, privileges, and preferences given and granted or secured by the act to settlers upon and purchasers of the land forfeited thereby, "the same are hereby given, granted, and secured to all settlers upon and purchasers of any of the land."

Now, the only answer made is that this provision of the section is the same as the existing law. The Speaker can not presume that. The House is to take action on the provision before it; and the Speaker must be governed by the facts of the case as they appear in the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is the point on which the Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Arkansas—as to the second section.

Mr. McRAE. The second section, as I have already stated, is intended to make the remaining sections of the original act, to which this is an amendment, applicable to any lands that may be forfeited and restored by it; but the main proposition in the bill is to extend the forfeiture and restore lands to the public domain which are, to say the least of it, not now a part of the public domain. The legal title to the land is in the railroad companies and the lands are reserved to satisfy the grants, so that we grant nothing at all until we reclaim it by this bill.

There is no attempt to grant the title to anything now under the control of the United States. The second section simply declares that as to a part of the estate to which we propose to resume title by the first section for breach of conditions, that if it has been disposed of to settlers, they shall have a preference to purchase or hold it in certain cases. This right was secured by the original act.

I repeat that it grants no title that we now have; and it grants nothing except a part of what we may restore by this act; so that it seems to me there should be no question about the point of order.

Mr. REED. Does the gentleman admit that it grants a part?

Mr. McRAE. It excepts from the forfeiture that which has been disposed of to bona fide settlers, to a limited extent. That is all the second section does.

Mr. REED. If the section does not do anything, what is its object?

Mr. McRAE. I have stated the object. It is to except from the proposed forfeiture that which has been disposed of by the railroad companies to purchasers, not exceeding 320 acres to each bona fide settler.

Mr. REED. Then it is settled that that belongs to the United States?

Mr. McRAE. Not unless this bill passes. It will be held by the railroad companies unless we resume title. In doing this the bill proposes to except from the provisions of the forfeiture a part of the lands referred to in the second section.

Mr. REED. That is, in substance, you take the land away from the railroad company and confirm it to the settler.

Mr. McRAE. We confirm the title to the settler as we forfeit that of the railroad companies.

Mr. REED. But whatever right the United States Government has in it you give to the settler.

Mr. McRAE. Now, Mr. Speaker, forfeiture bills like this have been presented in every Congress since the Forty-eighth, and they have always been considered in the House. I would not undertake to state that the point has been made in every case, but I think it was made in the Fifty-first Congress, when the act to which this is an amendment was under consideration. I know that it was considered in the House, and the previous question ordered and amendments cut off.

Mr. REED. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. McRAE. I am not mistaken about the bill having been considered in the House.

Mr. REED. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. McRAE. I am not mistaken as to the fact of the bill having been considered in the House. I may be mistaken as to whether the point was made or not.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman from Arkansas answer me one question for information? He spoke about 320 acres being confirmed to each settler who had purchased from the railroad company prior to the date of the passage of the act. Now, is there anything in this bill giving 320 acres?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Let me make myself clear. The gentleman from Arkansas has stated that wherever a settler has purchased 320 acres from the railroad company this act will confirm to him that much land and no more. Now, is any such provision found in the act of 1890?

Mr. McRAE. Yes; but the settler must pay $1.25 per acre, unless he has paid that much to the railroad.

Mr. HOLMAN. As to the extent of the forfeiture which we declare only.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I am not speaking as to the extent of the forfeiture. I am inquiring for information as to the quantity of land allowed the settler who has purchased from the railroad corporation.

Mr. McRAE. I think it is not exceeding 320 acres to each purchaser from the railroad companies.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. That is the way I understood the gentleman.

Mr. McRAE. That is my recollection of the act of September 29, 1890.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, the question presented by the point of order which has been made strikes me as one of no great difficulty. The gentleman from Maine suggests that in the matter of confirming title of these lands that the railroad company has sold to bona fide settlers, we are doing the same thing as if conveying the title of the United States. That is my understanding of the gentleman's position. Now, such is not the real attitude of this question. Suppose we had granted to the railroad company 100 acres of land and the company under the law had forfeited its right to it. If we took no action to exercise the right of forfeiture, the 100 acres would belong to the railroad company.

Now, if instead of resuming the whole 100 acres, we see fit to exercise the right of forfeiture as to 50 acres, allowing the other 50 acres to stand, I should like to know how such failure to exercise the right of forfeiture can be construed as a new grant of the lands by the United States? The Government simply exercises its option as to whether it will forfeit the whole 100 acres or only the 50 acres.

Now, the 50 acres we do not forfeit are the 50 that the railroad has granted to bona fide settlers; and there is no charge on the United States Treasury in the bill, as I understand this second section of it.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to this fact which he seems to have overlooked. Section 2 provides—

That all the rights, privileges, and preferences given, granted, or secured by the said act, approved September 29, 1890, to settlers upon and purchasers of the lands forfeited—

Not the lands that are not forfeited, but all the lands that are forfeited. Now, to whom are they forfeited? Necessarily forfeited to the United States. What is forfeited—all the rights, privileges, and preference * * * are hereby—

Not by the other act, but by this act

given, granted, and secured to all settlers upon and purchasers of any of the lands hereby forfeited.

The lands "hereby forfeited" are forfeited to the United States, because they could not be forfeited to anybody else. Having got them forfeited, we say in language technical in its character that the—rights, privileges, and preferences are granted or secured, etc., to settlers upon and purchasers of the lands forfeited.

Now, the process is to forfeit the lands, and that brings them to the United States. The next process, which brings it within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rules, is to give and to grant to some other person these lands which have been forfeited and have become the property of the United States, and the fact that it is done in one time and two motions does not make any difference.

Mr. TERRY. I beg leave to suggest to the distinguished gentleman from Maine that he has permitted his intellect to become entangled in a mere mesh of verbiage. He "sticks in the bark." He refers to the language and the letter of it without looking at the substance of what is really done. All we do, as I said before, is to resume 50 acres, so to speak, of the 100 acres which we formerly granted to the railroad, and do not resume title to the 50 that are still in the hands of the bona fide settlers. Now, the gentleman from Maine can criticise the particular language used, but that is really the substance of what is done.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to call the attention of the Chair to the original act of 1890, to which this is an amendment, and which has a direct bearing upon the question raised here. It is provided in section 3 of that act—

That in all cases where parties, persons, or corporations, with the permission of such State or corporation or its assignees, are in the possession of, and have made improvements upon any of the lands hereby resumed and restored, and are not entitled to enter the same under the provisions of this act, such parties, persons, or corporations shall have six months in which to remove any growing crop, and within which time they shall also be entitled to remove all buildings and other movable improvements from said land.

It grants the buildings and crops to these persons as indicated here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question.

Mr. LACEY. Very well.

The SPEAKER. If this bill were simply one to abrogate a land grant heretofore made, the Chair has no doubt it would be and should be considered in the House, because there is nothing in the rule that requires a bill of that sort to be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

All bills making appropriations of money or property must be considered in the Committee of the Whole.

The question is whether this bill makes an appropriation of the property of the United States. The gentleman from Arkansas contends that this is merely a forfeiture of a certain part of the lands heretofore granted to a certain corporation.

Now, if that were the bill and nothing else, the Chair thinks it might be and would be considered in the House. But this bill, it seems to the Chair, goes further than that. It forfeits certain lands, and then it grants certain lands. It confirms the title to certain lands now in the United States in the individuals who have sought to obtain title from the railroads. So that it seems to the Chair that this is a disposition within the meaning of the rule of the public property of the United States.

The bill provides—

That all the rights, privileges, and preferences given, granted, or secured by the act approved September 29, 1890, to settlers upon and purchasers of the lands forfeited thereby, be, and the same are hereby, given, granted, and secured to all settlers upon and purchasers of any of the lands hereby forfeited.

The same act which forfeits these lands confers, as the Chair understands it, upon certain settlers and purchasers the right that they acquired under the act of 1890, and the lands forfeited by that act. That the Chair understands to be the purpose of the bill; and it seems to the Chair, in view of that ground—resolving these questions always in favor of the largest debate, as is the habit, perhaps, and the proper one—the Chair thinks the bill ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole, and so holds.

Mr. McRAE. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair, for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 121) to amend an act to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes, approved September 29, 1890.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. WEADOCK. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to use much time in discussing this bill. I believe the questions of fact and of law involved are all well understood by the committee and country. During the last twelve years from time to time we have had long and able discussions of the power and duty of Congress to declare such forfeitures. The bill simply extends the forfeiture act of the 29th of September, 1890, so as to cover in addition to the lands thereby forfeited all lands opposite the lines of roads constructed out of time.

That act only forfeited and restored to the United States the lands opposite to and coterminous with roads which had not been constructed and in operation at that time, and covered about 5,600,000 acres. This bill proposes to so extend the forfeiture as to reach back to the time fixed in the granting act, and proceeds upon the reasonable theory that the Government meant that time was of the essence of the contract when it stipulated for the completion of these roads within fixed times.

This bill seeks to resume the title to all the lands opposite to road constructed after the time required by the granting act or subsequent acts extending the original time. It embraces about 4,000 miles of road and about 48,000,000 acres of land, less the amount that would be confirmed to settlers holding under the railroad companies, or, in other words, would extend the act of 1890 so as to make it cover about 54,000,000 acres.

Very few of the land grants have been finally adjusted and closed. Some of the roads for which grants were made never have been completed at all. Many of them have been completed after the time prescribed by law and while forfeiture bills were pending. Since the Forty-eighth Congress the House of Representatives during each Congress, with one exception, has never failed to pass a bill substantially like the one now pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. And that was the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. McRAE. And that was the Fifty-first Congress.

The map which was prepared at the Land Office shows the railroad land grants in the United States. That part of the map indicated in yellow shows the lines of road that were not completed and that have been heretofore forfeited. The red shows the road constructed and completed, and the flags on the long lines indicate the parts built out of time.

The scale of the map is too small to indicate very clearly on the shorter lines the length of road that would be covered by this act, but the mileage and area are both shown in the report by States as well as by roads.

A simple glance at this map, Mr. Chairman, will show the enormous area of the public domain that has been granted for the purpose of aiding in constructing railroads in the States and Territories. These great grants were not intended as gratuities, but were based upon a consideration to pass to the Government, and that was to have roads in certain times.

During the time that it took these subsidized land-grant roads, with these princely grants, to construct 20,000 miles of road, private capital, unaided by the Government, constructed through the same States over 100,000 miles.

Many of the land-grant roads appear to have been delayed until after private capital had developed the country and built up a civilization that would justify the construction of roads without Government aid. Congress intended, when it granted this immense area of public land for this purpose, that the roads were to be built in the manner and within the time agreed upon. And now, after they have disposed of millions of acres of this land at exorbitant prices, some of them have acquired from these grants almost enough money to construct the roads, it appears to the committee that it is not unjust to require them to give back to the people all of the remainder of the lands not earned in time. We have dealt more than fairly with the roads when we confirm title in those who have purchased not exceeding 320 acres each from them and give the companies the benefit of these sales.

These immense holdings by railroad companies for speculative purposes have not redounded to the good of our country, and should be discouraged. These lands are desired by the homeless people of the country, and if the United States has the right to resume the title by legislative action, it should be swift in doing so. Since the decision in the case of Schulenburg vs. Harriman, reported in 7 Wallace, the country has understood that it requires legislative action to restore the title.

Prior to that time the people believed that the mere failure to construct the roads within the time required forfeited the grant, and in some instances the lands were opened to settlement and entries were allowed upon the granted lands. Since the enunciation of the doctrine that the grants were grants in præsenti, and that it would require affirmative action on the part of the Congress, the House of Representatives endeavored to act so as to save the lands to the people.

Under the leadership of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], the attention of the country was directed to the importance of the forfeiture of these grants in the Forty-eighth Congress, and since then we have pushed this legislation along that line, only to be balked in the other end of the Capitol.

The fact that some parts of these roads have been constructed out of time should not defeat a forfeiture, and I do not believe that it will. In saying this I do not have to question the correctness of the decision of the Supreme Court in the least.

While this title may be a title in præsenti, it is a title upon a condition-subsequent, and is defensible. Congress has the power to resume all the title which the Government had when it made the grant, and I believe it ought to do it promptly and without hesitation. I hope that the House will do it as promptly and freely as the last and prior Congresses.

Mr. HOLMAN. Except the Fifty-first.

Mr. McRAE. Yes, I except the Fifty-first.

Mr. BOATNER. Before you take your seat, I would like to inquire if the question has ever been presented to the Supreme Court, that you know of, whether Congress may declare the forfeiture where the railroad has been constructed in accordance with the terms of the grant except that it has been constructed out of time—after the time fixed by the grant?

Mr. McRAE. That has not been passed upon by the Supreme Court.

Mr. BOATNER. In other words, this railroad earned the grant by constructing the road after the time fixed in the grant, so that the Government can not declare a forfeiture.

Mr. McRAE. There has been no decision within my knowledge upon that point; but there are decisions to the effect that the failure to build the road does not itself forfeit the grant unless Congress declares the forfeiture.

Mr. BOATNER. If the gentleman will yield to me again a moment? The question to which the gentleman has been addressing himself was presented in the matter of the backbone land grant, and report was made by the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary in which it was maintained that where a grant was made upon a condition-subsequent, that the performance of the condition after the time stated in the act was a compliance with the terms of the act, and that the grant became indefeasible.

The question to which I wish to direct the gentleman's attention is as to whether that express point has ever been decided by the Supreme Court in a Government case?

Mr. McRAE. It has not, so far as I know.

Mr. BOATNER. It has been so held in private transactions.

Mr. McRAE. That is the contention of the railroad as to these grants. As a lawyer I do not undertake to say, in view of the act of September 29, 1890, what will be the decision of the Supreme Court if that case should be ever presented; but I do say that if it has not been so decided, and the question can never be raised as to these grants until Congress passes some act like this which will enable the railroads and the settlers to get the question properly in court, the lands are forever gone unless Congress acts.

That much has been decided by the courts, and no more. Lawyers differ upon the question of power, and there is a question about it. While there is a question about it, I think it is the duty of Congress to pass a law which will at least settle the law and quiet the titles to those interested along the line of these railroads.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I have only examined your bill for a minute. Does your bill provide any legislation, outside of the general scope of it, looking to a solution of what is known as the indemnity land question? That is to say, does your bill strictly deal with the grants in place or does it go outside of the 40-mile strip?

Mr. McRAE. It deals with the whole subject, and in forfeiting the grant will carry the lien lands which were intended to satisfy the grant.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The point of my question is as to the land granted within the 40-mile strip, because everybody in the West knows something about that. Everybody in the West is interested in that matter. I speak from my knowledge of the matter in the West, and I know not whether the matter refers to the South, because I do not know anything about the land grants there, but everybody is interested in our country in the grant in the 40-mile limit of the Northern Pacific Railroad grant.

A good many people were led into error by thinking that they could go outside of the 40-mile strip and have the right to settle on any odd section, and any even section for that matter. The settlement commenced in my State, not from the east to west, but from west to east, coming from California and Oregon by Snake River and got on the 10-mile indemnity strip.

That matter has been sought to be adjudicated by the Interior Department for the past fifteen years, but we have never been able to get any Administration, either Republican or Democratic, to decide it. I was going to offer an amendment that settlers who settle upond any odd section within the indemnity strip prior to the date of the selection by said railroad company, the Northern Pacific, should be entitled to have their titles confirmed in them under the general land laws of the United States, if your bill did not reach the question.

Mr. McRAE. I think the bill covers the matter beyond any question. We seek a forfeiture of the grants of lands including reservations for indemnity purposes. If there is no grant to satisfy there will be no use for indemnity laws.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The gentleman from Arkansas, who is so thoroughly familiar with the general land laws, knows how much we have been harassed, how much we have been (if I may use the expression) bedeviled by the continual procrastination of the Department of the Interior. Gentlemen will remember the Guilford Miller case. That was a decision; but I do not recollect that anybody has ever gotten anything out of it. We get a case decided. Then a motion of review is made, and the motion for review is pending; and we have been fifteen years struggling to get something done.

Mr. McRAE. I do not believe you will ever get anything of value whatever out of the Northern Pacific grant or indemnity until we pass some bill such as this. If we pass a bill like this, we will have the whole matter decided, and settled promptly and in a way that I think will be satisfactory to the settlers and everybody else except the railroads.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Of course, if this bill passes and is placed upon the statute book, an appeal will be taken to the courts, where the matter will have to be adjudicated.

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. So that ten, fifteen, or twenty years must be lost.

Mr. McRAE. I think not.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman from Arkansas permit a question?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I understood the gentleman to say that this map which is now exhibited to the House represents the lands now to be forfeited.

Mr. McRAE. I say it represents all the land grants, and I have stated that the yellow lines represent the roads not constructed at all, and that the flags on the red show the roads constructed out of time—along the longest lines.

Mr. REED. Do I understand that the lands there indicated are subject to railroad grants?

Mr. McRAE. I said nothing of the kind. I said that the map shows the land grants which have been made by Congress.

Mr. REED. Does the map indicate the land which has been taken by the railroads?

Mr. McRAE. I do not know that I understand the gentleman.

Mr. REED. Do you mean to say that the line across there [pointing] represents the Northern Pacific, and the central line the Central and Union Pacific?

Mr. McRAE. I think so.

Mr. REED. And that those roads have all that land?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir; all except the yellow lines, the portions forfeited by the act of 1890.

Mr. REED. Both sections?

Mr. McRAE. That represents the grants made to all the railroads.

Mr. REED. Does that represent both the odd-numbered and the even-numbered sections?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. REED. Then it represents twice as much land as the railroads got.

Mr. McRAE. The width of the grant.

Mr. REED. Not the width of the grant, but the width of the land out of which the grant might be taken.

Mr. McRAE. Certainly. We all understand, of course, that the roads got only alternate sections.

Mr. REED. Does not that line along the Northern Pacific represent also the land out of which they could have taken sections of which they have been deprived?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. Consequently that map does not represent what the railroads have taken, but only the area out of which they could take what was granted to them. Is not that the fact?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. Then, is not that map utterly misleading, as you have stated the matter?

Mr. McRAE. No, sir; it shows the lines and width of grant.

Mr. REED. Is the scale correct?

Mr. McRAE. I stated that it represented the grants to the roads; and I stated the length in miles.

Mr. REED. But it in reality does not represent the grants—only the area out of which the grants might be taken.

Mr. McRAE. I stated the area that the roads had taken.

Mr. REED. That is a totally different thing. You have a map here which pretends to be one thing but is an entirely different thing. There is the whole State of Iowa, for instance, absorbed by railroads.

Mr. GEAR. Will the gentleman from Arkansas allow me to ask just one question; it will not take him a moment to answer. In my own State of Iowa, as represented on that map, the pink lines, I understand, represent the land grants—in other words, represent the lands out of which the railroads should have had and did have their grants; is that so?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas one question. If the Government permitted the railroad companies to go on with their work beyond the time originally limited by law, did not that practically amount to consent on the part of the Government for an extension of the time limit?

Mr. McRAE. I think not. Laches can not be charged to the Government.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I think it did.

Mr. McRAE. I think not.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, before commencing my remarks I desire to have read in my time a substitute for section 2, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be read for information.

Mr. LACEY. I ask that it be read at this time for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 2, and insert the following:

"SEC. 2. The forfeiture provided in this act shall not impair or in any manner affect the title to any lands heretofore sold by such railway companies to bona fide purchasers for value."

Mr. LACEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield a moment to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], that he may have read in my time an amendment which he proposes to offer at a proper opportunity.

Mr. McRAE. It is understood that these amendments are not pending.

The CHAIRMAN. They are only read for information.

Mr. McRAE. I want it understood that I object to any amendment coming in now.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That wherever there have heretofore been made any deductions in payments for the transportation of persons, mails, stores, goods, or Government property of any kind by any railroad whose grant of lands is forfeited by or under this act on account of such railroad having a grant of lands, the proper accounting officers shall ascertain the amounts of such deductions, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall pay to each of the railroad companies performing such service the amount so found to have been deducted on account of lands forfeited by this act and held by such railroad for service on that portion thereof on which this forfeiture is declared, and a sufficient sum to make such payments is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. And each and every railroad whose grant of lands shall, in whole or in part, be forfeited by or under this act shall hereafter be entitled to receive payment in full for such transportation over that portion of its road deemed not to have been constructed in time, and as to which portion its grant is forfeited, as if the grant so forfeited had never been made.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire at this time to enter into any discussion of the policy of building railroads by grants of the public lands. That policy was adopted and pursued in the past. Its friends have claimed for it that it was successful; its enemies have denounced it as an erroneous policy.

But that policy has long since been abandoned, and we are now met not with a proposition to grant new land for new railroad enterprises, but to legislate in relation to grants that have been passed very many years ago; and this bill in its present form, while on its face it is a popular bill and one that would strike the ordinary outsider who had not given it very much attention as being just and right, in its terms is a bill which is fraught with a great deal of danger.

It brings chaos into many regions of the country covered today with a happy and a contented people. It insidiously unsettles the titles to millions of acres of lands on which men have made their homes and on which farming operations are being pursued at this time in many of the States of the Union.

The bill does not attempt to take up a single grant at a time and dispose of or forfeit it and have the rights and equities of the settlers on the one hand and of the railway company on the other hand adjusted under its provisions; but it is a proposition, a sweeping proposition to take possession of vast areas of lands heretofore granted and which have been disposed of to settlers, and by its terms it calls in and forfeits and declares to be revested in the Government the title to all the public lands heretofore granted to any railway company coterminous with and opposite to that part of the lines of said companies as shall not have been completed within the time fixed in the granting act.

The gentleman from Arkansas concedes that the right of Congress to do this after the road is built is one of very doubtful legality, but he says it is necessary for Congress to pass this bill in order to give to the Government a standing in the courts to have the rights of the parties determined in litigation, which is certain to follow.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman allow me in that connection?

Mr. LACEY. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. BOATNER. Was not the granting of these lands and the disposition of them by the railway companies after the expiration of the time in direct contravention of the language of the granting act?

Mr. LACEY. I understand that; but——

Mr. BOATNER. The language of the act reads this way——

Mr. LACEY. I will discuss that in a moment. I do not care to have my time occupied now.

Mr. BOATNER. But if the gentleman will permit me to read a single sentence here to make the point of my inquiry clear——

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. The act declares:

And if any of said roads are not completed within ten years, no further sales shall be made and the lands shall revert to the United States.

Mr. LACEY. That is the Louisiana grant.

Mr. BOATNER. Now, in that connection my question is this: When these companies claimed that under the grants they owned the land, how can it be questioned that any titles made by them were made in positive contravention of the terms of the act itself?

Mr. LACEY. The question of the gentleman from Louisiana is more ingenious than ingenuous. He is stating or endeavoring to carry the impression that this is the general form of all these granting acts. That is not the case. That language is embodied in the Louisiana grant, but it is not in all or in very many of the granting acts.

Mr. BOATNER. If the gentleman will permit me, this was the language used in making a grant of alternate sections of the public lands to the State of Michigan to be used in the construction of railroads in said State, which was passed on June 3, 1856, and in every act making grants to the States for this purpose you will find a similar provision.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Is that in the Northern Pacific grant?

Mr. BOATNER. No.

Mr. LACEY. It is not in the Northern Pacific, and I will state to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] that it is not embraced in the grants of 10 per cent of the lands which were given by the Government of the United States for railroad purposes. So the gentleman should not mislead the House now with the statement that these grants have a right of reversion expressed within the granting act, without any further action on the part of the Government. Under the Louisiana grant it is doubtful if there would be any necessity for this act at all, and whether the Government could not go into the courts and secure the reversion to the United States by proper action.

But the question of the gentleman from Arkansas is an entirely different matter. It is this: The courts of the United States have held that the grant is one in præsenti, and the conditions to build the road in a certain time is a condition subsequent; and it becomes necessary for the Government, through Congress, to pass a law forfeiting the grant before proceedings can be had in the courts. Consequently it is plain, he claims, that this bill should pass.

Mr. BOATNER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption just at this point?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. BOATNER. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided, and in the same decision where that principle is laid down, that the disposition by the State of land covered by the grant and not in accordance with its terms, was absolutely null and void, and hence that the property still remained in the State. How is the gentleman going to support his contention that the railroad has acquired title when the court holds, in the Harriman case, that the State can not convey to the railroad company except in express accord with the terms of the granting act itself.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman is anticipating my argument. I have not been discussing and did not propose to discuss the question as to whether there was the absolute right to revoke these grants at this time. I am assuming the position that we do have the power to revoke these grants, as claimed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE]. Let all that be conceded.

But, on the other hand, he tells you, and the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] is too good a lawyer not to know that the courts as a rule have held that without such action on the part of Congress the title is vested in the railroad company, and that they have title in præsenti, and that that title they can convey to settlers and to purchasers.

That has been the rule for many years. That has been the recognized rule in all the courts, and whether it is right or whether it is wrong, we are confronted with a condition, not a theory. It is also true that the bulk of this land, of good farming character and suited to cultivation, has been sold and is now in the hands of third parties. Most of the land which remains is of small value.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman permit me, right there, to say that last week in my own county over 700,000 acres of land were patented to the railroads.

Mr. LACEY. Hundreds of thousands of acres have been patented under the decisions of the court to which I have referred. But let me call attention to what seems to me to be the difficulty in this bill, and which has been ignored by its framer. In his anxiety to have some broad and glittering generalities that would catch the public eye, the author of this bill has disregarded individual rights.

Take, for instance, the Central Pacific and Union Pacific grant. That grant goes through the State of Kansas. It goes through the State of Nebraska, and through other States, and much of the land is of the most valuable character. What has been the history of that land? It has been entered upon and has been occupied by farmers who have purchased it, and to-day there are orchards more than twenty years old on this railroad land.

There are old houses, with barns; there are young men old enough to vote who have grown up upon these farms, and yet it is proposed in this bill, in a general and sweeping way, to declare these farms forfeited to the Government and to give to the holders of the farms the right to buy the land again from the Government at $2.50 per acre, provided the owner does not happen to own more than 320 acres in any one tract.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman allow me just one minute?

Mr. LACEY. I will yield more than a minute to the gentleman after awhile.

Mr. MARSH. I only want a minute now, and the gentleman will appreciate the point when I get through. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] stated to him a moment ago that last week 700,000 acres of land were patented to the railroad in his county alone. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Washington if those 700,000 acres of land had not already been contracted and sold by the railroad company to actual settlers?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me, those lands were sold years and years ago, but the company have not been able to get their patents, owing to the existing condition of affairs, and lately they commenced on the eastern line of Washington to patent these lands, and my county is the first county.

Mr. GEAR. With the permission of the gentleman from Iowa, I will say that I have been trying for three months to get patents to over 70,000 acres of land that were sold ten years ago to actual settlers, who were living upon them.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Right there I want to say that these lands have been sold to settlers, and now that the railroad is in a state of bankruptcy, how are these settlers going to be refunded the money which they have paid for these lands?

Mr. BOATNER. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. LACEY. I will yield to my friend later on, but I can not yield now. I have some further points that I want to make.

I have had read at the Clerk's desk an amendment that cures this error in the bill. Heretofore Congress has passed bills forfeiting land grants to railroads, prior to the Fifty-first Congress, to the amount of 50,482,240 acres, and the Fifty-first Congress passed a general bill forfeiting all lands on uncompleted lines of road, so far as the roads at that time remained uncompleted, thus restoring to the public domain all lands about which there could be no controversy as to the right of Congress to declare the forfeiture.

After declaring the forfeiture of 50,000,000 acres and more in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses, and the 5,000,000 acres in the Fifty-first Congress, it leaves now unsettled 50,000,000 acres of land lying opposite parts of railways that were not completed in time.

It is claimed that this 50,000,000 acres of land is a wonderful area of country; that it is an empire; and so it is upon its face. But in truth the most of it is desert. The best land has been sold. In the anxiety to reclaim these numerous and broad acres which are described in the committee's report the bill goes on and embarrasses all settlers upon the other parts of railroad lands where the land has heretofore been sold and occupied.

The amendment that I propose provides that the titles to these lands, lands heretofore sold to innocent holders, shall be confined to them, and that the title shall not be declared to be forfeited by this bill. The gentleman from Arkansas, by his amendment to the bill, provides that the act of 1890 shall apply, and that the rights provided for in that act shall be looked to to protect settlers in the present forfeiture bill. Let us now for a moment look into the comparative merits of the two propositions.

The act of 1890 forfeited tracts of land where no railroad had ever been built; but it was known that railroad companies had attempted to sell lands in advance of the construction of their roads; and in order to relieve the settlers from all embarrassment, the right was given to them to purchase these lands beyond the terminus of the railroad and pay the Government of the United States $2.50 per acre therefor, and have their title confirmed.

That is a provision which does not hurt anybody. But when you go back along the line of a road that has been built, recognizing the fact that the courts have held that railroad companies own that land and they can not be sold by settlers now, and provide that they shall have no greater right than the men who buy the land beyond the terminus of the road, as provided in the act of 1890, that is ignoring the plainest and most elementary principles of justice.

These men bought land and paid for it; and why should a man owning over 320 acres of land in Nebraska or Montana be compelled to pay $2.50 an acre to the Government again, after he has got his tract from the railroad company, and when he took that tract with the understanding that the railroad company owned the land?

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman certainly does not understand the bill, for it provides that they shall have the land for $1.25 an acre; and if a man has paid the railroad company he shall have credit with the Government for whatever he has paid to the railroad company provided it does not exceed $1.25 per acre. In other words, the bill protects the rights of the purchaser from the railroad company, provided he has not bought more than 320 acres.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. To what extent does the gentleman say there is protection?

Mr. BOATNER. His title for 320 acres is confirmed to him if he has paid the railroad company as much as $1.25 an acre for it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. What if he has paid more?

Mr. BOATNER. If he has paid more, he will not receive anything from it if he keeps his land. He only gets credit up to and including $1.25 an acre, as if he had paid $1.25 to the General Government. So it leaves him right where it found him. If he has settled with the railroad company and paid, it leaves him with a title from the railroad.

Mr. HERMANN. The fallacy of the position of my friend is that it does not leave him where he found him. It may find him with a thousand or two thousand acres of land on which he has put valuable improvements and to which he holds all the title which the railroad company can give him. Now, you propose to confiscate all with the exception of 320 acres; and therefore you do not leave him where you found him.

Mr. LACEY. I will now yield to the gentleman from California for a question.

Mr. CANNON of California. Does this bill take away from the settler who has purchased from the railroad the land along the lines built within the time? You spoke of land in the State of Nebraska.

Mr. LACEY. There is land in California the same as Nebraska.

Mr. CANNON of California. There is land of that kind in California and in Nebraska. Does it take any land from those roads built within the time?

Mr. LACEY. It takes away land in California from railway companies whose lines were not built within the time named in the grant. The courts had held that where the roads were not completed within the time that the subsequent building of the roads had been sufficient compliance with the grant. Acting upon these rulings of the courts the companies have gone on after the time fixed in their grants and have completed the roads, and sold lands to settlers. This bill will take from any settler any land which he may hold in excess of 320 acres.

Very large tracts of these lands have been sold in amounts exceeding 320 acres. Much of it is grazing land and much more of it requires irrigation—land which must be purchased in large quantities that ditches may be built in order to irrigate it, for irrigation of small tracts is not usually practicable.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Let me put this case to the gentleman. Suppose A is the owner of more than 320 acres—160 acres more than 320—which he has purchased from B, who purchased from the railroad company. These purchases we will suppose were made in good faith. B thought he had the right to buy the land of the railroad company; he did buy it and paid for it. Now, how is A to be indemnified for his loss of those 160 acres? He loses that much land absolutely, does he not?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly he does under this bill. Of course he may undertake to collect his money from the railroad company, but these companies are in the hands of receivers; are bankrupt; so that such a man would be relegated to the tender mercies of receivers in chancery, who have nothing with which to pay him except a fund already mortgaged for its full amount.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. In other words, we confiscate those 160 acres of this man s land.

Mr. LACEY. This bill apparently intended to strike as its target a soulless corporation, but reaches the corporation through the honest settler on the greater portion of the valuable lands in controversy; and the lands with reference to which settlers will make no claim are lands comparatively worthless—so worthless that the railroad companies have not even asked that they be surveyed.

All these railways have been carrying the mails and the troops and receiving from the Government compensation therefor where the roads have not received land grants. Where land grants have been made, this transportation was made under the terms of the granting acts; and proper deductions have been made. As this debate has now come up unexpectedly, I have not obtained the figures and do not know the exact amount that has been thus withheld from the land-grant roads.

I have been told that it amounts at the present time to several million dollars. This is the amount which would have been paid by the Government to these railways for carrying the troops and the mails if the roads had not been subject to the provisions of the land-grant acts.

Mr. CANNON of California. That goes into the sinking fund and is credited to the companies—or at least half of it is.

Mr. LACEY. A certain portion—50 per cent—is credited in that way. Now, that 50 per cent is so much clear to the Government because of these grants. It is certainly true that the Government can not cancel the grant and keep the money that it has withheld for the carriage of mail and troops by these roads as land-grant roads. In short, if they are land-grant roads and are subject to the conditions of the land grants, the Government is entitled to these benefits. On the other hand, if the land grants are forfeited the Government must pay in full for the carriage of the mails and the troops.

Mr. HERMANN. Just in the line of the gentleman's remarks permit me to suggest to him the further fact that under the granting act all lands lying coterminous with the line of the road—the even-numbered sections—are increased from $1.25 to $2.50 an acre. In other words, the settler is substantially paying to the Government the value of the lands granted to the railroad company by the act of Congress.

Mr. CANNON of California. That is correct.

Mr. LACEY. Now, I wish to impress upon the committee the fact that these grants are made to different lines under different circumstances at different dates; that the equities in one case are quite different from the equities in the other. Yet we seek here by one general and sweeping bill to cover all of them and make them all subject to the same provisions. Take, for instance, the case that the gentleman from Louisiana has in his mind in his own State. Ten years, I believe, were given for the building of that road. When a few of those years had gone by and the road was partly constructed the war broke out. Will it be contended that the time which elapsed during the war when the company could not construct the road—a period when the troops of both armies went n and tore up the road—is to be treated as part of the time acorded for the building of that road?

That company comes before the Committee on Public Lands and says that it has some special and peculiar rights under these circumstances; that the war and the delays incident to the war, which produced the failure on their part to build the road within the time, ought to be recognized as an equity in their favor and that they should not be included in the bill. Yet that road is embraced in the terms of the bill just the same as the other roads.

Mr. HERMANN. I suggest to the gentleman the further fact that the public lands were not surveyed; so that selections could not be made.

Mr. LACEY. Yes; in many cases the Government has failed to survey these lands, even upon demand; and selections have been prevented from being made. Thus there has been delay in the building of the roads; because they were to be built in part from the land grants. The land was surveyed, put upon the market and sold, and the money reinvested in building other portions of the road, additional patents being obtained as sales were made, and thus the road was being extended into the uninhabited wilderness of the West.

It is by no means clear or absolutely certain that the exercise of the legislative right of forfeiture exists. Courts have held otherwise, and if the bill is to pass at all let us by some broad and comprehensive amendment protect the rights of every settler upon these lands. That is a matter of grave importance. Nothing in the world injures the character of a country so much or impedes its development like the question of unsettled land titles.

Why, you can go into this city of Washington, beautiful as it is, and find out invariably that part of the city where the titles are defective, where there is litigation in chancery, or where there has been trouble of any kind over titles; because you can tell it by the tumble-down houses, by the old shanties, by the unimproved and ungraded lots. You can pick out as easily the boundary line of property that is in chancery as you can discriminate between the boundary lines between land and water.

And this bill proposes to throw the whole State of North Dakota into chancery. It is proposed to throw a vast area of the State of California into litigation. It is proposed to put the blight of contested land titles over the richest and most beautiful parts of the State of Washington; and these matters, I say, ought to be carefully considered. The amendment I have offered exempts from its operation all land heretofore sold from these grants, and that amendment, in my judgment, ought to be adopted.

It has been for a long time the expressed purpose and object of Congress to secure settlers upon the public lands. The great question was not so much to get money from the sale of the lands as to get settlers upon them. That being the case, I ask what difference does it make whether a settler is living on lands that he bought from the railroad company and has improved them, and is producing crops and paying his taxes, getting his title through the railway company, or whether he entered upon the lands as public lands of the United States as a homesteader, a preëmptor, under the timber-culture act, or took them up as desert lands.

It is the occupancy of the land by settlers that we want, and not to regain and take back again the title, in order that someone else may obtain it from the United States. It has long been the policy of this Government in regard to our public lands to encourage its purchase by actual settlers.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me to ask, as I have not examined the bill, whether this covers all of the land-grant railroads?

Mr. LACEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Then it is an omnibus bill?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. And your amendment proposes to restrict it?

Mr. LACEY. To provide that all lands heretofore sold by railroad companies should not be affected by any such forfeiture.

Now, the gentleman from Arkansas has offered an amendment, the effect of which allows certain parties to hold their lands provided they have not more than 320 acres. The balance of it must be taken back by the Government, notwithstanding the fact that it may be a stock-ranch farm covering 2,000 acres or more, or that it is land which has been irrigated at great expense and put into fruit farms, as he knows is the case in many parts of Southern California.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The gentleman from Iowa has evidently given this question a great deal of care and attention, and I desire to propound to him the same question I asked the gentleman from Arkansas in the course of his remarks, but the answer to which I am not entirely satisfied with. I asked him whether this bill covered certain lands on the Northern Pacific Railroad. He replied that he thought it did.

Now, there is in the land grant to the Northern Pacific Company a certain quantity of land known as the "indemnity strip," to indemnify the company for lands lost in the granted limits. The original grant allowed the Northern Pacific Company a strip of land 40 miles wide—odd sections—on each side of the track. It was a grant in quantity, and, as the gentleman has said, it was a grant co instanti, between Duluth and Puget Sound, to take effect at once, between these points.

Mr. GEAR. From the initial point of the road.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GEAR. And the question to-day is whether the initial point of the Northern Pacific road is at Ashland or Duluth, and the lands are held up in consequence of that.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Now, whether this was a grant in præsenti or not—some have contended that it was, and others that it is not—but here is the important point: Most all of the grant in place has been disposed of. It is the indemnity strip that remains, and that stretches out from Duluth to Puget Sound, 10 miles wide in alternate sections on either side of the road, and this the Secretary of the Interior can withdraw at any time, or any one of the odd sections in the 10 miles of the indemnity grant and allow other lands to be taken in lieu of it in Washington or Dakota, or in other States where the lands are available for these purposes.

Now, if it is a grant in place, and these lands are opposite to the lands granted, why, they are forfeited if this bill becomes a law. If they are not opposite they are not forfeited. That is all there is about it. Now, all through that country men honestly went and settled upon the odd sections, thinking they were outside the grant, and knowing nothing about the law by which the Secretary of the Interior was entitled to withdraw the additional 10 or 20 mile strips.

They got on the odd sections, and have built homes there, and some of them have been there for twenty years trying to get the title to that land. They are suspended like Mahomet's coffin, in mid-air. They can not get anything. Now, the question arises with me, does this bill give these settlers any rights? I doubt it. There are a large number of them affected, almost as many as under the other feature of it.

Mr. GEAR. They will be protected if the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] is adopted.

Mr. LACEY. My amendment would cover all that; but the proposition in the original bill, with the committee amendment, will not protect the rights of those settlers. My amendment would cover that, because it in general terms protects every man who has bought land at all.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Let me say right there—because I am so much interested that—Mr. Hill's road—I do not know which one it was—lost some 70,000 acres of land in Minnesota. By a ruling of the Department of the Interior, or an act of Congress, I will not be certain which, he came clear across the continent into the State of Washington, and there they granted and patented to him in my county those 70,000 acres of land in the place of the lands lost in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. GEAR. That was done under an act of Congress.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Now, I have always contended that if the railroad company lost any lands in the granted limits they must select lands opposite the lands lost, and that if there were no lands there, they could not go on to some other part of the country and select lands in some other place; but rulings of the Department of the Interior by various Secretaries of both parties—I am not speaking in a partisan sense—granted to them lands located on other parts of the line.

There ought to be in this bill something definite, something certain, something that will protect these men who twenty years ago went upon this indemnity strip, by and through no fault of theirs, because it was advertised all over the country that the railroad company was only granted a strip 20 or 40 miles wide, and they thought when they got outside of that strip, and onto an odd section, that they were entitled to locate there. Some of them got there before surveys were made, and when the surveys were made they found they were on the odd sections. Yet the Department holds that they can not retain their homes that they built.

The great question that ought to be before Congress is as to the indemnity limit, not the grant in place, not the forfeiture of what is known as the 20-mile strip or 40-mile strip on each side, but the lieu lands or the indemnity lands strip. I think they were only entitled under the law to their grant of land, the odd sections, 10 miles or 20 or 40 miles from the roads, and when they got what was there that was all Congress intended they should have; but the Secretaries have given them a 20-mile strip on each side, and many settlers are being deprived of their homes.

Mr. HERMANN. Now let me say, in reply to the gentleman from Washington, that as I understand the Secretary of the Interior is now ruling, and has been for the last year or so at least, that where settlement is made upon indemnity lands within the odd section, and that settlement is made by a bona fide settler, otherwise qualified, previous to the date of selection by the railroad company, that the settler's rights are prior and preferred to the right of the railroad company; but that if he is not there at the time that such selection is filed, then that the right of the railroad to select indemnity lands within the indemnity limit is supreme and conclusive over and above the rights of the settlers.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to my friends for these interruptions, because it is light that we have been seeking in regard to these points. This bill is not to be railroaded through here without consideration for the rights of settlers, simply because it looks well on paper to go out in the campaign and say Congress has declared forfeited over 50,000,000 acres of land, whether that land is desert or whether it is fertile; but this committee should carefully weigh the rights of every settler.

I have had some experience in this matter. We have had the question in the State of Iowa. In the northwestern part of Iowa, in the Des Moines River grant and the railway grants, settlers have been the object of our care and solicitude for a great many years. These men bought their lands and they went upon them. They improved them; they raised their families there; and finally a controversy arose in regard to conflicting grants of Congress, under which their rights were taken away; and we have seen great suffering among them.

To-day there is pending a bill in Congress to appropriate nearly half a million dollars to make good to them a part of the losses that they have incurred, and that if appropriated would not make good what they lost. Our experience in that matter ought to make us weigh and consider well any proposition to revoke and cancel titles to land which have passed into the hands of occupants.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has twenty-two minutes remaining.

Mr. LACEY. I yield such time to my colleague [Mr. GEAR] as he desires.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill in its present shape, and unless the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. LACEY] can be adopted I am satisfied that by the passage of this bill we will endanger the rights of many actual settlers. Let me illustrate. The Northern Pacific, as has been said by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON], has certain indemnity lands. Certain gentlemen that I know bought 75,000 acres of these lands. They sold them in turn to a large number of Scandinavians, people who went from my district, and largely from my own town.

If you pass this bill you put in peril the title of those 75,000 acres of land, by virtue of the fact that they have agreed to pay to the parties from whom they bought title, the title will be complicated so that the original purchasers can not make the title. I have been trying for months and months, aye, for six months, to get patents issued for these lands to the men who have been living on them for years, and have been debarred by rulings, or by lack of action would perhaps be the proper term to use, by the Department of the Interior. Now, so much for that.

Now, I want to say a word in regard to this map. This [illustrating] represents the State that I live in, the State of Iowa. It is a State in which there are about 35,000,000 acres. Now, the section of that map shown by this red line purports to contain the lands granted by Congress to the different railroads, or rather the parts of the State out of which these land grants were taken.

If this map is correct it shows that practically one-half of the State of Iowa would have been granted to the land-grant roads. Now, as a matter of fact, the State of Iowa has within her borders about 35,000,000 acres of land, and about one-eighth of the area was granted to the land-grant roads and to the Des Moines Land Grant Improvement Company, which amounted in round numbers to 4,000,000 acres of land. So that the map, when your attention is called to it, is false on its face.

Now, then, as to these land grants. I will take the Des Moines Valley. That company did not get an acre of land until it had built nearly 100 miles into the interior. Take the old Burlington and Missouri road. My recollection is that they got 287,000 acres of land. That is along the road in the western part of the State. It is a road running to the Missouri River through the district represented by my colleague, Mr. HEPBURN, and the ninth district, by Mr. HAGER.

The lands in the western part of Iowa were considered at that time as practically valueless. As a matter of fact they were put upon the old maps of the State as a part of the great American Desert. You could go and buy them for 75 cents to $1 an acre. The road was built through there. Settlers followed, and the alternate sections of the lands which were sold for $2.50 an acre have been made valuable, and to-day they are the most valuable lands on this continent.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Except those in the State of Washington.

Mr. GEAR. Of course, I except those of the gentleman's State. The Rock Island road did not get an acre until they had gone over 160 miles into the interior. That was the old Missouri and Mississippi. The Northwestern road did not get an acre until it had gone west of Cedar Rapids. The Illinois Central Railroad did not get any lands until it had gone some distance west, I think to Grundy County, perhaps about 100 miles. The only road which originally got any large amount near the Mississippi was that built in the northern part of the State, now the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul.

The whole land, as I before stated, granted to Iowa for all railroad purposes was less than one-eighth of the State. The Government has been reimbursed for that; and had it not been for these grants the western part of Iowa would in my judgment still be put down as a part of the "great American Desert."

Mr. BOATNER. Were not the roads to which the gentleman refers built within that time?

Mr. GEAR. Not all of them. Lands were regranted by the State for the benefit of these roads time and again. When I had the honor of being a member of the Legislature and at another time chief executive of the State, we regranted those lands; and in that country up there in the northwestern part of the State, which is now one of the garden spots of Iowa, the company receiving those grants offered to sell and did sell the lands in many cases for two and three dollars an acre—land which to-day, by reason of cultivation and of the fact that railroads have built through that country, is worth from $25 to $50 an acre.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman will allow me to suggest that this bill can not apply to roads which were built within time.

Mr. GEAR. I understand that; yet, without the Lacey amendment it will unsettle titles. But I want to show how false this map is—that those who have gotten it up, who are interested in the passage of this bill, are trying to palm off on this committee what is practically a falsehood.

Mr. BOATNER. But the map does not affect the question at issue.

Mr. GEAR. An "object lesson" like this might affect the eye of any gentleman, who in looking at this map might be greatly misled as to the extent of these land grants in my State. I submit that the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. LACEY] should be adopted so as to protect actual settlers, from the highest to the lowest, on these and all other lands granted to railways.

I yield back the time to my colleague.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. LACEY. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOATNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just taken his seat seems to misapprehend the purpose of this bill. The bill will not interfere with the grant to any railroad company whose grant has been earned. It will not interfere with the right of any settler who has bought from a railroad company that had authority to sell. But it does propose to take back to the General Government all the lands granted to the railroad companies that have not conformed to the terms and conditions of the grant and thereby earned the lands.

Mr. Chairman, it was first held in the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman, in 21 Wallace, page 44, as stated by the gentleman from Iowa, that all these grants made by the General Government to the States, and by them used in the construction of railways were grants in præsenti, that they carried the title absolutely from the Government and vested it in the States, and that therefore no person could question the title of the States until the Federal Government had exercised its right of declaring a forfeiture because of the nonperformance of the conditions of the grant.

So it was held in that case that the title to the property remained vested in the State—Wisconsin, I believe it was—although nominally the State had granted the land to a railway company which had failed to build in the time fixed. But while the court held that the grant was in præsenti, and vested title into the State; it was also held that the State could not dispose of that land except in literal compliance with the terms and conditions of the grant; that any other disposition of the land, any conveyance on terms different from those provided by the grant, was void.

Now, I have taken the pains to look at a number of these grants. I commence by referring to the grant made to the State of Iowa, May 15, 1856, which contains this language in section 4:

"And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted to said State shall be disposed of by said State only in manner following; that is to say, that a quantity of land not exceeding 120 sections for each of said roads, and included within a continuous length of 20 miles of each of said roads, may be sold; and when the governor of said State shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that any 20 continuous miles of any of said roads is completed, then another quantity of land hereby granted, not to exceed 120 sections for each of said roads having 20 continuous miles completed as aforesaid, and included within a continuous length of 20 miles of each of such roads may be sold, and so from time to time until said roads are completed; and if any of said roads are not completed within ten years, no further sale shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States."

This is the condition inserted not only in the act granting lands to the State of Iowa, but in those granting lands to Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Minnesota, and all the States that received land grants from the Federal Government in 1855, 1856, and 1857.

Mr. HERMANN. I would like to ask the gentleman one question. In a case like that of the grant to the State of Iowa, in which there was a condition that the road should be completed within ten years, otherwise the lands should revert, have the courts ever held that if the railroad company went on after the time and completed the road, lands sold after the expiration of the original limit of time reverted?

Mr. BOATNER. That question has never arisen except in suits between private individuals and the railway companies. In such cases the State courts—I do not know that the question has ever gone to the Supreme Court of the United States—have held that the individual has no right to question the title of the road, that the United States Government is the only authority that can deal with the question, and that until Congress has by legislative action declared the forfeiture, the question is one which the court can not consider.

Now, I call my friend's attention particularly to the important question that is before us. Under the provisions of these acts the Congress of the United States granted lands to several of the States to be used in aid of railway construction. They provide that the States may dispose of the lands for this purpose in the manner indicated in the acts, and "in no other." They specify exactly what is to be done with the land. They authorize the States to sell the first twenty sections in advance of the construction of any road, and to apply the proceeds for the construction of the road.

After the first twenty sections are sold and the proceeds so applied the remainder can only be sold as the road is completed in sections. When the road is completed in sections of 20 miles, the acts uniformly authorize the governor of the State to dispose of the additional amount authorized by the act, with the reservation that if the roads in aid of which this land is granted are not constructed within ten years from the date of the act, there shall be no further sales and the lands shall revert to the United States.

The contemplation of the law was not that the States should give the land to the railroad companies. The contemplation of the law in its plain and explicit terms was that the land should be sold by the governor of the State and the proceeds given to the roads. The lands could only be sold as the road was completed in sections. And when the ten years were up the State government lost its authority to sell, and by mere force of law the land not then sold reverted to the United States.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Assuming for argument's sake that the gentleman's proposition is correct, in what attitude would that view of the case put the people of Iowa, for instance, where the governor, after the expiration of ten years, went on and sold these lands?

Mr. BOATNER. Well, the Supreme Court, in the Schulenberg case, says that any act of a State government with respect to these grants, beyond the terms of the granting act, is absolutely void.

Now, in the Schulenberg case the contention was that the land belonged either to the State or to the railroad company. The court held that it belonged to the State, because the grant was in presenti; that it did not belong to the railroad company, notwithstanding the State had granted it to the railroad company, because the State had not granted it on the terms and conditions of the granting act.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Now, if the action of the governor of Iowa was void, then the passage of this bill would unsettle all those titles, would it not?

Mr. BOATNER. I do not understand that this bill strikes at any grant which was earned within the time, and the gentleman from Iowa said that the roads in that State were built within the time.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no; not all of them.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Assuming that they were not built within the time, then the passage of this bill would unsettle the titles, would it not, of thousands of farmers in the State of Iowa?

Mr. BOATNER. Not at all, unless they own more than 320 acres. The gentleman must recollect that this act is merely an amendment of the act of 1890. It proposes to amend a certain section of that law; but it does not interfere with the third section of that act, which reads in this way:

That in all cases where persons being citizens of the United States, or who have declared their intentions to become such, in accordance with the naturalization laws of the United States, are in possession of any of the lands affected by any such grant and hereby resumed by and restored to the United States, under deed, written contract with, or license from, the State or corporation to which such grant was made, or its assignees, executed prior to January 1, 1888—

That is amended by this bill so as to read eighteen hundred and ninety—or where persons may have settled said lands with bona fide intent to secure title thereto by purchase from the State or corporation when earned by compliance with the conditions or requirements of the granting acts of Congress they shall be entitled to purchase the same from the United States, in quantities not exceeding 320 acres to any one such person, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, at any time within two years from the passage of this act, and on making said payment to receive patents therefor, and where any such person in actual possession of any such lands and having improved the same prior to the 1st day of January, 1890, under deed, written contract, or license as aforesaid, or his assignor, has made partial or full payments to said railroad company prior to said date, on account of the purchase price of said lands from it, on proof of the amount of such payments he shall be entitled to have the same to the extent and amount of $1.25 per acre, if so much has been paid, and not more, credited to him on account of and as part of the purchase price herein provided to be paid the United States for said lands, or such persons may elect to abandon their purchases and make claim on said lands under the homestead law and as provided in the preceding section of this act.

I will say, however, to my friend that I will cheerfully support any amendment to this bill which will protect bona fide purchasers having titles derived from the railroad companies; but such a concession, while it may be necessary in some cases in order to protect innocent purchasers, will have the effect of defrauding the people of the United States out of lands which they require for actual settlement, and will tend to give effect to the schemes and jobs of railroad constructors who in many instances have sold lands in immense bodies to the agents and inside men of the corporation who now hold them for speculative purposes.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Is there any railroad company holding lands now that is not willing to sell them?

Mr. BOATNER. I do not know that there is. I know that some companies are holding lands at prices higher than the people are willing to pay.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow this further suggestion? There is another class of people, I think, that ought to be taken care of by an amendment to this bill. I refer to cases where mortgages have been placed on these lands, and bonds issued, and the bonds have been purchased by innocent parties——

Mr. BOATNER. There is no sort of question about that. The report made by the Judiciary Committee in the Forty-seventh or the Forty-eighth Congress——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I think the bill ought to be amended to cover that.

Mr. BOATNER. In reference to that let me say to the gentleman that there is a wide difference between the rights and the liabilities of those companies which received the grants of land directly from Congress and those who received them from the States.

When the United States Government makes a direct grant of land to a corporation with a condition subsequent, as the courts call it, why Congress is in default and becomes culpable if it does not assert the right of forfeiture at the expiration of the time fixed by the act for the performance of the condition—in other words, the construction of the road.

If it sits down and permits the grantees to build the road after the time, or encumber the property by mortgages or otherwise, when it might have been forfeited in pursuance of the granting act itself, equity and fair dealing would require the Government to respect the rights of individuals who have acquired possession of the property in the meantime. But that does not arise at all in respect to the grants to railroad corporations through the States, because by the very provisions of the acts themselves the States are prohibited from disposing of the lands except on the terms embodied in the granting act.

The disposition of land so acquired by the State to the railroad companies without the performance of the conditions required by the granting act does not carry title, and the companies have no right to mortgage the lands, because that right, or rather power, springs from the right of ownership. When there is no ownership such as would warrant the disposition of the land by sale or exchange, there is no right in the company to encumber it by a mortgage.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. But the gentleman invokes the strict principle of law as against equity that innocent persons should be protected.

Mr. BOATNER. Not at all.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Certainly; where land has been conveyed to the State, to be in turn transferred to the railroad companies under certain conditions, why individuals who dealt with the railroad companies have felt secure of their title from the fact that they supposed the general authority of the government of the State itself was behind their title and would protect them.

Now, by this bill you seek to take that away from them, as I understand the provisions of the bill, and enforce the strict principle of law whereby you deprive many people, who have parted with their money, not to acquire a legal title, but an actual interest in a mortgage or trust deed or something of that kind, of the rights which they have thus obtained.

Mr. BOATNER. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is a subject of most profound amazement to me that lawyers, who are business men, who are in the habit of dealing with large transactions and advising people about matters and questions of private right, will come up here and set up a defense of the railroad companies and the purchasers of land from them that would not be tolerated in a justice of the peace's court.

Why, suppose as an illustration of this that I give my friend from Illinois a power of attorney to sell my house, and stipulate that he is to exercise that power within five months, or say that the power shall expire on the 1st day of January next, does the gentleman suppose that there is a man in the United States outside of a lunatic asylum who would buy that property from him thirty days, or ten days, or one day, or two hours and a half after the expiration of that time?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Let me say——

Mr. BOATNER. I can not yield to the gentleman. Let me conclude my sentence.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I deny the correctness of the illustration as applying to my proposition.

Mr. BOATNER. I can not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I say instead——

Mr. BOATNER. I must decline to be interrupted. Let me apply the illustration to my argument.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Very well, I will not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. BOATNER. The acts of Congress which have conferred these grants of land through the medium of the State, and some of those which have conferred the grants of land directly to the railroad companies, are ambiguous and no man could have misunderstood them. Some may have pretended to do so, but there is no individual, with brains enough to be out of doors, who can misunderstand them.

What do they say? That the Legislature of the State is authorized to dispose of a certain quantity of public land under certain conditions and at a certain price, the proceeds to be expended in the construction of railroads. That thereafter the certification of the completion of 20 additional miles of the road will authorize the sale of an additional quantity, and so on from time to time for each additional 20 miles of road until the whole is completed. The land shall be disposed of in no other way, and every one of these grants winds up with the declaration "that if the road be not completed in ten years no additional sale shall be made and the lands shall revert to the United States."

Now, where does any government of any State that has ever received lands from the United States for any such purpose under any grant by Congress get authority to sell the lands after the expiration of that period? The power to sell dies with the act. It is limited to ten years. When that time is up the power is dead by the express terms of the act itself, and is no longer in existence.

Mr. LACEY. Suppose that the language that you have quoted does not appear in the act?

Mr. BOATNER. But it is in all of them.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Oh, no!

Mr. LACEY. Not in all of them.

Mr. BOATNER. I say it is in every grant which is made to the States for this purpose. It is not in those grants made directly by Congress to corporations. I have stated that the principles I contend for do not apply to the latter class of cases.

The law is perfectly clear that where a grant was made on condition-subsequent, and the grantor permitted the grantee to perform the condition of the grant out of time, or after the time allowed for the performance of the condition, then a separate question is presented, and the grantor is bound by the performance, as between private individuals under similar circumstances. It has never been decided, however, as between the Government and the individual.

Mr. LACEY. Do I understand the gentleman to hold that the forfeiture of the Northern Pacific grant would be inoperative under this act?

Mr. BOATNER. That depends entirely upon the terms of the grant itself. I have not examined the conditions.

As I said awhile ago, Mr. Chairman, in reply to a suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], a report was made to the House by the Judiciary Committee in the Forty-seventh or Forty-eighth Congress, I think, in which it was laid down as a principle that the performance of a condition-subsequent, after the time fixed in the contract had expired, was nevetheless a performance, and if the Government permitted it to be done at that time, and did not declare a forfeiture when it could do so and should have done so, that it would be very inequitable for the United States to reënter upon the property and prejudice a bona fide right after it had in the meantime passed into the hands of innocent holders. That position I do not question.

In that case a grant of land had been made to what is known as the Baton Rouge, Vicksburg and Shreveport Railroad Company. Not a spade had been put into the ground or a cross-tie put in, not a rail was ever laid, and yet the grantees had mortgaged the grant for a large sum of money.

The effect of the ruling of the Committee on the Judiciary was that the men who finally did build the road were compelled, in order to obtain the grant, to admit the validity of these mortgages, so that under the influence of this equitable principle, of which we hear so much, a gigantic steal was consummated.

But the principles do not apply in a case where the railroad company is still in the possession of a grant, where no bona fide rights have intervened. A question might arise between the Government and the mortgage creditors, if by the terms of the grant the road had the power and authority to mortgage, and, in my judgment, if the terms of the grant did give them power to mortgage, why, then, the mortgage would still subsist upon the land, although the Government might forfeit it and take it back. It would take it back cum onere. If it had put the power in the hands of its grantee to impose an incumbrance, it might take the property back, but it could not destroy the incumbrance which had been created by virtue of the authority which it had conferred.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield to me right there?

Mr. BOATNER. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. For information and illustration?

Mr. BOATNER. If you are going to make a speech, I do not want to yield.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. You said awhile ago that the $1.25 which they had expended was paid back; that they got credit for that.

Mr. BOATNER. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Now, an illustration. In my State a gentleman purchased in 1882 from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company a large body of land. I think the total amount was about 14,000 acres. He sold that land ten years afterward, not for money, but for wheat, so many bushels of wheat to be delivered every year. Now, how is anybody going to be reimbursed there? How are these settlers going to be reimbursed? This man sold this land for 10 bushels of wheat to be delivered every year. He held the land ten years, and then sold it for 10 bushels of wheat to be delivered each year.

Mr. BOATNER. I apprehend the point which the gentleman makes, and I will answer it unreservedly. If the grant to the railway company to which you refer carried with it the power of disposition, there is no power vested in this Government that can revoke it to the prejudice of that third person.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I have the terms of the grant here before me.

Mr. BOATNER. If the Congress of the United States makes a grant on terms that will authorize the grantee to sell or mortgage the property, why the Government may re-enter thereafter for nonperformance of a condition-subsequent, but it must take the property cum onere. And if the railroad company had disposed of that property, if it had authority to sell it, why we can not by a subsequent act revoke that authority to the prejudice of a bona fide purchaser, whether he has bought 320 acres or 320,000 acres.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Will the gentleman allow me another interruption?

Mr. BOATNER. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The reason I interrupt the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] is because of his ability as a lawyer.

Mr. BOATNER. It is not necessary to apologize at all. I am quite willing to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. You are interested in your State grants?

Mr. BOATNER. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I am interested in the lieu land question in my State. Now, I want your interpretation of the law, because you are a very able lawyer. Now, the grant to the Northern Pacific Railway Company, you know, was 40 miles on each side, the alternate sections and the odd section would sell at $2.50 an acree to indemnify the Government for the loss of it.

Now, in addition to that I will quote the following language:

> And wherever prior to said time any of said sections or parts of sections shall have been granted, sold, reserved, or occupied by homestead settlers, or preëmpted or otherwise disposed of, other lands shall be selected by said company in lieu thereof and designated by odd numbers, not more than 10 miles beyond the limits of the alternate sections.

Now, the question arises with me whether this forfeiture act which we have before us will only forfeit the grants in place. It will not, in my judgment, forfeit an acre of the land within the indemnity strip, because that is a floating grant; and for lands lost in Minnesota they select lands in my State, and for lands lost in other parts of the line they select lands in other places. That is to say, the grant of the Northern Pacific was a grant of so many acres to a township. If that many acres were not in the township, if they formed part of an Indian reservation, or if they had been preëmpted or homesteaded or disposed of in other ways, the companies might go to some place else and take lands. That has been the ruling of the Department of the Interior. Now, the question with me is, is it a grant in place, or is it a floating grant?

If it is a floating grant, you do not forfeit an acre of it, and every settler on that land—the most important part in the whole controversy, because the grant in place is nearly all disposed of—will still be under the same embarrassment. The whole question is right there.

The gentleman has studied it, and he is a most profound and distinguished and able lawyer. And I wish he would enlighten me on the question. I confess I am a little in doubt upon it, and if I do not get the information from the gentleman from Louisiana, I know I am going to get it from my good friend from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE], who knows all about the land question, and who I see is smiling at me.

Mr. BOATNER. The gentleman has consumed about ten minutes of my time——

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I will get the gentleman ten minutes more if he will furnish me this information. I am sure there will be no difficulty in getting him the time.

Mr. BOATNER. I am somewhat at a loss to know the scope of the question.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. So we all are.

Mr. BOATNER. I mean the scope of the gentleman's question. I have not examined the terms of that grant to which the gentleman has directed my attention, and I am unable to state what are the specific rights of the settlers under that grant, or of purchasers of the property, and I can only repeat what I said just now, that if the terms of the grant authorized the sale of the property by the railway company to the grantee, the Government must stand by that sale. No government or individual can authorize anyone else to do an act and then repudiate that act because of the failure of the agent to do something in the future which the first party to the contract can not control and is not concerned with.

For instance, if the Government in the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company said that that corporation might dispose of property upon certain terms, and then went on and fixed as a condition-subsequent that it should perform certain other things, why, the purchasers of the land from the company have no power to compel the performance of the condition-subsequent, therefore the Government can not interfere with the titles which it had authorized to be made.

And so, whether or not the indemnity land to which the gentleman has referred would be covered by the provisions of this act depends entirely upon the terms and conditions of the granting act.

I had been addressing myself entirely to the rights of parties, growing out of the rights given to the several States.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I understood that part of it.

Mr. BOATNER. And I was merely proceeding to point out the principle that no man can complain that he is an innocent purchaser from a railroad company. No man can claim he is an innocent holder under a grant from a State, because the terms and conditions upon which the State was authorized to dispose of the land are fixed by law. If a man is going to buy United States land from the State, the question would naturally arise, by what authority does the State dispose of this land? He is referred to the act of Congress.

That land belongs to the United States, but Congress has authorized the State to dispose of it. So when he refers to the terms of the law placing the property in the hands of the State, he finds the exact extent of the authority of the State and he knows exactly what he is getting.

Mr. MALLORY. What becomes of those lands which were purchased by third parties after being granted for roads which were not completed within the required time? Will you forfeit those?

Mr. BOATNER. Why, of course not.

Mr. MALLORY. They would be forfeited under this bill.

Mr. BOATNER. Not at all.

Mr. MALLORY. Because it makes the completion of the road within the time the test whether these lands should be forfeited or not.

Mr. BOATNER. I call the attention of the gentleman from Florida to this distinction: This land is not granted by the Government to the railroads. It is granted to the State, to be used by the State in aid of the construction of the road. The act authorizes the State to dispose of 120 sections. Those 120 sections are subject to sale without any condition whatever. The other portion of the lands are to be disposed of as the lines are completed.

Mr. MALLORY. But suppose the road never was completed within the time specified in the act. Is the land that was granted for the completion of a particular 20 miles of the road to be forfeited under the act?

Mr. BOATNER. Oh, no; not at all, if that part of the road was completed within the time.

Mr. MALLORY. Suppose the road never was completed.

Mr. BOATNER. But that part of it was completed.

Mr. MALLORY. That part, but not the road itself.

Mr. BOATNER. Here is the condition: I call the gentleman's attention to the language of the law. It says:

> If any of said roads is not completed within ten years no further sale shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States.

That is, the land unsold shall revert to the United States. All those which have been sold prior to that time have been sold in accordance with the terms and conditions of the act, by the State having authority to do so, and therefore they are not subject to forfeiture.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Louisiana a question. In the case of the Gulf and Ship Island road, that road was not commenced until after the granting act had expired—the first 20 miles—and that land was sold and patented. Now, what effect does this have upon that?

Mr. BOATNER. I understand the gentleman to say that the road was not commenced until after the expiration of the grant?

Mr. STOCKDALE. Yes.

Mr. BOATNER. Then there was no title to the land. That is just the case I stated awhile ago. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that if there is any title to that land it must be upon some principle of law that I have never heard of. The land belonged to the sovereign, the United States. The United States granted it to the State, to be disposed of upon certain terms and conditions. It says it shall be disposed of in this way and no other. If the State has gone on and disposed of it in some other way than that which it was authorized the sale is void.

Mr. STOCKDALE. By disposing of it to people on the road, the Supreme Court says that the title is vested in them.

Mr. BOATNER. But in the very same decision in which it is held that the title is in the State, it held that the State can not dispose of it, except in accordance with the granting act, and the terms of the granting act says that they shall not be disposed of at all if the road is not built in ten years.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Iowa for a question.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to lines 13 and 14, on page 2 of that act. Now, he will find this language:

Any such railroad not constructed or completed within the time specified in the act making the grant.

The act making the grant; not the act making the grant and acts amendatory thereto.

In the very grant that was made to the State of Iowa, there was a requirement that the road should be completed within ten years. But there were amendatory acts extending that time, giving them the right to these grants where the roads were completed within the time prescribed in the amendatory acts, but not in the time prescribed by the act making the grant. Now, is it not true that under the provisions of this bill every acre of land granted to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of railroads would be forfeited?

Mr. BOATNER. Not at all, under the statement of facts given by the gentleman. I do not consider we would have the power to forfeit them. I consider that the forfeiture or the attempt to forfeit a grant to a railroad which had built its road according to the terms and conditions of the grant would be confiscation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Do not you think this is confiscation?

Mr. BOATNER. Not at all; because the act provides for the case cited.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to ask the gentleman another question, if he will permit me. This same controversy happened in Congress in 1890 and earlier years. There was the same contention upon the part of certain gentlemen of the right of Congress to forfeit all lands that were not earned within the time fixed in the granting act. But in 1890, instead of adopting the contention of the gentleman from Louisiana and the gentleman in charge of this bill, Congress did this: It provided by act to resume its right to all lands opposite to and coterminous with that portion of any such railroad not now completed and in operation, and the language of that act was, "Not now completed and in operation." The language of this act is, "Not completed within the time named in the grant."

Now, is it not true that the adoption of the language even of the statute of 1890 can properly be called under all circumstances of this contention a waiver on the part of Congress of its right to do what the gentleman is now contending for?

Mr. BOATNER. I hardly think so, Mr. Chairman. It appears to me that would be an exceedingly strained construction.

In concluding my remarks, I want to say to gentlemen on the other side that it is very easy to test all the questions and all the objections which they now raise. These questions have been before the country for the last ten or fifteen years, and the people have been demanding the land. The people demand that the immense areas which were given to railroads in aid of construction, which were not earned in accordance with the terms of the grant or which it was claimed were earned after the expiration of the time prescribed in the grant, shall be restored to the public domain.

The railroads say you can not do it. They say that it is an infringement and an invasion of the private rights that they have in the land, and that under the grant they have earned the lands. They say it belongs to them; that Congress can not reenter because of the failure on their part to perform the conditions subsequent, because they have since performed those conditions, and though after the expiration of the time within which they were to complete the building of the roads, the legal effect has been to earn the grants and acquire a fee-simple title to the lands. It is easy enough to test this question.

The railroads have no need to fear the courts of the United States; and they would not be afraid of them if they were not afraid of the propositions which they advance, if they were not afraid that the courts would hold that these grants to the States were limited, and conveyed no authority to sell after the expiration of the time fixed.

If they were not afraid that the Supreme Court would hold that the attempt to dispose of these lands after the expiration of the time fixed under the act was void and that those who bought that land bought it with full notice of the want of title in the vendor, and that he was bound to look to the authority of the vendor and see if he had any title to give. They would not only not be opposing this act, but would be glad to have their titles judicially settled; but they are afraid that the Supreme Court will hold against them on all these propositions, and that the mortgage bonds they have issued rest on no sounder basis than the deeds they have made. The power to mortgage is an element of ownership.

If there is no power to sell there is no power to create an incumbrance which could only be enforced by a sale. The destruction of the title by a vice existing in it at the time the mortgage was created is ordinarily the destruction of the mortgage, and where there is no title there can be no mortgage.

The mortgagee must look to the title of the mortgagor just as the vendee must look to the title of the vendor; and where a mortgagee takes a mortgage upon property which the mortgagor does not own he takes it at his own peril.

If the railway companies feel confident that the courts will maintain the objections which are always urged here—and I must say urged with a great deal of ability—they ought to let this bill pass and let the question be decided by the courts of the country, the Supreme Court of the United States being the final arbiter, whether they have earned their grants under the terms of the law or whether the Government has the right to take them back and give the lands to the people to whom, if forfeited by the railroad companies, they belong.

Mr. MEIKLEJOHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes of my time to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], and I reserve the remainder.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, what I shall say on this subject will be more especially in the interest of the innocent bona fide purchasers of lands from railroad companies that are to be affected by this bill if it should become a law.

I refer particularly to those people who have entered into contracts with the railroad companies, have paid a valid and sufficient consideration or contracted to do so, and those particularly who have made valuable improvements upon their lands, and still more those who have gone upon the lands and made their homes there in good faith.

Prior to September 29, 1890, the Department of the Interior for a considerable period declined to confirm title to any of these railroad companies upon the filing of their lists of selections. On the date named Congress undertook to pass on this great question, and instead of declaring a forfeiture in all cases where the roads had not been completed in time, it confined the forfeiture to those lands conterminous with roads not completed at all; and in the same act it protected the rights of persons who had purchased lands conterminous with uncompleted roads from the railroad companies; or secondly, those who had entered merely into contracts of purchase with the railroad companies; or thirdly, those who had in good faith and with the intention to acquire title to the land entered upon it with a view to settlement or occupancy.

These various classes were protected. As to the limitation, it was provided that not exceeding 320 acres should be acquired by any person under that act. Now, the Committee on Public Lands has virtually incorporated into this bill that act of July 9, 1890, so far as these conditions and limitations are concerned.

The fourth section of the granting act to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company (and I particularly refer to that because the remaining grants are similar in language) provides that whenever 25 miles of any railroad has been completed, thereupon that fact shall be certified to the President of the United States and he shall appoint commissioners to examine the road, to ascertain whether it has been constructed in a substantial and workmanlike manner. When those commissioners certify that fact favorably to the Government, the Secretary of the Interior thereupon considers the lists of selections; and upon the evidence submitted by the commission approves of them.

For some time prior to September 29, 1890, he had declined to approve these lists, believing that Congress would in the end take hold of the subject and legislate upon it one way or another. Congress not having legislated upon the entire subject, but having confined its legislation to lands coterminous with railroads not completed, the various Departments of the Government assumed—rightly assumed, I believe—that thereafter no further action would be taken, and that it would be doing injustice not only to the great communities of the West, affected by the uncertainty, but particularly to the assignees of the railroad companies under their grants, to further hold up these selections and prevent these parties from obtaining title.

Thereafter both the Republican and the Democratic Administrations acted on that assumption, and the Interior Department has since been issuing patents to these various companies upon proof that the roads were completed in accordance with the granting act, which requires that "patents of lands as aforesaid shall be issued to said company, confirming to said company the right and title to said lands situate opposite to and coterminous with said completed sections of said road."

Only a short time ago, under the present Administration, there were patented to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, on the 17th of May of the present year, 479,219 acres of land. Previous to that time, in the last days of the previous Administration—on March 3, 1893—there were patented to the Oregon and California Company, at one time, 97,929 acres; at another time 71,081 acres, and on June 11, 1894, only last month, again under the present Administration, there were patented 152,409 acres.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to invite special attention to the fact that here by a solemn act of the administrative department of the Government, the title passes out of the Government; it leaves the jurisdiction of the Interior Department and goes into the railroad companies and from the railroad companies into the various assignees. It has gone beyond this Congress and becomes a matter for the courts. This is the situation with a large portion of these granted areas at the present time.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, makes no adequate exemptions whatever. There is not the least clause saving any rights of parties who have made purchases of these corporations in excess of 320 acres. It is as to this harsh provision, or rather this unjust omission, that I particularly complain to-day.

Take, for instance, that vast empire stretching 1,000 miles westward of the city of Bismark, in Dakota. All parties who have purchased lands within that great extent of territory, and within the limits of the land grant, if they hold lands in excess of 320 acres from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, will incur forfeiture or loss of their property.

Within that long distance many cities have grown up which occupy areas exceeding 640 acres. Those areas have been divided into town lots and into acre tracts. They have been parcelled off and conveyed to various individuals. Factories have been built upon them; great works and enterprises of an industrial character are now in operation there. I submit to my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, the question, where will he draw the dividing line? How will he segregate the exempted 320 acres from those purchased tracts exceeding 320 acres?

In what part of a city or town covering an area exceeding 320 acres, will he draw the line of division in order to give to the party the exact 320 acres? To what party will he award these 320 acres? Where there are many lot owners, how will the division be made? How will he adjust the inequalities? The gentleman will meet a difficulty there that will be very hard indeed to overcome. No remedy is proposed by this bill, and this only emphasizes how crudely and insufficiently has this great subject been considered and presented here.

I might illustrate with regard to many other grants in the great West, where a like indifference is manifested by the committee concerning the wretched condition of titles, which this legislation will produce. I might show how in the southern portion of my own State many parties have purchased timber lands obtained from these railroad companies in tracts of 640 acres, and in some cases in excess of a thousand acres.

These parties have engaged in the business of taking valuable timber from these lands; they have erected extensive sawmills and planing establishments, and constructed logging roads, etc., covering much of the lands thus purchased. What is the gentleman going to do with this class of innocent and bona fide purchasers from the railroad company? They had a right to believe that the company had at least color of title. They beheld the Government of the United States deducting from the company 40 or 50 per cent of the contract price for carrying the mails. They likewise beheld the railroad company charged up for the transportation of munitions of war and troops and generally of any property belonging to the Government.

Going into the United States land offices they beheld the receiver of those offices collecting double maximum prices from settlers who were residing upon the even numbered sections within the limits of this grant—settlers who were paying for at least the original value of the land in the odd sections granted to the company itself. It was Stephen A. Douglas who first justified placing a double minimum price on the even sections, because, as he claimed, the Government would in reality not be losing anything. The Government received $2.50 for $1.25 per acre lands. All these acts on the part of the Government were taking place in sight of the grantor, the Government of the United States.

Still stronger and beyond all this, these persons beheld the President of the United States receiving and approving the report of the commissioners sent out to examine the sections of 25 miles of completed road; they beheld the President ordering the Secretary of the Interior to certify these various lists for patents; and then the lands, in many cases, were patented to these companies, the title passing from the Government of the United States under the order of the Executive Department of the Government. Had not these people a right to believe that this company had a title somewhere? Had they not just occasion to place their trust and their faith in the title which they received from the railroad company under these circumstances?

The chairman of the Committee on Public Lands seems to close his eyes and his ears to the equities even of those parties who are thus claiming title from the railroad companies to lands which have been patented to them by the Government. Those companies in such cases hold the highest evidences of ownership of real estate which any person can have in this or in any other nation.

The innocent purchasers, looking at the record evidence, seeing these patents solemnly written, signed, sealed, and issued, and then as solemnly recorded in the several counties in which the lands are located, and then thereupon purchasing the lands and paying the full market value in good faith—I ask the gentleman how can he satisfy his conscience or his sense of justice and right by coming in here to-day to confiscate—not to forfeit, but to confiscate—the title of these innocent people without any wrong on their part?

They are the immediate and direct sufferers. The railroad company is not so much the sufferer. I am not here pleading for the railroad company, but I am for the innocent purchasers, many of whom I am personally acquainted with, and who under the circumstances I have described, and under at least color of title, have gone on in good faith and paid their hard-earned money, or negotiated to pay it, to obtain title. I ask whether any gentleman on this floor, in view of all these circumstances, will say "aye" upon the passage of a bill which denies these settlers this simple justice, this undoubted right?

Why, sir, there is not even the small privilege of a repayment to these people. Not a dollar of what they have paid in good faith for these lands is to be reimbursed to them. They are to be absolute losers of every cent paid, with all expenditures made for the betterments on the lands in excess of 320 acres, and all this in full view of Congress—of the Government—the grantor—standing idly by, seeing the railroad construction progressing day by day and year by year after the time allowed for the completion of the road and after imposing all these restrictions upon them, yet not expressing any protest by resolution, executive order, or amendment of the original act as to the default in completion of the road as required by the grant.

It does seem to me if these people under such circumstances are at this late day to be thus deprived of their property, that it will be an unjustifiable as well as an unnecessary and an unusual hardship. I ask my friend if it is possible that he will lend himself to be a party to such an act, such an infamous act I may call it, that will impose such hardship upon innocent people?

Why, Mr. Chairman, along the line of the Northern Pacific road, and especially may I say along the Southern Pacific, you will find a vast expanse of country on which there is neither a shrub nor a tree. There is a species of grass which grows in those sections to some extent which is nutritious to cattle and sheep, especially to the latter, but it grows sparsely and requires a very large quantity of land to support limited numbers of these animals. It is necessary, therefore, for the man who would raise sheep profitably to purchase in quantities of a thousand or two thousand acres; and it is also necessary, as civilization encroaches upon the frontier and as settlements multiply in these regions, for large tracts of land to be fenced in at great expense.

Much of this work has been done. These people have in this way paid their money, have made their homes: they are holding title from the railroad company, and the railroad company is holding the right and title from the Government of the United States. Are these people under such circumstances entitled to any consideration or to any privileges? Is there any justice in the proposed action here which would deprive them of all of their rights in excess of 320 acres?

Mr. BOEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HERMANN. With pleasure.

Mr. BOEN. What kind of a deed, does the gentleman know, did the railroad company give to these purchasers?

Mr. HERMANN. In this case, where the companies received patent from the Government of the United States, I understand they have given all the title that they had, all the title that any person could give who has a title, and which they have reason to believe on the face of it is a good title.

Mr. BOEN. The only deed given was a warranty deed. I have recorded many of them myself. The Northern Pacific has given warranty deeds in all cases, and consequently the company is responsible itself.

Mr. HERMANN. What is that responsibility worth under the present conditions?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The road is in the hands of a receiver now, and how can a deed of that character be good for anything, or how can the company undertake to guarantee or warrant a title that it has conveyed?

Mr. HERMANN. That is precisely the condition, and it is only a stronger illustration of the fact that the innocent purchasers, who are not technical lawyers, who can not afford to go and pay lawyers to give them advice and to interest themselves in their affairs, are to be the sufferers by such legislation as this. These men had to trust to their own good sense, and, judging by their environments and the circumstances surrounding them, they believed this company had a good title, especially so when they saw the patent of the Government of the United States bearing the great seal of State and by its side the signatures of the officers of the Government who are required by law to affix their signatures to such documents, and when they found that patent on record in the county in which the lands are situated.

Mr. CANNON of California. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest to him that the last clause of the second section seems to secure such purchasers from the railroad companies in their rights.

Mr. HERMANN. I will say to my good friend from California that it secures nothing to any purchaser directly or indirectly in excess of the limited area of 320 acres of land.

Mr. COX. May I interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question? I am not familiar with this subject. Do I understand the gentleman from Oregon to make the statement that the Government of the United States has issued its patent or grant to the railroad company for this land, and thereupon the company sold the land to innocent purchasers, and that they got possession of the land under their deeds from the companies and are now occupying them?

Mr. HERMANN. That is an exact description of the condition and the title of these people for which they paid their money. I am illustrating the case where the Government issued patents for large tracts of lands beyond the point at which the roads were completed when the period prescribed for the completion of the roads had expired, but where the roads were subsequently completed by the railroad companies.

Mr. COX. Then the whole question resolves itself into this: That if you declare a forfeiture of the land you must set aside the patents given to the railroad by the United States?

Mr. HERMANN. Necessarily so; and I think that is one of the most iniquitous results which will follow the passage of the bill.

Mr. COX. That would turn the purchaser of the land back upon the railroad company on their deeds. Is not that the only remedy they would have?

Mr. HERMANN. I will assume that to be the only remedy, and I will further illustrate the character of this proposed legislation, to which I desire still more to address myself.

Mr. COX. That is the very point I wanted to hear the gentleman upon.

Mr. HERMANN. The most of these railroads are bankrupt as a matter of fact. Nearly every one of them is mortgaged to American or European mortgagees, and if these parties are required to look to the railroad corporations it is very evident that they will never get a dollar of their money, no matter what steps they may take in the courts.

Mr. PICKLER. Even by the inauguration of a lawsuit that would last them a lifetime.

Mr. HERMANN. To say nothing of the expense and the perpetual trouble and vexation that they would have to incur in endeavoring to enforce their rights.

Mr. COX. But the titles are based on the patents from the Government of the United States to the railroad companies, I understand.

Mr. HERMANN. That is true to a large extent. Many persons, of course, have made their purchases and are now occupying lands where the patents have not yet issued. But I am selecting for my illustration the case of those parties who are holding lands under titles from the railroad company, land to which the company is entitled by solemn patents of the United States, in order to point out the extreme injustice of this bill; and I particularly insist that the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands should at least have opened his heart to that class of individuals.

Mr. BYNUM. Do you know the proportion of lands that have been thus patented?

Mr. HERMANN. I regret to say that I am unable to state exactly. I do not know what the amount patented will be when segregated from the whole land specified in the original grant.

But now in further answer to my friend from Tennessee, I have in my hand a statement from the Land Office issued on the 11th day of June of this year; and it must be conceded that President Cleveland obtained great credit for his watchfulness of the public land interests of the United States (he was undoubtedly given this credit by his party in his former Administration), and I find that under this (his) Administration on the 11th day of June last 152,409 acres of land were patented, outside of the limit beyond which the railroad company was required to complete the road by the terms of the granting act.

Then to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company on the 17th day of last May patents were issued by this Administration for 479,219 acres of land, and the patents have been placed on record in the county where the lands are situated.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Most of that was in my own county.

Mr. HERMANN. I believe so. It was in the Spokane district.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I will bring that out in some remarks I desire to make on another matter.

Mr. HERMANN. So my friend will perceive how unjustly these provisions of the bill will bear upon a large proportion of the landholders and occupiers of land on the Pacific railroads, and in many other portions of the West; and it is particularly in their behalf, and to avoid what I believe to be the wrongs that this bill will inflict upon them, that I appeal to you to-day.

I know the circumstances under which many acquired their titles, the large areas of dense timber lands for milling purposes, the vast areas of desert grass lands for sheep-raising purposes; how it was necessary in all these cases for them to have large bodies of land, as otherwise they could not have accomplished the purposes in which they were engaged. They acted in the utmost good faith, and all this time the Government was standing idly by with its arms folded, and knowing of these acts on the part of the railroad company, extending its road mile by mile, over mountain and desert plain, through the tunnels and down the gorges, in the storm as well as in sunshine, until hundreds of miles became thousands, and still the construction continued far westward and beyond the period of time limited in the granting act, and yet no act of forfeiture whatever passed this body.

And now in answer to the proposition of law made a few moments ago by our amiable friend from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER], I want to say that the Supreme Court has recently passed upon some of these important questions, which the gentleman said he did not know whether that highest tribunal had yet passed upon. I submitted to him a case similar to that of nearly all of these land grants, where, for instance, the Government of the United States had made a land grant to a State for the purpose of building a railroad, and in the grant had limited the completion of that road to ten years, and a further clause provided that at the end of that period any land unsold thereafter should revert to the State.

Now, there was an express condition of reversion made a part and parcel of the act, which the company took with its eyes open when it commenced to invest its capital in the construction of this road. The road was not completed at the expiration of the ten years. It was completed after. But in the interim some very valuable timber and timber lands were sold, and the Supreme Court of the United States decided that the company acquired a valid title. That the grant was by its words a grant in præsenti—and that their acts, although out of time, were protected until a legislative declaration of forfeiture by this body.

That was the proposition, and in order that there may be no question about it I will refer to the decision itself. It is found in 146 United States Reports, page 592. In that case the land had been granted to the State of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of a railroad. The language of that grant was like the language in these grants now under consideration: "That there be, and is hereby, granted," are the granting words.

Now, if gentlemen will refer to any of these land grants, particularly the grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, you will find that the granting clause is very similar. For instance, in that grant are these words:

And be it further enacted, That there be, and hereby is, granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, etc., every alternate section of public land not mineral—

And so forth. So that you will see the enacting clause to be precisely similar to that in this case which is now commented upon by the Supreme Court—

That there be, and is, hereby granted.

Says the court:

A further provision was that if the road be not completed within ten years, "no further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States."

Now, there is an express inhibition, a positive condition:

No further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States.

Now, the illustration with the Northern Pacific grant is, that that company went on after the time provided for the completion of the road. They did complete the road, and that completion was certified to the Government. In the meanwhile the railroad company went on and sold land, but if the position taken by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOATNER] is good law, then those lands would revert back after the period limited for completion of the road to the Government of the United But, says Mr. Justice Brewer, delivering the opinion of the court:

The railroad was not completed within the time specified. Thereafter timber was cut and removed from these lands, and the question for consideration was as to the ownership of that timber. It was held that the timber was the property of the State; that by the grant title to the land passed to the State upon the location of the route, and that though the road was not completed within the time specified, and though there was the provision that the unsold land should revert, yet the title still remained in the State, held under a condition subsequent and held until the Government should take some steps to assert a forfeiture.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. HERMANN. Yes.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The effect of that decision is that the title to that timber was in the State, as between everybody except the Government of the United States.

Mr. HERMANN. The State was the grantee under the act.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The State was the grantee under the act.

Mr. HERMANN. This land grant was made to the State for the express purpose of building that particular road. The road was to be built within a certain prescribed time, and if not built within that time, these lands should revert. Revert to whom?

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Revert to the United States.

Mr. HERMANN. Back to the United States; but the Supreme Court held that those lands did not revert.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Begging the pardon of the gentleman, the decision says no such thing.

Mr. HERMANN. And they go still further and hold that until a legislative declaration of forfeiture by this body, that that company, or the State itself if the right was in the hands of the State, could go on and make further sales of those lands.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. There is not a word in that decision against the proposition that the Government of the United States might interfere and recover the land and the timber itself that grew on the land, but the court in express terms say that there is a grant with a condition subsequent; that no one can take advantage of that decision except the grantor, and that as between all the world except the grantor the title remained in the grantee. But when the grantor saw proper to come forward and enforce the proper conditions of the grant, there was nothing to prevent it.

Mr. HERMANN. My friend can see the absurdity of that from this one thing——

Mr. COBB of Alabama. The decision says so.

Mr. HERMANN. I construe the decision exactly opposite to what the gentleman does; and how absurd it would be, if the grantee himself had a good title, as the gentleman seems to admit that he had——

Mr. COBB of Alabama. No; I do not.

Mr. HERMANN. You seem to admit that the grantee had a title.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. He had a title, subject to forfeiture.

Mr. HERMANN. If the grantee had a title, he could convey it to somebody else.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. He had a title subject to forfeiture, and nobody can enforce that forfeiture except the Government of the United States.

Mr. HERMANN. But the Supreme Court held that there shall be no reverter, even as to sales made after the time limited, until after a legislative declaration of forfeiture by this body.

Mr. COX. A declaration of forfeiture first?

Mr. HERMANN. The point that I am trying to make clear to my friend is that only in the event of forfeiture will the company be prevented from making further sales which shall be valid.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. If you will allow me——

Mr. HERMANN. The forfeiture is a limitation upon the act of the State.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Now, if you will allow me——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COBB of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, my only purpose in entering this debate is to call attention of the committee to the misconstruction put upon the decision last read by the gentleman from Oregon. This decision grew out of these circumstances. The United States granted to the State of Wisconsin a certain number of acres of land under conditions. The conditions were that these lands were to be sold from time to time, as a certain number of miles, 20 I believe, of a certain railroad were completed.

That the State might go on and sell a certain number of acres of the land, which sale was to be good and valid when 20 miles of railroad were completed. It might then make another like sale, and so on. The act further provided that unless the road was completed within ten years the sales of land should cease, and the land not sold should revert to the Government.
